SINCE our last notice this wonderfully gifted young performer has given three more Pianoforte Recitals at the Princes' Hall—namely, on March 28 and the 11th and 21st ult. On each occasion there has been an overflowing audience, though the programmes have been mainly formed of the same pieces, repeated again and again. This may be regarded as an error of judgment, for it cannot be due to any restriction in the little pianist's répertoire. If he were only able to play a small number of compositions, his rendering of these might be marked by mechanical exactitude, but by no higher qualities. So far from this being the case, Hegner's performances are chiefly remarkable for their intellectuality, or perhaps it would be more correct to say, their spirituality. When he trips along the platform and seats himself at the keyboard, there is nothing to distinguish him from other lads of his own age. But the instant he begins to play he seems transformed into another being. Perfect absorption in the work of the moment, and extraordinarily keen perception of a composer's meaning, and determination to impress that meaning on his audience, are among the highest qualities of a pianist's art; and these Otto Hegner already possesses to a degree little short of miraculous, taking his age into consideration. Herein lies his undoubted superiority to Josef Hofmann; the latter evinces the highest form of talent, but Hegner possesses something beyond, that mysterious gift which we term genius, and which can never be acquired by the most unremitting industry and perseverance. Among the most remarkable performances of the boy at his recent Recitals must be numbered those of Mozart's rarely heard Variations in G on an Air of Gluck's, "Unser dummer Pöbel meint"; Beethoven's Sonata in B flat (Op. 22), Mendelssohn's Rondo Capriccioso, Chopin's Etude in A flat, and Liszt's Transcription of Wagner's Spinnerlied. On the 30th ult. he was announced to give an Orchestral Concert at St. James's Hall, at which he was to interpret Beethoven's Concerto in C (No. 1) and Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor (Op. 22). This occurred, of course, too late for notice in our present issue.

MISS WINIFRED ROBINSON'S CONCERT.

THE past month will be remembered by the number of youthful executants who have put forward their claims to notice, and not one of them has done so in a more legitimate manner than Miss Winifred Robinson, the young violinist, who gave a Concert at the Princes' Hall on the afternoon of the 17th ult. Miss Robinson was a student at the Royal Academy of Music, and was placed under Mr. Sainton, who succeeded in so rapidly developing her natural gifts that she was allowed to appear on the Concert platform when still a mere child. Since that time she has diligently pursued her studies, and may now claim to rank as an artist, though she has still something to acquire. She provided a capital programme at her Concert, which, in consequence, was exceedingly well attended. The violin solos were Bach's Chaconne, the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Concerto, and minor pieces by Svendsen and Ries. All of these were rendered in a very able manner, but Miss Robinson's playing was more noteworthy for technical excellence than fine expression. Her tone is fairly powerful, and of good quality. She phrases neatly and her intonation is almost always just. All that is needed to secure her unqualified approbation is the cultivation of a warmer style. The violin is the least mechanical of all instruments, and perfect technique is far from being all that is essential in the equipment of a solo performer. The Concert began with Raff's Trio in C minor (Op. 102), in which Miss Robinson was joined by Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. C. H. Allen Gill, and ended with Grieg's Sonata in F (Op. 8), for pianoforte and violin. The trio is a beautiful work and should be heard more frequently than it is. Miss Eleanor Ries contributed two charming little songs, entitled "A Contrast" and "A Spring Song," by Dr. Hubert Parry.

MISS AND MASTER BAUER'S CONCERT.

It should be stated, to the credit of the clever Bauer family of youthful performers, that their appearances in public are not due to any desire to take advantage of the present craze for prodigies. On the contrary, they were first in the field, having given a series of Concerts at the Portman Rooms during the winter before last, months before the star of Josef Hofmann rose above the horizon. Since that time the young people have steadily improved, as was proved at their Musical Evening at the Princes' Hall, on the 17th ult. Neither Miss Ethel nor Master Harold Bauer has any claim to rank as a juvenile "prodigy." The brother and sister are simply talented students who have cultivated their natural gifts with so much assiduity that they have each attained a degree of proficiency unusual at their age. Master Bauer is an efficient pianist, but his ability chiefly displays itself on the violin, and on this occasion he showed remarkable feeling for expression in the favourite Adagio from Spohr's Ninth Concerto, and equal technical skill in an "Air Varié," by Vieuxtemps. Miss Bauer's rendering of Schumann's Carnival was full of spirit, though at times she seemed flurried, and some false notes were the result. She was heard to greater advantage in Grieg's Ballade in G minor (Op. 24). The programme likewise contained Bach's Trio in C, for two violins and pianoforte, in which Miss Winifred Bauer, a younger sister, took part, and Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata. Miss Marguerite Hall sang Schubert's "Die junge Nonne" and two of Kjerulf's Lieder.

THE STROLLING PLAYERS.

THE Concerts of this vigorous Amateur Association are generally interesting, and that of Saturday, the 21st ult., formed no exception to the rule. Mr. Norfolk Megone, the Society's Conductor, made his re-appearance after his visit to America, and was warmly received by his forces and the crowded audience. Sterndale Bennett's Overture "The Wood Nymphs" exhibited the orchestra to much advantage, and the Prelude to Max Bruch's "Lorelei" was also well played; but Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony was a somewhat too severe test, and it cannot be said that the Strollers came through it scathless. It might be said that comparisons with professional executants are unfair, but the opportunity for making them should not be permitted to arise. There are scores of Symphonies by Haydn and Mozart, and many neglected works of merit by other composers, quite within the means of amateur players, who would render a service to music by reviving them. The most prominent item in the second part of the present programme was a showy and effective suite de ballet, by Mr. Widor, entitled, "La Korrigane." A Cuban violinist of colour, the Chevalier B. de S'alas, displayed more than ordinary executive ability in pieces by Ernst, Raff, and Wieniawski. The vocalists were Miss Liza Lehmann and Herr Niemann.

ENGLISH MUSIC IN AMERICA.

MR. COWEN'S Dramatic Oratorio was produced by the Boylston Club at Boston, U.S.A., on March 7, and created an excellent impression. Without repeating too freely the details which are more or less familiar to English readers concerning the work, and which necessarily form a great part of the descriptions in the American papers, it may not be uninteresting to reproduce the opinions of the musical judges across the Atlantic concerning the work.

The Boston Gazette, of March 11, says:—

"On Wednesday evening the Boylston Club gave the first performance in this country of Frederic Cowen's dramatic oratorio 'Ruth,' a work of great force and of rare beauty in many respects. It does not fulfil the idea of oratorio as generally received, for the dramatic colour is so strong and the libretto is so constructed that but little change would be necessary to fit the oratorio for stage presentation as an opera. Mr. Osgood conducted with skill and precision, and is to be cordially praised for so strong and effective a first performance of so exacting a work. His thoughtful training was felt in every direction, and with the most commendable results. The work should be given again."

The Boston Daily Advertiser, of March 8, gives a notice of the performance a prominent place among musical matters:—

"Cowen's Cantata, 'Ruth,' formed the Concert of the Boylston Club last night. This work was composed for the Music Festival in Worcester, England, last September. The Cantata is of large dimensions, standing on the dividing line between this school and oratorio. Mr. Cowen has attempted considerable local colouring, at times introducing even a Hebrew melody, and in the Harvest Festival something very much akin to a ballet. The cantata has more to say than most works that England has given us in this field, and it stands emphatically above the eau sucrée style of sacred music evolved by Costa; it gives a new flavour, which is becoming a rather difficult thing to do in these days of musical over-production."

The Boston Courier says:—

"The first performance of Cowen's 'Ruth' was an event of considerable importance in the musical annals of the week, and the Music Hall was crowded in every part when the Boylston Club gave it on Wednesday, March 7th. It is a characteristic composition, with many touches of orchestral colour that proved Cowen a master in this field. Altogether the work impressed us as a very interesting one, possessing a characteristic and new flavour, and having many numbers of great intrinsic beauty."

The Boston Traveller, in an admirably written article, says of the Boylston Club's Concert:—

"The work chosen for midwinter performance this season was F. H. Cowen's 'Ruth,' written for the Festival of 1887 at Worcester, England, and not performed before in this country. The composer calls his work a dramatic oratorio. In 1884 Mr. Mackenzie launched 'The Rose of Sharon' with the same affix; as the character of both is more pastoral than dramatic, and as in neither does the composer fail to furnish a sympathetic musical setting for the text, we conclude that the treatment—namely, the form of the work, is suggested by the term 'dramatic oratorio.' In 'Ruth' Mr. Cowen has given his work much individuality, and added a very vital quality through the manner in which he has used this most picturesque and effective adjunct of the modern composer."

The Boston Daily Globe, of March 8, says:—

"If there be any one Old Testament story with which the excellent readers of The Globe are sure to be acquainted, it is that of 'Ruth.' An oratorio, based upon this story, was written for the English 'Three Choirs' Festival of last year by Frederic H. Cowen, and was produced successfully in September. The libretto, by Joseph Bennett, follows closely upon the Scriptural narrative. To this libretto Mr. Cowen has set music which redounds to his credit as a man eminent among English composers, and gives facile and constant pleasure to the listener. He is rich in gifts of melody."

The Boston Herald, of March 8, says:—

"The Boylston Club, under Mr. George L. Osgood's direction, put forward, as its novelty for the present season, at the Music Hall last evening, Frederic H. Cowen's dramatic oratorio of 'Ruth,' giving the first American performance of this work on this occasion. The oratorio was written for, and first heard at, the Festival of the Three Choirs at Worcester, England, last September, and it has gained an immediate popularity in England, this being the first oratorio put before the public by this composer. The Biblical story of 'Ruth' has been told in a connected and concise fashion in the book of the oratorio made by Joseph Bennett, and little but the words of the Scriptures have been made use of in the several scenes of the work. . . . Much of Mr. Cowen's best work has been done in the latter part of this scene, which ends with the dialogue between Ruth and Naomi upon the return of Ruth from the harvest field, the duet being continually interrupted by the more and more distant chorus of the retiring reapers, accompanied by a suggestion of the theme of 'Treat me not to leave thee.' Mr. Cowen's great skill in the use of modern orchestral resources is shown throughout the work, and the prominence given the orchestral score makes one of the most enjoyable features of the oratorio."

The Boston Home Journal is more enthusiastic:—

"A red letter day for the Boylston Club, and one of the most notable concerts that has been given in Boston for many years, were the gratifying results of Mr. George L. Osgood's enterprise in producing for the first time in this country, on Wednesday evening, the dramatic oratorio of 'Ruth,' by Frederic H. Cowen. At last one of the most gifted and progressive of modern composers, a pronounced radical withal, has boldly asserted his individuality in contradistinction to that of any one of the old masters; has caused a charmingly Oriental mode to off-set the numerous and well-known obstacles that a materialistic, not to say an atheistic, age would impose upon any composer of oratorio—an age that thus far has been persistently repulsive of any religious inspiration in the best sense—and has created an oratorio that is unmistakably an immortal masterpiece."

Of Mr. Cowen's Symphony in F, produced by Mr. Thomas in New York in the most brilliant and excellent style, the Tribune speaks in high terms:—

"The first and most interesting was F. H. Cowen's Symphony in F, the composer's fifth work in this department, which has not yet attained the dignity of publication, though deserving it quite as richly as the 'Scandinavian' and 'Welsh' Symphonies of the same composer. Mr. Cowen is easily the first among English symphonists, and his traits of melodiousness and lucidity of writing are recognisable in this latest work, which, so far as the contents go, is considerably more ambitious than its predecessor. The most noteworthy portion of the Symphony was the so-called 'free fantasia' part of the first movement, which is indeed most admirable music. A dainty and graceful intermezzo in moderate time (Allegretto quasi-Allegro), which takes the place of the customary Scherzo, evoked more enthusiasm than anything else on the programme."

The Musical Courier thus speaks:—

"The public rehearsal brought a programme of considerable excellence and of more than average interest on account of two novelties. Of these the first and opening number was the more important, it being the latest Symphony (No. 5, in F major, and yet in manuscript) of Frederic Cowen, undoubtedly one of the most talented composers constituting the modern English school."

The same authority, referring to the performance of Stanford's "Irish" Symphony by the Symphony Society, under the able direction of Mr. Damrosch, remarks:—

"The novelty was a pleasant Symphony by C. Villiers Stanford, the English composer, which bears the date April, 1887, and is numbered twenty-eight in the composer's list of works. This Symphony (published by Novello, Ewer and Co.) has been already given in part, two movements having been played in Brooklyn a short time ago. It is called the 'Irish,' and is in the key of F minor, with the conventional four movements, the Scherzo being the second number. Mr. Stanford is a young composer who is well schooled in his art, and uses orchestral material freely and without a particle of effort. There are abundant evidences of scholarship in every movement, the second, D minor, Allegro molto, being very cleverly constructed, and is, so to speak, a spiritualised jig, being rollicking and Irish in its character. The third movement, an Andante in three-four time, B flat major, opens with a gentle accompaniment figure for the harp, which supports a pensive melody for flutes and clarinets. This movement is the best as to form and development."

The following extracts from the Tribune, on the same subject, will also be read with interest:—

"The symphonic novelty which Mr. Damrosch chose for the fifth Concert of the Symphony Society proved on the hearing to be an interesting and pleasing work. Mr. C. Villiers Stanford, its composer, is one of the most serious, dignified, and ambitious of England's composers. He occupies himself almost exclusively with the higher forms of writing, and there can be no doubt of his musical scholarship or of his sincerity of aim. The Symphony in F is his twenty-eighth numbered work and was first given a public hearing at one of Herr Richter's Concerts in London last June. It is called by the composer an 'Irish Symphony,' and Irish it is in its melodic material and its spirit."

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

At the meeting on the 2nd ult. Mr. J. S. Shedlock, B.A., read a paper on the "Correspondence between Wagner and Liszt." Mr. Shedlock said that private letters of great men, who thoroughly understand and sympathise with each other, are of inestimable advantage to writers of biography; from them portraits true to the life can be drawn. They are of value to historians who seek to know the hidden causes of things. They are of value to friends and relations who treasure up every line written by those whom they respect and admire. Viewed in a different light, the giving of private letters to the world may be considered a disadvantage. They may be used for party purposes. In a correspondence of twenty years—such as this—men are apt to show many sides of their character, and it is easy to pick and choose so as to present a man either as all that is great and noble, or the reverse. Again, they may fall into the hands of readers who will merely glance at a page here and there, and form the most erroneous ideas. And in any case, there is always the danger of forgetting the private nature of the communications. Judging from outward appearances, nothing seemed more unlikely than that these two men were destined to become firm friends for more than forty years. For not only were their positions in life very different, but also their characters. Liszt appreciated society; Wagner loved solitude; Liszt was patient and hopeful; Wagner impatient and despairing; Liszt was most reasonable; Wagner often most unreasonable. The whole course of his life showed that Wagner was right when in 1848 he wrote to Liszt, "I cannot help myself." In 1849 Liszt writes, "Once for all, you may count me among your most zealous and devoted admirers. Near or far you may rely upon me; I am at your command." And Liszt was always as good as his word. Whenever Wagner wanted money or advice, Liszt was ever generous, practical, and helpful. The letters written during Wagner's stay in London are full of interest. Speaking of his Philharmonic engagement, he says, "I thought that I might so far win over the English to my cause as to render possible next year a first-rate German Opera Company for my works and under my direction." But writing later, he says, "I heartily regret being here, and shall never think of returning. I am in a wildly foreign element, and in a false position." Some fragments of "Lohengrin" were well received, but he is annoyed to think that men will form an opinion of his whole being from these fragments. The critics abuse him, the public is for the most part cold, his orchestra is only a clever machine. The "ridiculous" Mendelssohn cultus everywhere confronts him. He longs to be back in Switzerland. Wagner's opinions with regard to Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer are well known. Of Berlioz, both Wagner and Liszt thought highly; and the former says, "If I expect anything from anyone it is from Berlioz, but not by the way in which he attained to the tastelessness of his 'Faust' Symphony." In writing about Liszt's own compositions, he uses plenty of words, but they often seem intended to conceal rather than to reveal his thoughts. Liszt sends him some music written on the occasion of the celebration of Goethe's rooth birthday. Wagner perceives in it the claw of the lion, but, says he, "Let us see the whole lion." And there were many instances such as this in which he damns with faint praise—there is often a beating about the bush, a want of directness about his remarks. Liszt was often called upon to console his friend when despairing and smarting under a sense of disappointment. In answer to a wild letter from Wagner, he says: "Your greatness is the cause of your misery; both are irretrievably interwoven with one another, and must trouble and torture you until you allow them, sinking into faith, to disappear." Liszt cannot preach or explain it, but he will pray to God that He will enlighten Wagner's heart through His faith and His love; and then, in a few simple words, he points him to Christ, the only Saviour. Here we have, in a few words, Liszt's religious belief. Wagner acknowledges the good intentions shown, but reminds Liszt that the forms in which men seek to win consolation differ according to one's being, needs, or education. He, too, has a strong faith—but it is faith in the future of the human race. He believes in nothing else. Yet Liszt's noble life shows what a noble belief he must have had. About a year later, Wagner tells Liszt of a heavenly gift which has reached him in his solitude. This was Schopenhauer, the apostle of pessimism. Freedom from suffering is to be found by the renunciation of will. Wagner says, "Because you are religious you express your ideas differently, but I am convinced we are one in thought." What Liszt thought of Wagner's guide, philosopher, and friend may be gathered from a letter in which he speaks of him as "that old snarling poodle, Schopenhauer." The friendship of Liszt for Wagner is the golden thread running through the correspondence. It will serve to perpetuate his name when perhaps his Symphonic Poems may be forgotten. True friendships are not common. As the poet has written—

Nothing is commoner than the name,
Nothing rarer than the thing itself.

TRINITY COLLEGE.

THANKS to energetic management and a keen recognition of some of the musical requirements of the time, this institution has developed into a very prosperous concern. Its local examinations are attended by hundreds, we may say thousands, of aspirants in all parts of the country, and, we presume, its diplomas, which are not very hard to obtain, are found useful by young teachers as badges of, at any rate, moderate proficiency. As a teaching centre Trinity College also does a large amount of work, and evidence of the quality of the tuition it affords was given at an Orchestral Concert, under the direction of Mr. George Mount, at the Princes' Hall, on Monday, the 9th ult. It would, of course, be unreasonable to criticise the efforts of those who took part in a somewhat ambitious programme from the standpoint necessary in dealing with finished artists. Enough that, on the whole, the performers justified their appearance before a public audience, and if none of them rose above mediocrity, that cannot bring any blame on the College, as genius is born, not made. We should like to have given a word of encouragement to those pupils who were represented by compositions, but, unhappily, the annotator of the programme was first in the field. Thus, an Overture in F, by Mr. Frank Swinford, is described as a "clever and interesting work. . . . The instrumentation is throughout interesting and characteristic. . . . A spirited Coda fittingly closes a work of marked power and skill." Again, a song, by Mr. J. S. Ford, is said to be a "cleverly written song of the scena type, displaying constructive points of interest and a well-written accompaniment." An "Ave Maria," by Miss Marie Brooke, "has a sympathetic and expressive melody. . . . The entire composition displays artistic feeling and a marked talent." We shall not incur a charge of rashness by challenging any of these assertions; but the taste and the propriety of a school thus pronouncing judgment on its own students may be called in question, and there can scarcely be more than one answer.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SOME further advance has been made this month in the work of preparation for the Festival of August next, but the general form and composition of that event remain as described a month ago in the Orchestral Committee's Report. The choral rehearsals of Handel's "Saul" and Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" having now been completed, the choir has turned its attention, among other things, to Dr. Bridge's new Cantata "Callirhœ." Besides the artistic engagements previously announced, the festival managers have secured the services of Mr. Charles Banks and Mr. Henry Piercy, both Birmingham men, to support Mr. Lloyd in the principal tenor music, and, in addition to Mr. Santley and Signor Foli, the name of Mr. Brereton occurs in the list. Madame Lilian Nordica, whom it was proposed to retain for some of the principal soprano music, is unable to enter into any fresh engagements for August next, and her place will probably be filled by another well-known operatic artist.

The Midland Musical Society's performance of Gounod's Sacred Trilogy "The Redemption," on Good Friday, was so fully appreciated that, long before the time announced for the commencement of the Concert, the Town Hall was crammed in every part, and hundreds of people were reluctantly turned away from the doors after every available space in the auditorium had been utilised to the utmost. The performance as a whole was extremely creditable to all concerned. The choruses were sung throughout with vigour, crispness, and intelligent appreciation of the composer's meaning; and the band accompaniments were, for a body almost entirely consisting of amateur performers, rendered very creditably. Miss Clara Surgey, Miss Florence Bourne, Mr. A. Percy Taunton, Mr. George Harris, and Mr. Walter Vernon also rendered good service in the solos. The organ accompaniment of Mr. W. Astley Langston was a distinctive feature of the Concert, and Mr. H. M. Stevenson conducted with energy, ability, and sound discretion.

At the third and last Concert of the Musical Guild, on the 12th ult., the principal items were Beethoven's String Quartet (Op. 59, No. 1) and Rubinstein's Trio in B flat (Op. 52), for piano and strings. In the Quartet the playing of Messrs. T. M. and T. R. Abbott and E. W. and A. J. Priestley was noteworthy for the perfection of the ensemble and the evident care with which the work had been rehearsed. The final Allegro, based on a Russian melody, out of compliment presumably to Count Rasowskowsky, to whom the work is dedicated, was rendered with rare spirit and dash. In the Rubinstein Trio, which is a picturesque and striking, if not absolutely a great, work, Dr. Winn's masterly playing of the pianoforte part contributed largely to the effect of the performance, and the same artist greatly delighted the audience also by his finished rendering of Rubinstein's third Barcarole (Op. 50) and Chopin's Etude in C minor (Op. 25). Reinecke's fine Violin Suite (Op. 153) found a competent exponent in Mr. T. M. Abbott, whose brilliant execution of the Finale evoked great enthusiasm, and Mr. A. J. Priestley acquitted himself very creditably in an expressive Romance (Op. 5) of the Belgian violoncellist, Adolphe Fischer, and a Tarantella by Lachner. Miss Marie-Louise Rallo, who possesses a pure and cultured soprano voice, and sings with taste and expression, invested Haydn's Canzonet "Recollection" with much pathos, and was not wanting in the subdued passion appropriate to Gounod's amorous Berceuse "Quand tu chantes," the effect of which was not a little enhanced by Mr. Abbott's violin obbligato.

The so-called open Rehearsal of the Amateur Harmonic Association, which took place on the 17th ult., was really a formal public Concert of considerable musical interest. The executive resources comprised a choir of some seventy vocalists and a small but well balanced band, with Miss Lilian Mills, Miss Delia Atkins, Mr. A. Percy Taunton, and Mr. W. Ryder, vocalists; Mr. W. Astley Langston, conductor; and Mr. Ricketts, accompanist. The first part of the Concert was devoted to Heinrich Hofmann's picturesque and dramatic Cantata "Melusina," which has been previously given here in an imperfect form without the orchestral accompaniments. On the present occasion full justice was done to the work by both band and chorus, and some of the solos were rendered in a manner to elicit hearty applause. Miss Lilian Mills sang with great sweetness and dramatic fervour, and Mr. Taunton, as Count Raymond, was especially effective. The second part of the programme consisted of miscellaneous items.

The special musical feature of the month has been the visit of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, which commenced a fortnight's season at the Theatre Royal on Easter Monday. Although the composition of the company was much the same as on previous occasions, the visit was noteworthy for two or three reasons. In the first place, it was the occasion of the first performance in Birmingham of Meyerbeer's "Robert the Devil" and Victor Massé's "Galatea"; in the next place, it was the leave-taking here of one of Mr. Carl Rosa's most popular artists, Madame Marie Roze; and lastly, it was a more successful visit in a commercial sense than any which the company have paid here for some year or two past. No less than four representations of "Robert the Devil" were given in the course of the fortnight, and each of them to overflowing houses, the performance altogether being one of the most striking and effective which has been witnessed on the Birmingham stage. The vocal honours of the production were fairly shared by Miss Fanny Moody, Madame Georgina Burns, Mr. C. Manners, and Mr. Runcio, whilst great credit is due to Mr. Goossens for the admirable manner in which the band acquitted itself.

The closing Concert of Mr. Stockley's orchestral series, on the 19th ult., though not so rich in novelties as some of its predecessors, was nevertheless a very interesting and meritorious one, as was attested by the excellence of the attendance and the warmth of the applause bestowed upon it. The Overture was Mendelssohn's "Italian," which has always been a favourite with the local musical public, and has rarely been heard to more advantage than on this occasion. The ever popular "Pilgrims' March" produced its customary effect, and the masterly Saltarello furnished the band with opportunities which it turned to excellent account. The same composer's "Melusina" Overture, suggested by "a weak production" bearing the same title by Conradin Kreutzer, was rendered in a manner that brought out all its poetic charm, and Schubert's Overture "in the Italian style," which was played here for the first time in Birmingham, in spite of its occasional diffuseness, delighted all hearers by its melodic beauty and dainty scoring. The band was also heard to advantage in a couple of Transcriptions from Grieg, "Hjertesar" (Wounded heart) and "Varen" (Spring), full of Norwegian colouring, and the ever popular Overture to "William Tell," which was executed with great dash and spirit. Mr. J. T. Carrodus gave a masterly rendering of his master, Molique's, Violin Concerto (No. 5), after which he astonished his audience by a tour de force with Paganini's solo on one string, and delighted them in an arrangement of airs from "Lucia di Lammermoor." Mrs. Helen Trust and Mr. Charles Banks were the vocalists. The lady was not so successful in the air from Gounod's "Sapho" as in Grieg's "Solvejgs Lied," which falls more within her range. Mr. Banks, who replaced Mr. Lloyd at short notice, sang "Le mici bollenti," from "La Traviata," with much sweetness and pathos, and was very successful also in Barnby's song "Is it for me?" and "The Death of Nelson."

Miss Fanny Davies's pianoforte Recital took place on the 26th ult., too late for detailed notice.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ON Good Friday, at St. John's Episcopal Church, Haydn's Passion Music was sung by the choir. Mr. Haslehurst presided at the organ. The choir performed their task in a manner which reflected the greatest credit on themselves and their Conductor. On Easter Day all the services were fully choral and well rendered. Morning service, Stainer in E flat; Anthem, "The trumpet shall sound" and "Worthy is the Lamb," Handel. Afternoon Service, Foster in A; Anthem, "Christ is risen," Ouseley. Evening Anthem, "I know that my Redeemer liveth" and "Hallelujah" Chorus, Handel.

On the 2nd ult. Mr. Woolnoth, of Glasgow, assisted by Mr. W. T. Hoeck, Secretary of the Glasgow Society of Musicians, gave a highly interesting critical and analytical Lecture on "Lohengrin" to the Edinburgh Society of Musicians. The illustrations were given as pianoforte duets from an arrangement of "Lohengrin," by Albert Heintze. Mr. Otto Schweizer, Vice-President of the Society, occupied the chair. On the same date the Edinburgh Amateur Bach Club held a meeting, at which Mr. Franklin Petersen read a paper on the St. Matthew Passion. It was illustrated by Miss Duncan and Mr. Forrest (vocalists) and Mr. McEwen (pianist).

On the 4th ult. Mr. Waddell's Choir gave the usual annual Concert under the leadership of Mr. Millar Craig. Schumann's "Requiem" and "Song of the New Year" and Mendelssohn's "Loreley" were performed. Mrs. Millar Craig sang the part of Leonora in a praiseworthy style. Mr. T. Craig accompanied on the pianoforte in conjunction with a small string band and the organ, played by Mr. Lingard.

In aid of the debt of the Edinburgh Royal Blind Asylum, Madame Nordica gave her services on the 6th ult. Madame Agnes Hamilton (violin), Mr. Carl Hamilton (violin-cello), Messrs. Longmore and Meyrick (vocalists), and the St. Andrew's Amateur Orchestral Society also performed free of charge. Madame Nordica's solos were Roeder's "Love's Dream," Cliffe's "Far away from thee," and Sir Herbert Oakeley's "Sempres più t' amo." She was loudly applauded and responded by singing "Home, sweet home," and Scotch ballads. Madame Hamilton's rendering of Sarasate's "Spanish Dance" and Mr. Hamilton's solos were deservedly appreciated.

Mr. Arthur Edmunds gave an Evening Concert on the 9th ult. for the benefit of Miss Stirling's Homes for the Destitute. The programme, chiefly vocal, included Rubinstein's "The Angel" and "Wanderer's Night Song," Barnett's "The Bee," Otto Schweizer's "'Mid the lilies," sung by Mr. A. Edmunds' Ladies' Choir, and various solos and duets, sung by Miss Cameron, Miss Sanson, and Mr. A. Edmunds and Mr. Finlay. Miss Charlotte Gibson played "Auf Flügeln des Gesanges" (Mendelssohn-Liszt), Brahms's Rhapsody in B minor (Op. 79), Scarlatti's Sonata in A major, and a Ballade from Op. 22 by Otto Schweizer.

A performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," on the evening of the 5th, attracted a large congregation to the Cathedral of St. Mary. The orchestra consisted of thirty performers, under the leadership of Mr. Daly. Mr. Gledhill sang some tenor solos. Mr. Collinson, Organist of the Cathedral, conducted.

The last of the series of Chamber Concerts given by Herr Alfred Gallrein (violin-cello) took place in the Freemasons' Hall, on the 10th ult. Mr. Colin McKenzie (violin) and Mr. Collinson (pianist) assisted Mr. Gallrein. The vocalists were Mrs. Graham Moore, from Berlin, who was very successful in her rendering of "Und ob die Wolke," from Weber's "Freischütz," Schumann's "Devotion," and Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute"; and Mr. Taylor Blake, who sang Rubinstein's "Yearning" and Schubert's "Serenade."

On the evening of the 12th ult. Mr. Kirkhope's choir gave a Concert in the Freemasons' Hall. Mendelssohn's 43rd Psalm, Gounod's "Gallia," and Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter" were admirably performed, with the assistance of a small string band. Songs and madrigals and a violoncello solo by Herr Gallrein and a violin solo by Mr. Colin McKenzie were also given.

Mr. Waddell's Ladies' Orchestra gave a Concert on the 13th ult., in the Queen Street Hall, assisted by Mrs. Waddell (pianist), Miss Nellie McGregor and Mr. Dodds (violinists).

On the evening of the 19th ult. an Orchestral Concert was given in the Music Hall. The performers, numbering about sixty, consisted of local instrumentalists, aided by some from Glasgow and Dundee. They were led by Mr. Daly, with Mr. Carl Hamilton as Conductor. Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; Overtures to Mozart's "Zauberflöte," Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas," and Weber's "Oberon"; the Saltarello from A. C. Mackenzie's "Colomba," and Beethoven's Third Concerto, for pianoforte and orchestra, with Mr. Della Torre as pianist, were performed. Mr. Glencorse sang Schubert's "Wanderer" and "Thine is my heart," and received a well-earned recall. The great success of this Concert, from an artistic point of view, augurs well for Mr. Carl Hamilton's scheme of giving popular orchestral Concerts next season.

The Heckmann Quartet performed, on the evening of the 20th ult., Haydn's Quartet in E flat, Schumann's in A minor, besides selections of single movements from Quartets by Cherubini, Bazzini, Sgambati, and Svendsen. Mr. Albert Bach was the vocalist. On the following afternoon the same performers gave a Beethoven Concert, consisting of the third of the Rassoumowski Quartets (C major, Op. 59), the F minor (Op. 95), the A minor (Op. 132), and a solo by Herr Heckmann of the Adagio from the Violin Concerto. The Edinburgh Society of Musicians held a meeting in the evening. Mr. T. H. Collinson, Mus. Bac., read a paper on "Musical Education." It was followed by discussions on the various points given in the lecture. Mr. Edmunds, President of the Society, occupied the chair.

On Sunday evening, the 22nd ult., Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was performed in the Roman Catholic Church of the Sacred Heart, principally by members of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, who have announced a week's performance at the Lyceum.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A MEETING of guarantors to the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Concert scheme was held on the 4th ult., when a statement of income and expenditure for the past year was submitted. From this it appeared that the balance at the close of season 1886-7 was £1,021 1s., which sum was applied towards repayment of sums due to former guarantors. The income for season 1887-8 amounted to £5,992 18s. 11d., and the expenditure to £6,071 17s. 7d., showing a deficit of £78 18s. 8d. While there is reason for regret that there should be a deficit, there is one for congratulation that the shortcoming is so small; and, at the meeting referred to, it was enthusiastically resolved to go on with the scheme as before, and to make no call on the guarantors for the trifling deficiency, in the hope that next season will more than make it good.

The Choral Union was engaged during the past month in practising Dr. Mackenzie's music to the Exhibition Ode, also some other choral work, pending decision as to future programmes.

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. W. T. Hoeck, gave a Concert, on the 5th ult., in the Waterloo Rooms. The Society is making great progress, and the state of attainment may be judged when it is mentioned that the programme contained such selections as the Overture to Mozart's "Zauberflöte" and the Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra (No. 3), in C minor, by Beethoven; the performance of these and other important compositions quite justifying the ambition of the amateurs, among whom are several lady violinists.

The last of a series of four Chamber Concerts, by Mr. W. H. Cole and party, took place on the 5th ult., the programme comprising Sterndale Bennett's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Op. 26), the String Quartet of Mozart in F major (1790), and that of Rheinberger for pianoforte and strings in E flat (Op. 38).

The Pollokshields Musical Association, now in its fifteenth season, gave its second Concert of the year on the 9th ult., in the Dixon Hall, Crosshill. Stanford's Cantata "The Revenge" was the chief work presented, and, considering that there was only an accompaniment of pianoforte and harmonium, the performance of it was fairly effective. Mr. W. T. Hoeck conducted.

The Hillhead Musical Association, now well on in its teens and fairly prosperous, held its second private Concert on the 12th ult., in the Queen's Rooms. Van Bree's Cantata "St. Cecilia's Day" was the chief item in the programme. Mr. W. T. Hoeck conducted. The Southside Choral Society gave a Concert, in the National Hall, on the same date. Selections were sung from Haydn's "Creation," Handel's "Esther," and Mendelssohn's "Elijah." Mr. J. K. Findlay conducted.

A Concert of "Springtide music" was given by the Pollokshields Lyrical Society, under Mr. D. McColl, in the Crosshill Burgh Hall, on the 16th ult. The programme consisted principally of part-songs, all more or less relating to the season of Spring. The St. Cecilia Choral Society, which is in its first year only, gave a highly satisfactory performance of Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake," in the Queen's Rooms, on the night of the 19th ult., Mr. H. McNabb conducting.

The Kirkintilloch Musical Association, now in its second year, and numbering about eighty voices, gave a performance of portions of Handel's "Messiah," with miscellaneous selections, in St. David's Parish Church there, on the 3rd ult. Mr. J. T. Smith conducted, and there was a full string band, under the leadership of Mr. A. Robb. The Concert passed off very successfully.

A performance of Handel's "Samson" was given by the Paisley Choral Union on the 6th ult. Mr. J. Barr conducted, and Mr. W. H. Cole's band accompanied. The choral singing was marked by vigour and precision.

The violin competition in the Barbour scheme of Musical education in Paisley took place there on the 9th ult. Prizes were awarded to the successful competitors. This branch of a scheme which altogether seems well worthy of imitation is apparently in a peculiarly promising condition. Competitions also took place during the month in choral singing, theory, &c.

On March 31 a Lecture was given before the Glasgow Society of Musicians by Mr. J. C. Dibdin, a great-grandson of the famous Charles Dibdin, on "National Sea-songs"; and on the 7th ult. a Lecture was given by Mr. A. W. Young on "Mozart," Mr. W. H. Miller following on the 14th ult. with "Acoustical experiments relating to music."

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Philharmonic Society held their twelfth and last Concert on the 10th ult. They have during this year earned public appreciation by their presentation of several works which, if not absolute novelties, are sufficiently rare to claim special consideration. Hummel's celebrated Septet formed the chief feature at the last Concert. It was excellently performed by Messrs. Brossa, Dubruq, Paersch, Bernhardt, Vieuxtemps, Hoffmann, and Hallé. Brahms's Symphony (No. 4, in E minor) had not previously been heard at these Concerts, but carries with it the unmistakable stamp of originality, depth, and true workmanship. The other orchestral works comprised a Scherzo Pastorale (Op. 129), by Lachner, and the Overtures "In the Highlands" (Op. 7), Gade, and Auber's "Masaniello." The rendering of all these items by the band, under Mr. Hallé's direction, was careful, intelligent, and thorough. Madame Nordica supplied the solo vocal element and added distinctly to the fame which she has already earned in Liverpool. The chorus sang two part-songs with accuracy and judgment.

Amongst the many Amateur Orchestral Societies which have recently sprung into existence the Wirral Society and the Orpheus Orchestra hold prominent positions. The former gave a Concert at Birkenhead Town Hall, on the 13th ult., under the direction of their capable and genial Conductor, Mr. Ernst Schiever; and the Orpheus appeared at Liscard Hall, Cheshire, on the 9th ult., when Mr. John Forsyth conducted a fair reading of Haydn's "Imperial" Mass.

On the 23rd ult. a very successful Concert was given at the Town Hall, Birkenhead, in aid of the choir fund of St. Paul's Church, Argyle Street. The prominent feature of the performance was Van Bree's "St. Cecilia's Day," in which Madame Laura Howorth gave an excellent rendering of the solos, being well supported by the band and chorus. Mr. Edward Jones conducted.

The selection of Mr. F. H. Cowen as the new President of the Liverpool Musical Society is one which reflects credit upon a body constituted as it is of practical active musicians, whose association is an important factor in the promotion of musical interest in Liverpool. Mr. Cowen took the chair, for the first time, at the monthly meeting of the Society, held at the Bear's Paw on the evening of the 21st ult., and after referring in graceful terms to his predecessor, the late Sir George Macfarren, mentioned his forthcoming visit to the Antipodes, where, as Conductor of the musical arrangements at the Melbourne Exhibition, he hoped to do good service in the interests of the art.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

DURING April little musical excitement has been among us, except that the many small Choral Societies in the city and suburbs have been concluding their undertakings for the season, and exhibiting to their friends the results of their winter practice. The claims of these Associations upon the public scarcely could be over-estimated. They produce many works which, otherwise, we should have no chance of hearing, and, by the zealous perseverance of their members in the study of really good music, they kindle and spread a love of art where, under less favourable circumstances, it would hardly be awakened. Indeed, were it not that on all sides amateurs delight thus to associate for study and practice, one of the greatest of our educational aids would be missed, the feeding ground for our larger choirs would lie fallow, and the outlook would be even less satisfactory than it is, suggesting very grave misgivings for the future of choral music in this neighbourhood.

It is well and even necessary occasionally to survey our position in art as in commerce, and to weigh the helps and hindrances to progress as a business man examines his records of gains and losses. To note what is still wanting is a duty of the critic even more useful and imperative, albeit much less pleasant, than to record success. And in a city like Manchester—credited with musical enthusiasm, and in no way slow to assent to the justice of such a reputation—it is startling that we have no large choral body ever on the look-out for, and devoting itself to the production of, worthy novelties. Years ago there were several societies here, each giving its regular series of performances of Oratorios and Cantatas, and vying with each other in eager search after merit. Whatever may be the reasons—whether the usual blighting effect of a monopoly of the public ear, the whims of fashion or what-not—all those societies (of old so flourishing) instead of developing, as they naturally should, and with proper and earnest management would have done, gradually lost their hold upon their supporters, dwindled down, and finally succumbed.

The fate that befell the "Hargreaves" and its sister societies is now rapidly overtaking the "Gentlemen's Concerts," much stronger as that Institution was placed by the possession of a valuable building and site, upon which money could readily be raised to tide over immediate trouble. In the natural expansion of the public demands, the provision which fifty years ago sufficed could not healthily or possibly meet present wants. Fortunately in the latter, in which the supply was getting most glaringly deficient, private enterprise prompted the adequate development of our resources. Mr. Hallé—by unremitting tact, energy, and care—established here a series of Orchestral Concerts of unquestioned excellence, which, although we could not be said to originate, we have been, and are, proud and happy to support. In later years Mr. de Jong has, to some extent, emulated Mr. Hallé's spirited example; and, while ministering liberally to the tastes of those who delight in the simpler branches of music, and especially in song, has from time to time enlarged and improved his band as opportunity served, and enriched his programme with works of higher tone. Thus, and by the constant appearance here of soloists of eminence, the love of serious classical music has been spread, and the pianoforte and flute are no longer our only domestic instruments. Amateur performers are multiplying rapidly among the middle classes of society; and, were the means of culture brought within the reach of our poorer youths—which, possibly, may be done ere long—we might rest assured of the happy future of orchestral music in Manchester. Certainly, it is to be regretted that chamber music excites so little interest; and that Signor Risegari's excellent quartet party, disheartened by the unremunerated labour of so many seasons, has ceased (at any rate, for the present) to challenge public support. The Concert Hall is pre-eminently the place for concerted instrumental works of quiet character; as it certainly is not the place for powerful orchestral performances. By supplying music of various kinds, vocal and instrumental, suitable for their comfortable hall, and by fostering, as in various ways they easily could, the growth of the talent of the district, the directors might, even yet, utilise their resources and do something to atone for the supineness of their predecessors.

But, while congratulating ourselves that the love of instrumental music of the highest class is deepening, and has fair enjoyment, it is not well that our natural and ingrained fondness of concerted vocal music should be so neglected, that, during the whole of the past season, not one single new choral work has been produced in complete form. The small societies have been managed with praiseworthy spirit; but are, of course, unable to grapple with the expense of a professional band; and, at the larger undertakings, we have—with the single exception of the repetition of Sullivan's "Golden Legend"—not been allowed to hear one single, even comparatively, new work for combined choir and band. This ought not to be; and it is earnestly hoped that the ordering of such matters may be amended. Should some adventurous musician be bold enough to essay a more earnest policy he may, not improbably, be mulcted in a heavy penalty. But to remain in our present stagnant condition, with respect to choral music, ought to be impossible. With a long list of important oratorios still unheard we should be content to lay aside for a time the "Creation" and the "Stabat Mater," and even to celebrate Christmas without the stereotyped performances of "The Messiah." If our acknowledged and loyally supported musical leaders will not recognise the necessity of pursuing a more liberal policy in such matters, they must not complain should some outsider be invited to come in and supply their neglect.

MUSIC IN MONMOUTHSHIRE AND SOUTH WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

AN Eisteddfod was held on Easter Monday at Abergavenny, under the presidency of Mr. T. P. Price, M.P. For the chief prize of £70 two choirs competed—viz., Rhymney and Pontttoy (Conductor, Mr. J. Price) and the Abergavenny Choir (Mr. E. Stephens). The former were deemed the winners, but as they had not acquitted themselves in the best possible style, they were awarded £50 only, and of the balance £10 was given as a second prize to the local choir. For a prize of £20 six choirs entered. Rhymney was successful in this contest also, the other choirs being Newbridge United, Tredegar United, Mountain Ash Harmonic, Ebbw Vale Glee and Madrigal Society, and Abergavenny Philharmonic Society. Mr. Stephens and party, of Abergavenny, received the prize of five guineas for their rendering of Mornington's glee "Here in cool grot." I regret to say a disorderly scene occurred in connection with the competition for the prize of £10 between choirs of male voices. The first seven choirs had sung, and the Abergavenny Minstrels took up a position on the platform to sing, when cries were raised, which continued for over a quarter of an hour. It was afterwards explained that the whole of the choirs present must compete, or the prize could not be awarded. The choir then was allowed to sing, but little attention was given to their efforts. The choir of Mountain Ash took the prize.

At the Eisteddfod at Neath on the same day, for the prize of £50, the Dowlais Choir (led by Mr. J. Davies) was successful, and the Conductor received a gold medal. In the second choral competition the prize of £10 (offered by the president) was won by the Skewen Tabernacle Choir. The same choir was successful in another competition for a prize of five guineas. In the drum and fife competition, two bands competed—viz., Llansamlet (Swansea) and Neath Institute—the prize going to the latter. Several interesting solo competitions also took place.

The Mayor of Swansea presided at the Swansea Eisteddfod on Easter Monday. The adjudicators were Mr. J. North (Huddersfield), Mr. R. C. Jenkins (Llanely), and Mr. T. Price (Merthyr). There were several minor competitions, which excited considerable attention.

At the Treorkey Eisteddfod there was a very large attendance; Mr. Cummings (London) was the adjudicator. In a brass band contest (prize £8) two local bands competed, that from Treherbert being adjudicated the winner. The prize of £60 was won by the Blaenycwm Choir.

At Cwmmaman, in Carmarthenshire, an Eisteddfod was held also on Easter Monday. The musical adjudicator was Mr. J. Thomas. The chief choral prize of £10 was divided between the New Bethel and the Bethesda Choirs (consisting of local vocalists), and the Conductors were also presented with chairs.

An Eisteddfod was held at Aberayron, with Mr. W. T. Rees as adjudicator, also on Easter Monday. The president was the Rev. D. Griffiths, Aberavon, and the Conductor, Mr. W. Abraham, M.P. The prize of £30 was divided between the Aberavon Tabernacle Choir and the Taibach Choir. Eisteddfodau have also been held at St. Clear's, Glynogwr, Llanddwi, Trehafod (Rhondda), Llantwit, Vardre, Nealaw, and other places.

On the 5th ult. a popular Concert was given at Andrew's Large Hall, Penarth, under the auspices of the Penarth Musical Society. Several effective part-songs were rendered by the members of the Society. The vocalists were Miss Emily Squire, Miss Astle, Miss Handel, Mr. George Reynolds, Mrs. Coleman, and Mr. T. Rees. Miss Zette Handel played an excellent violin solo. The accompanist was Miss B. Ingram, and Mr. J. E. Deacon was Conductor. Some recitations were given by Mr. G. Beetlestone.

The Merthyr Orpheus Society have given further performances of "Blodwen," an opera by Dr. Parry, Swansea, at the Drill Hall, Merthyr.

The Huddersfield Glee Society have given Concerts at Swansea, Cardiff, and Aberdare. It is proposed to hold a festival of Welsh choirs at Llandaff Cathedral in the summer.

The Subscription Concert of the Newport Amateur Orchestral Society, at the Albert Hall, Newport, on the 10th ult., gave general satisfaction. The Conductor was Mr. B. Newman, and excellent assistance was rendered by the Philharmonic Society. The great feature of the evening was the singing of Miss Alice Gomes; additional interest was involved in the proceedings by the knowledge that this was probably the last time the fair singer would be heard in the provinces before she leaves for India.

On the 21st ult. an Eisteddfod was held at Pontardulais, in aid of the Hope Chapel Organ Fund. Four choirs competed for the prize of £10, offered for the best rendering of "The Lord reigneth." The Bryn United Choir was successful, and the Conductor, Mr. D. Jeffreys, received a chair. The same choir took the prize offered for the best performance of "Hosannah in the Highest." There was a Concert in the evening.

An effort is being made to establish a "National Society of Musicians." In furtherance of the object a meeting was held at Merthyr, on the 21st ult., when it was decided to form a local branch.

On Friday in Easter week the Crickhowel Philharmonic Society gave an excellent rendering of Cowen's Cantata "The Rose Maiden," with pianoforte, harmonium, and string accompaniment. The soloists were Miss Jones Morewood and Mr. W. Morgan, the contralto and baritone parts being undertaken by members of the Society. This Society has been in existence upwards of seven years and during this time has brought the following works before appreciative audiences: Macfarren's "May Day," Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," Gaul's "Ruth," Handel's "Acis and Galatea," Farmer's "Christ and His Soldiers." Mr. T. Davies has trained and conducted the Society for this period.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

AN unusually long winter season has musically, though not meteorologically, almost drawn to an end. It has not been certainly a very brilliant one, and the Concerts have been more remarkable for their number than for their artistic importance, and if a chronicle of the various entertainments might prove a lengthy, tedious, and useless work, it will not be uninteresting to take a rapid and short survey of the most prominent features of these last months.

There is nothing to speak of in the theatrical world. The hopes that had been founded on Salvayre's "La dame de Monsoreau," produced at the Opéra, have not been fulfilled in the least; the work failed to please the public and to interest the musicians, so that after a short, sickly life it died away and is already entirely forgotten. Mr. Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys" has been daily expected to come out at the Opéra Comique, but, agreeably to the approved Parisian custom, it has not yet appeared, and though the troupe is said to be very busy with rehearsals, perhaps this new opera will not be produced until some time in May. Lalo is undoubtedly one of the best French composers, and if at times his compositions are somewhat dry, yet in nobleness of conception and musicianship he is second to none, therefore we may entertain great expectations for the première—that is, if inadequate interpretation does not stand in the way. Though performed in Brussels, we must reckon Mr. Godard's new opera "Jocelyn" amongst recent French performances. Criticism, especially of the periodicals fighting for the cause of musical drama versus opera, has been bitterly against the composer, but the public of Brussels has sided with the young French musician, and "Jocelyn" scored a decided and, in our opinion, a well deserved success. So far there is no opening for "Jocelyn" in Paris. Mr. Paravey, of the Opéra Comique, has commissioned Godard to write a new opera, "Ruy Blas," which is to be produced in November next, and not until after that date will "Jocelyn" be put in rehearsal. We firmly believe that the Parisian public cannot fail to appreciate the beauty of the score, one, in our opinion, of the most remarkable that have been of late written by any French or foreign composer.

Apart from the theatrical performances, four Societies gave periodically orchestral Concerts—that is, we had the Conservatoire Concerts, under the conductorship of Mr. Garçin; the Lamoureux Concerts, under the conductorship of Lamoureux; the Colonne Concerts, and the Concerts at the Château d'Eau, respectively conducted by Colonne and Montardon. Of these four series, that of Mr. Lamoureux takes the lead; better performances we have seldom heard. Full justice is done to every style of modern and classic composition. The programmes are chiefly devoted to the works of Wagner, vocal and instrumental, and the opportunity thus afforded by him of hearing faultless interpretations of the best inspirations of the great master mitigates the absurdity of Parisian theatres not yet being allowed to produce even the most popular and universally accepted operas of Wagner. The Concerts of the Conservatoire have, as it is well known, a more classical character. Beethoven forms still their basis, and novelties are introduced with a caution amounting almost to panic. Mr. Garçin is said to be a skilled musician, but he did not set up as a conductor until very few years ago, and therefore, as yet, he lacks that decision and steadiness which only long practice can give to the most naturally gifted of men. Mr. Colonne's Concerts, though not so orthodox as those of the Conservatoire, or so accurate as Lamoureux's, have a decidedly more popular, national, and showy character. Modern French music, interpreted by familiar artists, is served out weekly to enthusiastic audiences, who take apparently more pleasure in the skill displayed by soloists, be they singers or players, than they exhibit taste in the intrinsic merits of their selections. It was, however, in this series of Concerts that two were devoted to the works of Tschaiakowsky, of which, if the artistic result has not been all the admirers of the Russian Maëstro might have wished, yet the performances did not fail to give an adequate idea of the worth of one of the most prominent amongst modern composers. Of Mr. Montardon we cannot as yet say much; he is doing good work, and, in due process of time, his performances will acquire greater perfection and a title to be ranked amongst, and to be as well patronised by the paying public, as the older institutions.

Good, regular Concerts of chamber music constitute one of the sad wants of musical life in the French capital. Séances de musique de chambre are not certainly scarce; they are advertised in Salle Erard, Salle Pleyel, Salle de la Société de Géographie, &c.; but not one comes up to a high artistic mark." This year Parisians owe something to their leading pianist, Mr. Breitner, for the attempt which has been made to start in earnest a Society of Chamber Music. "La Gallia," such is the name of the newly established Society, has, during the first year, given only eight Concerts, but it is intended to double the number of them at the least next year. The enterprise, started by Mr. Breitner from a purely artistic motive, we hear, has been encouraged by a certain financial success, such at least as to give hope that, in time, the "Gallia" will be able to be entirely self-supporting. Mr. Breitner has done his very best for the Institution, and we can say that his séances are equal to any of the most celebrated in Germany and England, both for the accuracy and perfection of interpretation and for the wise and tasteful selections of the programmes. Mr. Breitner has engaged the best local artists that money can procure, and he has had an invaluable artistic helper in Madame Breitner, who is one of the most fascinating violinists of the day. The "Kreutzer" Sonata rendered by Mr. and Madame Breitner, and a capital new Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte, by Godard, performed by Mr. Delsart and Mr. Breitner, were two performances that will be remembered for a long time. We are informed that Mr. and Mrs. Breitner intend paying a visit to London during the season; and although in the coming months Londoners will not be at a loss for good Concerts, yet Mr. Breitner may be sure that the excellence of his séances will easily secure to him a numerous and appreciative audience.

Pianists, especially in Salle Erard, have had it all their own way. Amongst excellent, good, tolerable, and bad, no day or evening was allowed to pass without a Recital. The very best were D'Albert, Paderewski, Essipoff, Grünfeld, Timanoff, De Greffe, who—if the number of tickets sold corresponded to the number of persons crowding the hall—must have all largely benefited by their visit to the French capital.

Foreigners spending the winter in Paris must, however, have found last season a decided improvement towards the appreciation of really good music in the taste of our lively neighbours, and it is to be hoped that in a very few years all the masterpieces of the purest and severest form of musical art will be as popular here as they now happily are in England and Germany.

MUSIC IN THE WEST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THOUGH there were but few Concerts during Lent, the season was marked in many of the Bristol churches by musical services of a special and suitable character, and this is a feature in the advance of music in this city which we are especially glad to notice, as it tends so undoubtedly to the improvement of church music. Choirs are regularly and systematically trained, and learn to give one work in a correct and careful manner, their knowledge and taste is in this way gradually increased and developed, and the Sunday services are consequently rendered with more interest and intelligence.

Two Concerts were given in Colston Hall on Good Friday, when Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and selections from "St. Paul" and "The Messiah" were performed.

On the next evening the Bristol Musical Association gave a miscellaneous Concert in the same building, and on Easter Monday a very interesting Concert of classical chamber music was given by Mr. F. T. Liebich, at the Victoria Rooms, Clifton. Mr. Liebich had engaged the services of Messrs. Carrodus and Stirn, and presided at the pianoforte himself. The programme was well chosen, and the Concert was a great musical success. The vocalist was Mr. Mansfield.

Miss Mary Lock gave the last of her series of four Popular Concerts of Chamber Music, on the 16th ult., at Victoria Rooms, Clifton. The executants were Mr. Hudson (violin), Mr. Gardner (viola), Mr. Pavey (violoncello), and Miss Lock (pianoforte). The programme included Mozart's Quartet in E flat and Mendelssohn's Quartet in C minor, for pianoforte and strings, and Grieg's Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin, which was given for the first time in Bristol, and was received most favourably, as indeed it deserved to be, both as to the composition and performance. Miss Lock's playing throughout the evening was very skilful and sympathetic. The vocalist was Madame George, who contributed three songs.

The Bristol Orpheus Glee Society gave two Concerts at Wells, on the 11th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. George Riseley, in aid of the fund for providing a recreation ground for the city, as a memorial of the Queen's Jubilee.

A Concert was given at the Hamilton Hall, Salisbury, on the 9th ult., by the Salisbury Cathedral Quartet. Messrs. J. A. Pitman (alto), Mr. W. Howgate (tenor), Mr. A. Crick and Mr. C. Kelsey (basses). These gentlemen were assisted by Mrs. Harcourt Coates, Mrs. Sly, and Mr. Frank Bartlett (solo violinist). A capital programme was performed, many of the items being re-demanded. Mr. Augustus Aylward was the Conductor.

The Sarum Choral Society gave Handel's Oratorio "Jephtha" at their first Concert of the season, at the Assembly Rooms, Salisbury, on the 11th ult., when there was a large audience. The principal vocalists were Madame Wilson-Osman, Miss Alice Fairman, Mr. T. Hanson, and Mr. Brereton. The band was led by Mr. Gamblin; the other principals being Mr. J. T. Calkin, Mr. A. A. Aylward, &c. Mr. C. F. South conducted.

On the 4th ult. a most successful Concert was given at Nether Wallop, Hants, in the Schoolroom. The services of the Salisbury Cathedral Quartet were engaged, and several glees and part-songs were sung; the performances of the Misses Cannon on the harp, violin, guitar, and pianoforte were received with the greatest enthusiasm.

Concerts, in which the Salisbury Cathedral Choir took part, were given at Winterbourne, Wilts, on the 5th, and at Breamore, Hants, on the 13th.

The Cheltenham Quartet Society, whose series of Classical Concerts have done so much towards developing a taste for high class music in the place, gave their last Concert for the season on the 11th ult., in the Rotunda. Two Quartets were performed—Beethoven's in B flat and Haydn's in D minor. Schumann's Quintet was also included in the programme, Miss Olga Néruda's exceptionally brilliant performance at the pianoforte evoking the greatest enthusiasm.

The Cirencester Choral Society gave its annual Concert at the Corn Hall, on the 12th ult., under the leadership of its able instructor and Conductor, Mr. Edward Brind. The works presented were Dr. Stainer's Cantata "The Daughter of Jairus," Mendelssohn's Motett "Hear my prayer," Spohr's Cantata "God, Thou art great" (all three works being new to Cirencester audiences), concluding with selections from Haydn's masterpiece the "Creation." The principal vocalists engaged were Miss Kate Fusselle, Madame de Lisle, Mr. Albert G. Bailey, and Mr. Thomas Woodward. The band was under Mr. Woodward's able and experienced leadership, and included several local amateur instrumentalists.

The eleventh annual Festival of the Western Counties' Musical Association, at the Victoria Hall, Exeter, on Thursday, the 12th ult., was in every way a success. The Oratorio of "The Ascension," by Dr. H. J. Edwards, of Barnstaple, the first work in the programme, was conducted by the composer. The solos were taken by Miss Anna Williams, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Lionel Kilby, and Mr. Dan Price. Miss Anna Williams sang the difficult soprano music with much clearness and power. Madame McKenzie's exquisitely sympathetic—not to say pathetic—rendering of her part evoked, as it deserved, a storm of applause. Mr. Kilby and Mr. Dan Price were also warmly applauded. The best efforts of the choir were in the choral "The strife is o'er" (a piece full of rich harmonies), and the melodious number "The Lord is full of compassion and mercy." The orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Michael Rice, did their work in the best possible manner. The chorus "Glory be to God on high" aptly concluded a performance which will not soon fade from the memories of those who had the good fortune to be present. With the opening notes of the chorus the audience rose en masse and remained standing till the last notes had died away. Mendelssohn's "Athalie" (conducted by Mr. D. J. Wood) formed the second part of the programme. In this work Miss Annie Roberts, Miss Emily Squire, and Miss Anna Williams sang the solo music in a most satisfactory manner. The reader was Mr. T. W. Hussey, and the organist Mr. E. M. Vinnicombe. At the evening Concert there was again a crowded assembly. The programme comprised Dr. C. V. Stanford's Cantata "The Revenge" and a miscellaneous selection. Both the programme and its performance gave the liveliest satisfaction, as was evidenced by the repeated hearty applause.

The Gloucester Choral Society's third and last Concert for the season was given on the 10th ult. at the Shire Hall, when Mendelssohn's "First Walpurgis Night" and a miscellaneous selection were performed. The soloists were Miss Mary Morgan, Mr. J. Dean Trotter, Mr. Watkin Mills, Miss Ellicott, and Miss Ethel Spiller (violinist). The band consisted of a tolerably complete orchestra of well-known local artists and amateurs, led by Mr. E. G. Woodward, and Mr. C. Lee Williams was Conductor. An item of considerable interest was a movement for strings composed by Mr. C. L. Williams, entitled "The Gloucester Minuet," written for and played on a quintet of instruments made in this city by a resident, Mr. C. King, well known as an amateur violoncello player, by Messrs. E. G. Woodward, J. E. Teague, J. W. Rippon, P. Woodward, and C. Teague. The four-part song "Radiant Sister," with orchestral accompaniment, composed by Miss Ellicott, was given; and the Concert concluded with a chorus, "Now by day's retiring lamp," one of the tuneful and effective productions of the late Sir Henry Bishop. Mr. G. H. Mills and Mr. Capener shared the pianoforte accompaniments.

The Plymouth Vocal Association achieved great things at its Spring Concert at the Guildhall, Plymouth, on the 8th ult., and fully justified the somewhat venturesome choice of Berlioz's "Faust" as the work to be performed. No labour had been spared in preparation, however, and under the able teaching of Mr. F. N. Löhr, the honorary Conductor, the choir rehearsals have gained in interest at each meeting, and the final result has been most satisfactory and encouraging. The band and chorus numbered 350, the former being led by Mr. Pardew, and largely augmented for this occasion. Mr. M. Rice led the violas, Mr. Lockwood was engaged as harpist, and Mr. C. Faull, the honorary Organist, was at the pianoforte. Madame Nordica, Mr. Charles Banks, and Mr. Henschel were engaged as the principal vocalists, but the latter gentleman was unable to come owing to the illness of his wife, and his place was very efficiently filled by Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. The work has only been given once before in the West, at the Bristol Festival of 1885, where, as at Plymouth, a crowded and influential audience assembled to hear it. The Plymouth Association deserve the highest praise for their spirited and combined efforts, and they sang with so much intelligence and real enjoyment that listening to them was rendered doubly interesting. The soloists acquitted themselves most excellently, and the same may be said for the band, all the quaint orchestral effects being fully realised. The applause at the end was long and hearty, and special congratulation was offered to Mr. Löhr, who had been instrumental in presenting so successful a Concert.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to have to announce the death of Mr. W. FITZHENRY, on the 13th ult., in his forty-second year. He was librarian in the firm of Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., and a teacher of the Violin Elementary Classes at the Birkbeck Institution, the South London Institute, and the City of London College, where he did much to encourage the love for music.

SIGNOR FEDERICI (FREDERICK BAKER), who was formerly known as a vocalist in London, and as an operatic singer throughout the country, but had more recently taken to acting, died quite suddenly at the Princess's Theatre, Melbourne, at the conclusion of a performance of Goethe's "Faust," in January last.

THE funeral of the late Walter Bache took place in the Hampstead Cemetery on the last day in March, in the presence of a large gathering of professional and personal friends. The coffin was conveyed from the residence of the deceased at Eastbourne Terrace, Paddington, to the Hampstead Cemetery, followed by a number of mourning and private carriages containing relatives and friends. The chief mourners were the two brothers and the two sisters of the deceased gentlemen—viz., Mr. Alfred Bache, the Rev. Kentish Bache, and the Misses Bache, together with Mrs. Alfred Bache, Mr. Russell Martineau, Mr. A. Higginson, Mrs. Edward Higginson, and Miss Martineau, relatives. The Royal Academy of Music, of which the deceased was a professor, was represented by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, the new Principal; Dr. Charles Steggall, Mr. Thomas Threlfall, Chairman of the Committee of Management, and Mr. Lamborn Cock, the Treasurer. Mr. Stanley Lucas represented the Royal Society of Musicians, and amongst others present were Mr. John Francis Barnett, Mr. Franklin Taylor, Mr. Hartvigson, Mr. Deichmann, Mr. Carl Armbruster, Mr. Eaton Fanning, Mr. W. Shakespeare, Mr. Littleton, Mr. Wiener, Mr. Ernest Ford, Mr. A. C. White, Mr. F. G. Edwards, Mr. Coburn, &c. The Rev. Dr. Sadler, of Rosslyn Hill Unitarian Chapel, Hampstead, officiated, and delivered an appropriate address. The coffin was laden with a large number of beautiful wreaths sent by various friends. The grave is in close proximity to those of Sir George Macfarren, Mr. Henry Smart, and Mr. Joseph Maas.

At the Royal Artillery Concert, which took place at Woolwich, on Wednesday, the 4th ult., an admirable programme was performed under the direction of Mr. L. Zavertal:—March (from the first Suite), by Lachner; a selection from "Mignon," by Ambroise Thomas; Allen Macbeth's charming Intermezzo, "Forget me not"; Sullivan's song, "The Lost Chord," arranged as a solo for cornet, and played by Sergeant S. Jenner; Liszt's "Ungarische" Rhapsodie (No. 4), presented for the first time by the band; the Overture "L'Etoile du Nord," by Meyerbeer, and the National Anthem were among the works given. One of the most interesting features of the Concert was a new Symphony in D minor, composed by the Conductor, and performed for the first time. Mr. Zavertal has before this time shown uncommon ability as a composer, but the Symphony is a masterpiece. It consists of four movements: an Allegro with a short introductory Andante, an Andante proper, a Presto and Trio, and a final Allegro con fuoco. The third movement—the Scherzo—is at once joyous and graceful, and the performance made a deep impression upon the audience. The power of writing melodiously is shown in all the movements, in the Andante especially, while everywhere the instrumentation is managed with consummate art. The performance was most satisfactory, and the composer was applauded most enthusiastically for his work, which is worthy of being heard in other places where clever and pleasing music is, and ought to be, acceptable.

At Walthamstow, on Tuesday, the 10th ult., the members of the St. Michael's Musical Union gave their second Concert of the season. There was a small orchestra, with Mr. H. G. Coldrey as leader. The first part commenced with Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March, which was followed by T. Mee Pattison's Cantata "May Day." The solos were sung by Mrs. A. W. Wilkinson, Mrs. G. W. Fry, Mrs. F. D. Coxall, and Messrs. E. Youngman and R. C. Pennington. Mrs. Coxall and Mr. Pennington sang the interpolated duet "Maying" (A. M. Smith), scored for the occasion by Mr. A. W. Wilkinson, Conductor of the Society. The principal feature of the second part was Anderton's Cantata "Wreck of the Hesperus," the soloists being Miss K. Horton, Messrs. J. Dowd and R. C. Pennington. The Rev. E. Ibbotson accompanied. In the miscellaneous part of the programme Gurlitt's "Marionette" Overture and Goodban's Romance "Nydia" were included. A selection from "Il Trovatore," arranged by Forberg for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, and some songs sung by Mrs. A. J. Hands and Mrs. F. D. Coxall were also given. Mr. J. Dowd sang Piatti's "Awake! awake!" with violoncello obbligato by Mr. E. R. Conkerton. Miss Ethel Mercer (late a pupil of Mr. Wilkinson) played an Air and Variations on the pianoforte, and the Concert concluded with a hearty rendering of Eaton Faning's "Vikings," with orchestral accompaniment. Mr. A. W. Wilkinson conducted.

THE Annual Concert and Re-union of Old Pupils was given on Friday, the 13th ult., at the Mary Datchelor School, Camberwell. The programme, which was performed by the students of the advanced classes, included songs from Misses Burch, Pierce, Henshaw, Whittall, Robinson, Kitching, and Ponn; and pianoforte pieces from Misses Wheaton, Marshall, Vallance, Carr, Crean, Cross, Ascough, Foster, Jarvis, Harrison, West, and Grace Keeble. A violin solo was contributed by the Professor, Miss Werge, and some of the students, under the direction of the able Singing Mistress, Miss Bessie Cox, sang some part-songs very effectively. Not the least successful feature of the evening were the two recitations from Shakespeare, in which Misses Harrison, Kuss, Llewellyn, Oxley, and Barrett gave evidences of high intelligence and careful training. Miss Mabel Harrison as Hamlet and Miss Lena Barrett as Gratiano (in the extract from "The Taming of the Shrew") deserve special commendation. During the interval the visitors were at liberty to inspect the bright and spacious class rooms, in four of which were exhibited some of the work of the art classes, a collection of paintings by the talented Art Mistress, Mrs. Thomas, and the school museum, which, though as yet in its infancy, is of no small dimensions, and contains many objects curious and instructive.

On Saturday evening, the 21st ult., the second Concert of the Tulse Hill Choral Society was given in Gresham Hall. The first portion of the programme was devoted to a performance of the "Daughter of Jairus," the solo vocalists being Madame Worrell, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. R. Poole. The rendering of some of the numbers gave promise of excellence, a result which is only to be expected under the guidance of such an energetic, painstaking, and able musician as the Conductor, Dr. Walmsley Little. Mr. W. Arundel Orchard and Mr. C. Jones presided respectively at the pianoforte and organ. The second part was devoted to a miscellaneous selection of vocal and instrumental music, in which the three soloists above-named were associated with Miss G. Harris, Miss Laura Malthouse, Miss C. Burditch, Miss Cutting (pianoforte), and Mr. T. E. Gatehouse (violin). One of the features of this part of the programme was a charming MS. Serenade, with violin obbligato, written and composed by Mr. Henry Guy. The Concert gave evident pleasure to the very large audience assembled, and on the whole the Society may be congratulated on its efforts.

MISS MINNIE KIRTON gave her sixth annual Concert on the 12th ult., in the large room attached to New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N. Miss Kirton, who was well received, gave with excellent taste and expression Pinsuti's "Rest to the weary," and, as an encore, "Home, sweet home"; also a new song by Mr. Lovett King, "Oft I love," well received and encored; she joined Mr. Harper Kearton in Nicolai's duet, "One word," and Mr. James Budd in the old humorous duet, "Where are you going to, my pretty maid?" Miss Constance Lardelli, Madame Riechelmann, and Mr. T. D. Fitzgerald also contributed to the programme "The Toreador's Song" (Bizet's "Carmen") and Behrend's "Daddy," in brilliant style, and fairly brought down the house. This vocalist should make a success beyond a merely local sphere. Mr. J. Budd sang Molloy's "The Lads in June," Mr. Val Marriott gave a violin solo, Mr. Albert Snow a violoncello solo, and pianoforte solos were well played by Signor Ducci and Mr. W. Wright.

ON Tuesday evening, the 24th ult., the Tufnell Park Choral Society gave an excellent performance of the Oratorio "St. Peter" (Benedict). The choristers distinguished themselves by meritorious efforts in the choral movements, and achieved a great success in "Praise ye the Lord," the magnificent finale of the first part. A quartet of principal singers rendered the recitatives and airs with ability. Miss Agnes Janson, in the contralto part, satisfied the most exacting of amateurs; Mr. Bridson, in the music of the title-part, has never been heard to greater advantage; Miss Bayler, a young soprano with a beautiful voice, excited the audience to enthusiasm; and Mr. Kent Sutton, by sound musicianship and true feeling, afforded assurances of becoming a most useful tenor in oratorio. With the aid of Mr. F. Lewis Thomas at the pianoforte, the stringed orchestra, comprising such players as Messrs. Halfpenny, W. H. Hann, Lewis Hann, W. C. Hann, and Ernest Carrodus, gave the instrumental music with capital effect. Conductor, Mr. W. Henry Thomas.

On the 16th ult. the Clapham Choral Society closed its season with an excellent performance of Sir George Macfarren's dramatic Cantata "The Lady of the Lake," under the conductorship of Mr. Walter Mackway. The soloists were Miss Kate Fusselle, Miss Blanche Murray, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Musgrave Tufnell, and Mr. Ben. H. Grove. Accompanists, Mr. Sidney H. Hann and Mr. J. Percy Baker. This Society has done much good work for choral singing in the South of London during the past season. Three Concerts have been given, including a Concert-Lecture by Mr. W. A. Barrett, the Society giving illustrations of madrigals and part-songs written between the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and Queen Victoria. At the conclusion of the Concert on the 16th ult. the Choir gave their Conductor, Mr. Walter Mackway, a testimonial in token of their appreciation of his efforts, which have met with so much success.

At the third Concert of the West London Male Voice Union at the Ladbroke Hall, on the 14th ult., the Conductor, Mr. Albert Reakes, was presented with a handsome ivory and silver bâton suitably inscribed. The programme was well selected, the only novelty being a part-song "The King's lullaby," by Ernest Lake (words by King Charles I.), which was encored, as were also several contributions by Messrs. Bryant and Bantock Pierpoint. Mr. Ernest Lake presided at the pianoforte. The same Society gave a somewhat similar programme at the People's Palace, on the 18th ult., before a very large and demonstrative audience; the soloists being Miss May Hallam, Mr. Charles Chilly, and Mr. Albert Reakes. Mr. Ernest Lake accompanied throughout, and Mr. Albert Reakes conducted with his usual care and success.

MR. G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Organist of St. George's, Camberwell, gave an Organ Recital in that church on the 15th ult. The programme consisted of compositions by Hesse, Sullivan, Beethoven, Elvey, Silas, and Smart, which were given throughout in excellent style. The vocalists were Miss Lydia Davis, R.A.M., and Mr. Frank Swinford. This was the eighth and last of the season's series. At St. Mark's, Walworth, Mr. Holmes also gave an Organ Recital on the 11th ult., when the programme comprised—Festal March (Smart), Fantasia on a Theme of Handel (Guilmant), the Colonial and Indian March (Holmes), and Andante from Violin Concerto (Mendelssohn). Miss Marion Holmes and Mr. C. Constanduros sang some vocal pieces. An offertory was made afterwards on behalf of the Organ Renovation Fund.

THE young pianist and composer, Alfredo Barili, a son of the late Ettore Barili, of Rome, Italy, and a nephew of the celebrated Adelina Patti, is spoken of as one of the rising composers of America. He was born in Florence, and was in his early youth considered a prodigy. At the age of ten he played the difficult "Lucia" Fantasia of Liszt in New York. In 1873 he went abroad and studied composition with Ferdinand Hiller at Cologne, and the pianoforte under F. Gernsheim, James Kwast, and afterwards, in Paris, with Theodore Ritter. Although as a pianist Mr. Barili possesses a brilliant style and a thoroughly musical touch, while his interpretations are always forcible and thoughtful, he now wisely devotes his attention to teaching and composition, having settled in Atlanta, Ga., since 1880, and where he has done no little in elevating the standard of music.

THE Woodside Park Musical Society terminated a very successful season on the 19th ult., with a performance of Sir George Macfarren's Cantata "The Lady of the Lake," at the Woodside Hall, North Finchley. The soloists were Miss Eveleen Carlton, Miss Damian, Mr. Percy Palmer, Mr. J. T. Hutchinson, Mr. T. R. Johnson, and Mr. A. L. Reynolds. The chorus sang well throughout, and were supported by an efficient orchestra, consisting of strings, wood-wind, and harp, the latter ably played by Miss Adelaide Arnold. Mrs. Williams presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. E. Halfpenny led the band. The Cantata was listened to by a large audience, whose frequent applause during the evening testified to their appreciation of the work. Mr. Alfred J. Dye conducted.

THE last of the afternoon Services of the fourth series, at St. Nicholas Cole-Abbey, was given on the 8th ult., the "Hymn of Praise," by Mendelssohn, being the work performed. A number of lectures have been given since January, 1887, by several distinguished clergymen. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," 95th Psalm, 13th Psalm, and "Hear my Prayer"; Spohr's "Calvary," "The Last Judgment," and "God, Thou art great"; Weber's Harvest Cantata; Sterndale Bennett's "The Woman of Samaria"; Gounod's "Gallia"; Dr. Stainer's "The Daughter of Jairus" and "St. Mary Magdalen"; S. S. Wesley's "The Wilderness," have been given during the same period, in addition to morning services and music sung in the evenings.

AT St. John's, Holborn, the "Crucifixion" was sung on the Wednesdays in Passion and Holy weeks, and on both occasions attracted large congregations. The solos, which were carefully and devotionally sung, were taken by Messrs. R. Sturt, E. Eyles, and G. Read. In the Hymns the choir and congregation sang alternately. The Rev. H. T. Coney was at the organ and Mr. C. J. Viner directed the choir. On Easter Day the Communion Office was sung to Stainer in A, the Anthem was "God hath appointed" (Tours), Stainer in B flat being used for the Evensong Canticles. A feature at the service on Easter Eve was the dedication by the Bishop of Brisbane of a very fine carved and gilded triptych which has just been presented to the Church.

ON the 17th ult. Mr. H. Dean, Organist of Holy Trinity, Stroud Green, gave a Concert in the Iron Room adjoining the Church. He was assisted by Miss Margaret Hoare, Miss Marie Middleton, Mr. Reginald Groome, Mr. Pelham Roof, the Stroud Green Orchestral Society (of which he is the Conductor), and a few professional friends. The programme included the Overture to "The Bohemian Girl," Sullivan's "Graceful Dance," Taubert's "Liebesliedchen," with oboe solo (Mr. Haynes); and a selection from "Faust." "The Lost Chord" (cornet solo by Mr. W. Short) completed the instrumental part of the programme. Miss M. Hoare, Miss Middleton, Mr. R. Groome, and Mr. Pelham Roof were the vocalists.

THE Civil Service Vocal Union gave an eminently successful Ladies' Concert in the Great Hall of Cannon Street Hotel, on Thursday evening, the 12th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. J. H. Maunders. Special mention may be made of the refined reading of Mr. W. G. Cusins's "Venetian Boat Song," and of the Conductor's spirited "Thor's War Song." A very cordial reception was accorded to a new Cantata, "The Festival" (Ballad of Haroun Al Raschid), composed by Dr. Bridge, who accompanied his work at the pianoforte. The principal soloists were Mr. Herbert Reeves, Mr. George Micklewood, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, Mr. H. W. Schartau, Mr. G. T. Miles (harp), and Mons. Victor Buziau (violin).

A CONCERT was given at St. James's Hall, on the 17th ult., in aid of the funds of the Postman's Rest and Convalescent Home, Brighton. The following ladies and gentlemen kindly volunteered their services: Madame Antoinette Sterling, Madame Minnie Gwynne, Miss Bertha Moore, Miss Eleanor Rees, Madame Berta Foresta, Madame Evans Warwick, Mr. F. Barrington Foote, Mr. Dalgety Henderson, Mr. Lucas Williams, Mr. H. J. Russell; pianoforte, Mr. Kuhe; violin, Miss Clara Titterton and Mr. T. Adamoroski; violoncello, Mr. Leo Stern. The Marquis de Leuville recited an original poem. Mr. F. R. Kinkeed acted as accompanist, and the band of the telegraph boys played some operatic selections.

ON the 12th ult. Mr. J. H. E. Ashworth, Organist of St. Margaret's, Wandsworth Common, gave his first Popular Concert in St. Andrew's Hall, Balham, at which he directed a very creditable performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony and Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overture. The orchestral parts were represented by two grand pianos and a large American organ. Mr. Ashworth, in his prospectus, deprecated any comparison with an orchestral performance, but sought, with such means as were at his disposal, "to make more familiar the finest instrumental works of the great musicians." Madame Ashworth, Madame Rich, and Mr. Ager Grover contributed some vocal pieces.

THE Christ Church, Streatham Hill, Choral Society brought its season to a successful close by a Concert on the 13th ult. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," Bennett's "May Queen," and a miscellaneous selection, the solos being rendered by members of the Society. Mr. John C. Ward conducted in his usual style, and contributed a solo on Wheatstone's concertina. Mr. A. Court gave an excellent rendering of a new song, "The Warrior's Farewell" (Clementine Ward). Miss Ward also met with a hearty reception for her singing of Paul Rodney's "Calvary" and Parker's "At my window." Miss Fitch presided at the pianoforte.

AN interesting Concert was given on the 3rd ult. at the Congregational Schoolroom, Lordship Lane, Wood Green. There was an orchestra of twenty performers, and a number of soloists, both vocal and instrumental. The orchestral performances included the Overture to "Le Nozze di Figaro," the Andante from Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, and a selection from Handel's "Samson." A distinct feature in the programme was the clever delivery of solo numbers by Miss May Sullens (pianoforte) and Master Kenneth Sullens (violin), aged seven and eight years respectively, which elicited well-deserved applause. Mr. Sullens was an able Conductor.

A VERY successful Concert was given in Enfield, at the Bycullah Athenæum, on the 11th ult., by the members of the Enfield Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. John C. Ward, when Callcott's Cantata "The Golden Harvest" was performed in a manner highly creditable to all concerned. Solos were given during the evening with great success by Mr. Henry Guy, Miss Cocks (violin), Mr. C. H. Allen Gill (violoncello), Mr. H. Stanley Hawley (pianoforte), and some members of the Society. The other items performed by the choir were the part-songs "When Allen-a-Dale went a-hunting" (Pearsall) and "You stole my love" (Macfarren).

MONS. EUGÈNE GIGOUT gave, on the 19th ult., a very successful Organ Recital at the City Temple. Among the chief items of the programme we may mention especially Mendelssohn's Sonata in F, Boellmann's Offertoire on Christmas Hymns, and Gigout's "Marche funèbre." Another Recital was given by the same artist on the 21st ult., at the Bow and Bromley Institute, where he played his Communion, Boëly's Piece in G minor, Dubois's Toccata, and Mendelssohn's Sonata in A; whilst he improvised in a very artistic manner on the "March of the Men of Harlech." Hearty applause greeted him after each piece.

ON the 17th ult. Mr. Charles Lawrence, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Organist and Choirmaster of St. Alban's Church, Streatham Park, gave his second Concert at the Schools, Mitcham Road, Streatham, in aid of the Organ Fund for St. Alban's Church. The programme included F. H. Cowen's Cantata "The Rose Maiden." The chorus, consisting of about fifty voices, sang with great precision. The soloists were Miss Annie Lawrence, Mrs. Turney, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Frank May. Mr. Hubert Hunt presided at the harmonium, and Miss Carr and Mr. Lawrence were the accompanists. The programme also included some part-songs and other vocal and instrumental music.

AT St. Barnabas', South Lambeth, during Evensong on Easter Day, Schubert's "Song of Miriam" was sung by the choir, reinforced by members of the Choral Society, assisted by an orchestra of eighteen performers. The Canticles were sung to Tours in F. Mr. Arthur Powell presided at the organ and Mr. Fred W. Lacy, Organist and Choirmaster of the church, conducted. After morning service the Vicar, the Rev. W. Walter Edwards, presented Mr. Lacey, on behalf of the clergy, churchwardens, and members of the choir and Choral Society, with a very handsome silver-mounted ebony bâton, in recognition of his services.

A VERY successful performance of Farmer's "Christ and His Soldiers" was given at the St. John-at-Hackney Grammar School, Clapton, on the 17th ult., in aid of the Bishop of Bedford's East London Church Fund. The choir boys of the school were assisted by the choir of St. Andrew Undershaft and other friends, and numbered over fifty voices. Miss Lavinia Walker and Mrs. Crossley were the soloists. Mrs. Wallis presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. H. Wait at the American organ. Mr. W. M. Wait (Organist, &c., at St. Andrew Undershaft, and Choirmaster at the Grammar School), conducted.

A CONCERT was given at Gresham Hall, Brixton, on Monday evening, the 23rd ult., in aid of the Choir Boys' Fund of St. Saviour's Church, Herne Hill Road. The first part of the programme was confined to sacred music, performed by Miss Patten, Miss Annie Wilson, Mr. Reginald Groome, Mr. R. F. Roberts, Mr. Harry Ward, Mr. Arthur Spittle (violin), Mr. Arthur Lake (organ), and Mr. Herbert Lake (pianoforte). The last-named gentleman, who is the Organist and Choirmaster at St. Saviour's, also conducted some choral music sung by the augmented choir of sixty voices.

DR. MACKENZIE has undertaken the duties of the Conductor of the Choral and Orchestral Classes at the Royal Academy of Music. This work in no way interferes with the labours required of the Principal, and his special knowledge and ability will be greatly to the advantage of the studies pursued by those classes. Dr. Mackenzie has also been unanimously elected Vice-President of the Glasgow Choral Union, and, among other honours recently conferred upon him, it may be mentioned that he has been made corresponding member of the Instituto Reale di Firenze, one of the most important Musical Societies in Italy.

THE St. Stephen's Choral Society, Clapham Park, gave a very successful Concert to a large and appreciative audience, on the 4th ult., at the Balham Baths. The programme included Van Bree's Cantata "St. Cecilia's Day," and a miscellaneous selection of part-songs, ballads, and instrumental music. The solos were sung by Miss Mary Beare and Mr. Donnell Balfie. Mr. A. E. Rowarth (violin), Mrs. Rowarth and Mr. Arnold Russell (pianoforte) rendered efficient service, and Miss Starkey was a most able accompanist. The Conductor was Mr. J. H. Olding, A.C.O.

MR. B. VINE WESTBROOK, F.C.O., gave a Recital on Tuesday, the 10th ult., on the new organ, built by Mr. W. Samuel, of Dalston, at All Saints' Church, Buxton Street, E. His programme included Mendelssohn's Sonata, No. 1, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C minor and the "Giant" Fugue, two movements from Handel's Sixth Organ Concerto, and the Introduction and First Movement from his Grand Concerto in A. The organ, built on the tubular pneumatic principle, is a beautiful instrument, and the Recital was greatly appreciated. The vocalist was Mr. G. E. King.

THE Bristol Musical Festival, with Mr. Charles Hallé as Conductor, is fixed for the week beginning October 15 next. The following works will be performed: Gluck's "Iphigenia," Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," and Handel's "Messiah." There will be two miscellaneous Concerts. The following principal artists have already been engaged: Madame Albani, Madame Trebelli, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Banks, and Mr. Santley.

UNDER the somewhat odd title of "Pan to Pinafore," an amusing and instructive entertainment was given by Mr. John Radcliff, the well known flautist, and Madame Pauline Rita (Mrs. Radcliff) in St. James's Banqueting Hall, on the 12th ult. It took the form of a chatty lecture on the history of the flute from the earliest times, with illustrations on various curious and obsolete instruments, in the manipulation of which Mr. Radcliff displayed great skill. The vocal selections by Madame Rita afforded the necessary variety to the entertainment.

THE Kyrle Choirs, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "The Messiah," on the 11th ult., in St. Mary's Church, Somers Town. Soloists:

Mrs. Butterworth, Miss Ellen Cooper, Mr. Reginald Groome, and Mr. James Blackney; and on the 18th ult. a performance of "Elijah," in St. Mary's Church, Spital Square, E. Soloists: Miss Anna Roekner, Miss Ellen Cooper, Mr. Ager Groom, and Mr. Albert Oran. Mr. E. H. Turpin accompanied on the organ.

AT the Manor Rooms, Hackney, Mr. Duncan Finlay gave his thirteenth annual Concert on the 12th ult. A varied programme was presented by the following performers:—Miss Ada Loaring, Madame Hadingham, Miss Dews, Miss Minnie Laurie, Miss Ada Fuller (violin), Mr. Joseph Hay, Mr. T. P. Trounce, Mr. Leo Stormont, and Mr. David Davies. The accompanists were Madame Hadingham, Messrs. J. Loaring and W. Amies King. Dr. W. H. Rowe recited.

THE Stock Exchange Male Voice Choir gave a Smoking Concert in the Great Hall, Cannon Street Hotel, E.C., on Tuesday evening, the 17th ult. The chair was taken by Mr. J. F. H. Read, the well-known musical amateur and composer. The programme consisted of songs, part-songs, glees, and, in the instrumental department, two violin solos, Andante and Finale from Concerto (Mendelssohn), and "Saltarello" (Alard); a pianoforte solo, "Wanderstunden" (Heller), completed the programme.

MISS ALICE GOMES' Concert at the Princes' Hall, on Thursday afternoon, the 26th ult., was well and fashionably attended. The programme was miscellaneous, and contained nothing of musical importance. The Concert-giver gave a charming rendering of Weber's "O Fatima," Gounod's "Entreat me not to leave thee," and other vocal pieces, and received valuable assistance from Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Piercy, Mr. Thorndike, and Mr. Coenen.

MR. H. W. WESTON, F.C.O., gave a Recital at Balham Parish Church, on Easter Sunday, after Evensong, to a large congregation. The programme included a new "Tempo di Minuetto," played by the Organist for the first time. The same gentleman gave three Recitals on the great organ at the Crystal Palace, on Easter Tuesday; and on Saturday, the 7th ult., produced three of Mozart's Sonatas for organ, two violins, and bass, with an excellent selection of other works, at a Recital at St. Barnabas', Kentish Town.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN'S Evening Concert, on Wednesday, the 11th ult., at the Athenæum, Camden Road, was very successful. The performers were Miss Douglas, Madame Belle Cole, and Mr. John Bridson; Miss Dorothea Walenn and Master Gerald Walenn (violin), Mr. Arthur Walenn (viola), Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncello), and Miss Nellie Chaplin and Mr. H. W. Thatcher (pianoforte). The programme included works by Rheinberger, Dittersdorf, Dvorák, Gounod, and other composers of eminence.

ON Sunday afternoon, the 8th ult., the choir of St. John's, Waterloo Road, S.E., gave a performance of Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio "St. Peter." The soloists were Master Warren, Miss Jennie Bawtree, Mr. Joseph Gostick, and Mr. Frederick Winton. All did their work well, and the choruses were very creditably rendered. Mr. Henry J. B. Dart supplied the organ accompaniment and conducted. The spacious church was well filled, and the service was greatly appreciated.

ON Thursday evening, March 29, an excellent rendering of Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given by an augmented choir at St. Mary's Church, Berkeley Square, W., Mr. C. H. Tonking presiding at the organ and Mr. John E. West (Organist and Choirmaster of the Church) conducting. The solos were efficiently rendered by Messrs. T. Peake and Herbert E. Budge, and the church was well attended on the occasion.

DURING the last term a series of Lectures and Recitals was given at the Guildhall School of Music with so much success that a similar course has been arranged by the Principal, Mr. Weist Hill, for the present term. On Friday evening, the 20th ult., Mr. W. Henry Thomas inaugurated the series by lecturing upon Sight Singing, a branch of the art with which he is identified at that Institution.

A SUCCESSFUL Concert was given, under distinguished patronage, at the Forest Hill Baths, on the 12th ult., when a most attractive programme was provided by the following performers:—Miss Alice Gomez, Miss Amy Avant, Miss Jessie Hotine, Mr. Alfred Nicol, Mr. J. Dalgety Henderson; Herr Posnanski (violin), Herr Georg Engel (violoncello), Mr. T. Avant (pianoforte), and Mr. Alfred Allen, the latter officiating as accompanist.

It has been decided to close the Macfarren Scholarship Fund on the 10th inst., by which time it is anticipated that the subscription list will amount to about £1,400. As soon as it is known what is the actual amount that will be available, the General Committee, which includes the names of over 200 prominent musicians, will be convened, in order to determine the conditions of the Scholarship.

MR. CARL ARMBRUSTER commenced a series of seven Lectures at the Royal Institution on the 14th ult. The "Later Works of Richard Wagner" form the theme of the discourses, which are illustrated with musical examples by Miss Pauline Cramer, Miss Marguerite Hall, Miss A. Elsner, Mr. William Nicholl, Mr. B. H. Grove, and the Lecturer.

ON Sunday afternoon, the 8th ult., the banner of the South Essex Auxiliary of the London Sunday School Union, won by the Choir of the school belonging to the Church, was formally handed over to the school. The Choir also presented their Conductor, Mr. J. B. Mellis, with a beautiful silver-mounted ebony bâton.

A PERFORMANCE of Handel's "Messiah" was given on Good Friday at the Wesleyan Chapel in Oakley Place, Old Kent Road. The soloists were the Misses Hattie Hickling and Kate Milner, with Messrs. J. Heald and F. Bevan. Mr. Thomas Manger conducted the work, and a complete band was led by Mr. Hubert Lawrance of Lewisham.

MISS ALICE ALOOF, having obtained high awards as a dramatic student, gave a Recital at Gresham Hall, Brixton, on Wednesday evening, the 11th ult. She displayed genuine dramatic instinct in her various selections, which were interspersed with pianoforte solos.

THE members of the Mile End Road Congregational Church, on Tuesday, the 3rd ult., presented Miss Annie E. Holdom with an illuminated testimonial and floral album on the occasion of her retirement from the office of Organist and Choirmistress.

THE new building for the Royal College of Music will be erected on the site of the Conservatory adjoining the Royal Albert Hall. A broad road will run between it and the new Imperial Institute, and the new College will form another entrance to the Royal Albert Hall.

HANDEL'S "Messiah" was given in the New Congregational Church on Good Friday evening, by the Forest Gate Choral Society. Conductor, Mr. J. B. Mellis. The soloists were Miss L. H. Lawrence, T.C.L., Miss Spencer Jones, A.R.A.M., Mr. E. Branscombe, and Mr. Stanley Smith.

At the competition of Prize Choirs held at the City Temple, on the 18th ult., under the auspices of the Sunday School Union, the Forest Gate Choral Society were successful in winning the second prize.

THE new organ in the Woolfold Wesleyan Chapel will be built by Messrs. Alexander Young and Son. It will be a two-manual organ of twenty-two stops, with six composition pedals.

REVIEWS.

The rise and development of Synagogue Music. By the Rev. Francis L. Cohen. [Wertheimer, Lea and Co.]

THIS is the text of a Lecture delivered at the Anglo-Jewish Historical Exhibition, held at the Royal Albert Hall in May, 1887. The substance of the discourse is summed up in the statement that the music of the Synagogue varies in age from that which was heard in the wilderness during the forty years of wandering to that on the manuscript of which the composer's ink is not dry. The whole of this will not be formed on our system, nor even be derived from similar causes, emotional or artistic. The rise and development may be divided into five unequal periods—(1) to the fall of Jerusalem; (2) thence to the ninth century of the Christian era, during which interval the essential and general portions of the Jewish Liturgy became settled and the older chants and tunes produced; (3) from the ninth to the sixteenth century, when the later poetical portions of the Liturgy were composed, and the majority of the traditional melodies received their present forms; (4) from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century, a period of deterioration; and (5) the last fifty years, with the moulding of Synagogue music on artistic lines. These several points are brought out in the most interesting manner by the author. Certain of the ancient and traditional Hebrew melodies were performed when the Lecture was delivered, some of which are given in musical notes in the text. The facts gathered together are attractive to musicians, and as the subject is ably treated, it is a pity that the Lecture form was not abandoned in favour of a style more consistent with historical demands. Perhaps in time to come the author may be induced to expand his notes into a treatise of dimensions better worthy of the dignity of the theme.

Duo Concertante. For Pianoforte and Clarinet, or Violin, or Viola. Composed by Charles Harford Lloyd. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS duet is especially welcome in either of its forms, but especially for the clarinet arrangement, which was the original state of the work. There is a large literature of music for the clarinet, though it is but little known. Besides Mozart and Weber, whose works are familiar to performers and amateurs, there is music by Spohr and Lindpaintner worthy of being revived. As a rule, however, players of the clarinet seem to prefer ad captandum pieces—variations, such as "Home, sweet home," or the "Blue bells of Scotland"—to classical works, because they can secure a firm hold on the sympathies of an audience by like demonstrations, and also because such things require little preparation. The serious writers study the instrument and its capabilities, and require reciprocity from those who would perform their works. Such compositions as that of Mr. Lloyd ought to be encouraged, as tending to bring back players to a right understanding of their duties. The Duo is admirably written for both instruments, and although the composer has provided an alternative arrangement for the violin or viola, each of which is worthy of the notice of players upon those instruments, it would seem, upon careful perusal of the music, that its best efforts would be obtained from the wind instrument in conjunction with the pianoforte. As music it is earnest, well designed, and spontaneous, and being of graceful character and of moderate length it ought to become a favourite in the concert-room.

William Bracewell's Tutor for the American Organ and Harmonium. Written by his daughter, Alice Goddard Bracewell. [W. Bracewell.]

DESPITE the paradox which appears on the title-page of this work, there is much that is useful within the pages to those who would like to learn to play the American organ or the harmonium a little. They are both "modern instruments," we are told in the preface, "especially the former," and for them much music has been written. William Bracewell, or his daughter who wrote the book, falls foul of the "elementary works which one by one have been introduced to the public." William Bracewell, or his daughter who wrote the book, divides the writers of elementary treatises into two classes. Of the first class "it is manifest that the author is more acquainted with the pianoforte than the organ," a somewhat sweeping assertion against the "author" of a whole class of books. The second class does not please him either, although "they are written by persons of great musical ability, but whose talent would shine more in the writing of a four-part fugue, the composition of an anthem, or the setting of music to the Te Deum, than in the construction of a tutor."

The only book, of course, is that written by William Bracewell or his daughter. It is intended for harmonium and organ students possessing no previous knowledge of music. This is an advantage in favour of the book, for the users will not be able to judge too critically of the style in which it is written, nor too severely concerning certain of the exercises furnished by Mr. Bracewell, or his daughter who wrote the book.

Three Hundred and Fifty Hymn-Tunes, &c., selected from various sources. By Gilbert H. W. Harrison. [Norwood: Robert Rippon.]

WITH the memory of the number, variety, and excellence of the Hymn-books recently issued still fresh in the mind, it is difficult to perceive the reason for the appearance of the present publication. There are no new tunes to distinguish the book greatly among its kind, the best of the popular melodies have appeared in other works, and besides there are peculiar features in the collection which, of themselves, tend to limit the chances of a wide acceptance. In the first place, the words are for the most part wanting. In the second, the collection of tunes is disfigured by the appearance of many adaptations of melodies and parts of melodies which have already done duty in association with secular words or ideas. In the third place, the book is not equal with modern desires, as it contains a number of fossil tunes like "Hotham" (237), "Vital Spark" (140), "Here we suffer" (164), several of Dr. Gauntlett's vulgarisations of dignified tunes, and adaptations from part-songs or glees, and the "curly" perversions from Daniel's Psalter. These are unworthy of any modern Hymn-tune book for whatever purpose it may be designed. The absence of explanation leaves that purpose still undeclared. Perhaps it was incapable of justification. The pages are printed from transfer plates, clearly and legibly, and it is issued in a cheap form—namely, at the rate of one hundred tunes for a shilling.

The Psalter, as used in Lincoln Cathedral. By John M. W. Young. [Lincoln: George Gale.]

THIS is the second edition of a book originated some forty-two years ago by its author. Many alterations and improvements have been made, such as appeared to be necessary after a close daily observance extending over many years. Systems of pointing the Psalms vary in different places, and while each claims to possess special merits founded upon the defects of other works of like kind, all profess to have but one object—that of securing good chanting in the service. Many of the peculiarities of the several pointed Psalters arise from the author's notions as to the Syntax of the sentences, or his desire to accommodate the division of the words to some principles of doubtful or unsubstantial authority. Mr. Young gives a series of directions as to the manner of chanting, which are certainly based on common sense. In many of the verses it would seem that his directions as to the "halting point" in the recitation bars, make it a little too far away from the inflection, and it could not unfrequently occur that words important to the sense would lose some of the accent necessary. The employment of words of more than one syllable, such as "persecute" in Psalm VII., v. 1, for the first half of the bar after the recitation, would be difficult for any but the most perfectly trained choirs. Still, on the whole, the plan is sensible and the Psalter might with advantage be adopted in places where none is now used.

Handbell Ringing. By C. W. Fletcher. [J. Curwen and Sons.]

HANDBELL ringing is a very old English pastime. In the "Wooing song of a Yeoman of Kent his son," when, for the benefit of the lady to whom he is addressing himself, the lover enumerates his accomplishments, he says:—

I can bravely clout my shoon,
And I right well can ring a bell,
Wherefore, cease off, make no delay,
And if you love me love me now,
Or else I'll seek some other where,
For I cannot come every day to woo.

The present is one of the very few modern attempts to offer the elements of instruction in the art, and it will be found useful to those who think of continuing the old English custom by new efforts. A complete description of the most convenient arrangement of the bells for rapid execution, the requirements of the players, the method of striking, tunes to be played in harmony or divided melody, and other matters more or less valuable. One of the tunes given is Knight's "She wore a wreath of roses." This has been possibly introduced by arrangement, for it is still copyright. There is an A misprinted for C in the last bar but one on page 41 in this tune.

Sonata in E minor, for the Organ. Op. 37. By Charles W. Pearce. [London Music Publishing Company.]

WE have more than once drawn attention to the clever organ music of Dr. Pearce, and this Sonata cannot be regarded otherwise than as a remarkable work, though the composer has lowered the dignity of his art by putting it before the world as it stands. The introduction and treatment of two ancient hymn tunes generally associated with the Advent season is of course legitimate enough, but not content with this he labels passages with texts, such as "The kingdom of Heaven is at hand," "One mightier than I cometh," "The distress of nations," "The trumpet sounds," "Fall on us, cover us," &c., the design being evidently to produce a realistic picture after the fashion of our old friend "The battle of Prague." That Dr. Pearce should stoop to this kind of thing is at once sad and surprising. Looked at as abstract music, the Sonata is necessarily disjointed, but the middle movement, intended to suggest the Incarnation, contains some excellent writing in the most modern style. In his next effort we hope to find that Dr. Pearce has left the field of claptrap to less talented composers.

The Groundwork of Music. By C. Webster. [Edinburgh: Oliver and Boyd.]

THE author has arranged his labours so as to form two books. The first deals with "Graduated work for pupils upon Clefs, Time, Scales, Keys, and Intervals, with a few Concise Notes upon each subject." The second is set apart for "Fifty and five Miscellaneous Examination Papers (including 594 Questions)," upon the same matters as are treated of in the first part, with the addition of technical terms used in music. The work, which is "not intended to supersede the standard modern books upon 'Theory,' but to aid in understanding and remembering them," will be more useful to teachers as a guide to the form and variety which may be imparted to elementary lessons, than to students who desire to begin at the beginning. It plunges at once in medias res without preliminary explanations; therefore it does not deal so much with the groundwork of music as with a superstructure with scant foundation.

Songs of a Summer's Day. (Op. 8.) Four Vocal Duets. Words and Music by Frank J. Sawyer, Mus. Doc., Oxon. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is a pleasing series of four gracefully written duets for treble voices, entitled respectively, "Dawn," "Noon," "Twilight," and "Night." There is a complete contrast in the pieces, though brightness of treatment and lively melody characterise them all. The accompaniments most happily enforce the spirit of the several themes. The "Dawn" opens tranquilly, but soon assumes a more joyous aspect; "Noon" by the brook, is charmingly dealt with; "Twilight" is involved in mysterious sounds conveyed by the occasional use of diminished fifths with an admirable, though daring effect; and "Night" brings us into the midst of a fairy revel. The voice parts are cleverly, yet spontaneously, designed; and it is certain that those who will take the trouble to study them will be glad for the knowledge and pleasure they will bring.

George Frederick Handel. By J. Cuthbert Hadden. Biographies of Great Composers. [W. H. Allen and Co.]

TO the making of biographies there is no end. The popular interest for musical history is being met on all sides in a variety of ways, good, bad, and indifferent. The "handy-book" form is being worked out in all possible forms. The first of a possible series of "Biographies of Great Composers" begins not improperly with Handel. His new historian, J. Cuthbert Hadden, brings no new facts to light, but the old facts are told in a pleasant way. All controversial points are carefully avoided, and the character of the man as well as his music are matters which have been most temperately dealt with. The book is pleasant and readable. A portrait, copied from an engraving, given as a frontispiece, is the least artistic feature of the publication.

The Italian Registers. By Frederick Helmore.
[Masters and Co.]

IN this small pamphlet of some thirty-six pages there are many valuable remarks concerning the management of the three Registers of the Voice, designated in Italian "Voce di petto, voce di gola, and voce di testa." They are the outcome of a long experience, and may be read and studied with profit even by teachers, as well as by the taught. Mr. Helmore has no very high opinion of the koo-koo syllables employed for vocal exercises, but he attempts to prove too much when he proposes (p. 23) what he calls an amusing experiment, "Place," he says, "Bottasini (sic) and Norman-Néruda behind a screen, and there will be occasionally the same difficulty in distinguishing the double bass from the violin." This is absurd, and will do much to lessen the value of a work otherwise marked by shrewdness and commonsense.

Christian the Pilgrim. Sacred Cantata. By Wilford Morgan. [Morgan and Co.]

IN this adaptation of the main incident in the immortal story by Bunyan, "The Pilgrim's Progress," the author of the libretto, the late Arthur Matthison, has kept in mind the important need of dramatic contrast. The composer has intensified this quality by the character of his music, and has produced a work which has many of the elements required for popularity. His recitations are bold and emphatic, his arias melodious and pleasing, and the choruses are well written and effective. These qualities are all obtained without resorting to difficulties in device and treatment. The passages are easy enough for an ordinary choir to be able to read straight off. Such difficulties as exist are to be found in the accompaniments, and these, while they serve every purpose, need not daunt the most modest of players.

Three Pieces for the Pianoforte. By Walter Porter.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THERE is a degree of finish and elegance in these pieces which will recommend them strongly to pianists of refined tastes. No. 1, in F, is a gavotte, and though the gavotte form may be regarded as almost exhausted, Mr. Porter has managed to impart some freshness to his example, the chromatic opening of the principal subject at once arresting attention. The re-appearance of a few bars of the trio just before the close has a very Beethovenish effect. Nos. 2 and 3 are Impromptus in B minor and E flat respectively. The first of the two is a lively little piece in 6-8 time, with a somewhat rustic flavour; the other is more sedate and has the character of a song without words. All three pieces are pleasing as well as simple, but we must give our preference to the gavotte.

Three Children Sliding; A Ryghte Merrie Geste; The Snow-white Doe. Humorous Part-Songs. By W. W. Pearson. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THAT humorous music need not be vulgar the great masters from Haydn onwards have frequently demonstrated. The verses which Mr. Pearson has chosen in these compositions are nonsensical enough, but the music in each instance is worthy of consideration for its artistic qualities. Moreover, it is not remarkable for simplicity; the florid style of some of the old glee writers is caricatured with capital effect and only singers accustomed to this kind of music could render justice to these part-songs. As to which is the best of the three, opinions may differ; but we give our preference to "The Snow-white Doe," in which the well known hunting song rhythm is happily travestied.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F. By J. Baptiste Calkin. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is one of the best settings of the evening Canticles, for ordinary use, we have met with for some time. The music is flowing, elegant, and melodious, without being in the slightest degree trivial, and modern without extravagance. Perhaps the most original point in the service occurs at the very end, where an unexpected second inversion of the triad of A major is resolved on the dominant ninth of the original key. The effect of this is very bold and striking.

Polonaise in A; Caprice in D flat; Reverie in B. By Frederic W. Clarke. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THESE pianoforte pieces are, unfortunately, posthumous publications. We say unfortunately, because the composer was evidently possessed of far more than average ability. The principal subject of the Polonaise, with its bold and free yet perfectly legitimate harmonic transitions, proves the freshness of his ideas. This piece is the most ambitious and, on the whole, the most original and effective of the three. The Caprice may possibly recall the favourite Arabesque of Schumann, but it is none the worse on that account, and the Reverie is an elegant and pleasing trifle. All three are written in a style indicating that the composer was a master of his instrument.

If Doughty Deeds. By C. Lee Williams. Novello's Part-Song Book, Second Series. If Doughty Deeds. By Gerard F. Cobb. The Orpheus, New Series.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IT is interesting to compare these two settings of Graham of Gartmore's verses. The first-named is for mixed voices and is a remarkably bright and spirited part-song certain to win high favour with choral societies. The other is for male voices only and Mr. Cobb has to some extent adopted the style of our English glee writers of a century ago. The sol passages are more modern and so is the effective Coda. The composer has provided a well written pianoforte accompaniment, obligato.

Pieces by Handel. Arranged for the Organ by W. J. Westbrook. [Weekes and Co.]

DR. WESTBROOK is a veteran in the art of transcription, and his name is generally a criterion of excellence. The present book contains eleven of Handel's most familiar airs and choruses from "The Messiah," "Samson," "Solomon," "Judas," &c. There is no unnecessary piling up of difficulties, and the only fault we can find with the arrangements is that the division of the notes between the two hands is not indicated as clearly as it might be. Students who use the original edition of Mendelssohn's organ works are frequently perplexed from a similar cause.

The Syrens of the Sea. Words by Walter Parke. Music by Florian Pascal. [Joseph Williams.]

THE author of the words has selected a theme for his verses which has done duty over and over again since the days of Virgil. He has been successful in one respect. He has inspired the composer to write some very graceful music in his Cantata far more original than the subject with which it is associated. It is set for soprano solo, female chorus, and orchestra. The vocal parts are very good, and the pianoforte arrangement suggests some degree of delicacy of colour.

Twilight. A Glee. By Joseph L. Roeckel.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

AN excellent piece of part-writing, well laid out for the voices, and likely to be extremely effective when well sung. It is a "glee" only in name, as it possesses none of the characteristic qualities required in that form of composition, the chief of which are contrasted movements and independent melodiousness in the several voice parts. It is of some degree of novelty in construction, being a part-song in Rondo form, with a Coda, and is clever enough and striking enough to suggest a fresh departure in the treatment of the part-song.

Six Romances for the Pianoforte. By G. A. Macfarren.
[Edwin Ashdown.]

ANY posthumous publications by the late revered Principal of the Royal Academy of Music cannot fail to command attention and interest. These Romances, which have been edited and fingered by Mr. Walter Macfarren, are brief and easy sketches, written with the utmost refinement of manner, and in style may be said to be a compound of Mozart and Mendelssohn. Better models of course young players could not have, and we recommend the series to the notice of teachers as being thoroughly sound and healthy music.

Festival Te Deum in C. By C. Warwick Jordan.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THOUGH designed for festival use, this Te Deum is by no means laid out on an elaborate scale. Indeed, the voice parts are remarkable for being almost throughout either in the first species of counterpoint, note against note, or else in unison. The accompaniment abounds in bold trumpet-like phrases, and there are ad lib. parts for brass and drums. Parish choirs will find Mr. Jordan's setting of the Ambrosian Hymn well within their means.

Children's Festival Service. For school anniversaries and other festal occasions. Compiled by the Rev. S. Childs Clarke, M.A. Music by Arthur H. Brown. [J. Curwen.]

THIS is a well-selected series of Prayers and Hymns, with tunes selected or composed by Mr. Arthur H. Brown, of Brentwood, such as children can readily sing. Considerable judgment has been exercised in the choice of words, and the whole service is compiled in an acceptable form. The tunes are printed in accepted and in Tonic Sol-fa notations.

Two Compositions for the Organ. By Walter Porter.
[Novello, Ewer & Co.]

THESE little pieces would make suitable and pleasing opening voluntaries. The composer appears to have a fund of melody at his command and he writes in a refined and musicianly style, not unworthy to compare with Henry Smart, who may be said to have founded our English school of organ music. Mr. Porter might try his hand at compositions of a more ambitious nature.

Transcriptions for the Organ. By Arthur Boyse. Nos. 1 to 7. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE object of the author of these arrangements seems to have been to provide a series of melodious little pieces for comparatively elementary players. Four of the seven numbers are transcriptions of some of Schumann's charming trifles for pianoforte. They are neatly effected and, granting that arrangements are legitimate, are worthy of much commendation.

Scherzetto in G major. For the Pianoforte. Composed by Arthur O'Leary. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS fanciful little trifle, by a composer already well-known to classical pianists, is a welcome contribution to the rapidly-increasing store of thoughtful pieces by English writers. The graceful passages lie well under the hand; and, apart from its intrinsic attraction, the Sketch will be found an excellent study for touch and phrasing.

Original Air, with Variations, for the Organ. By J. G. Pearson. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE composer of this piece has shown that he knows how to produce effects by comparatively simple means. Florid work for solo stops always tells well with general listeners, though it may be perfectly easy. Mr. Pearson's air is pleasing, and the five Variations are well contrasted. The close, however, is rather commonplace.

And suddenly there came a sound. Anthem for Whitsuntide. By John Layland. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE composer has studied the capacity of ordinary parish churches in this little Anthem. It is studiously simple and consists of several short sections, after the manner adopted by Child, Clark, King, and other eighteenth century composers. The Amen at the close might be omitted with advantage, as there is nothing of a prayerful nature in the words.

Rest. Song. Words by Miss Florence Tylee. Music by F. Alban Barraud. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

A WELL-WRITTEN and melodious song, set to some very expressive words. In the hands of a capable vocalist much effect might be produced by the performance.

My Love. A Four-part Song for Men's Voices. By J. T. Musgrave. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is a remarkably pretty part-song, which would be original if Hatton had not written "When evening's twilight."

Office for the Holy Communion, in G. By the Rev. W. Claxton. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is an excerpt from a complete service, the music being simplified for the use of parish choirs. In its present form it is an extremely easy and unaffected setting of the Eucharistic Office, though for the sake of effect the organ frequently moves independently of the voices. The latter are chiefly in unison, occasionally dropping into plain harmony.

Naumann's History of Music. [Cassell and Co.]

THOSE who neglected to supply themselves with this generally excellent work, can repair the omission, as the publishers have just issued a new edition in monthly parts. The first which is now before us is as carefully printed and copiously illustrated as the original. The great feature of the work is the number and value of the woodcuts, &c. These convey to the eye as agreeable an impression as the text does to the mind.

I was in the Spirit. Anthem for Trinity Sunday. By Frederick Cambridge. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS Anthem opens with a flowing yet dignified tenor solo and chorus, the latter consisting of the Ter Sanctus several times repeated. A few bars of Adagio lead into the final chorus, which is very bright and spirited, though quite easy. Mr. Cambridge's Anthem cannot fail to win general approval.

Sleep, darling baby mine. By Riccardo Mählig. (Novello's Part-Song Book, Second Series, No. 539.)
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS extremely pretty lullaby for mixed voices will assuredly become popular alike with choirs and audiences. The composer understands the art of gaining his effects by simple means and this is much in his favour, as it brings his piece within the means of a very large circle of amateurs.

Musical Notes. An annual. By Herman Klein.
[The Stage Office.]

AS a memorial of the music of the year this excellent little book will be found most valuable. There is a capital index, the soul of such a work as the present, and as far as can be ascertained the facts stated are trustworthy and will serve not only as a memory of past pleasures, but as a reference of events more or less important.

Operatic fantasias for the Violin, with Pianoforte accompaniment. By E. Davidson Palmer, Mus. Bac., Oxon.
[Joseph Williams.]

THE latest additions to this useful series of arrangements is from the "Tannhäuser" of Wagner, very effectively and, in places, brilliantly set out as a duet for the two instruments.

The Choral Office for the Solemnization of Matrimony. Music composed and arranged by W. S. Hoyte.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THOSE who desire to have copies of the excellent arrangement of the Service as used in the Church of All Saints', Margaret Street, will be glad to know of the present publication.

The Nights. Part-Song. Composed by C. E. Rowley.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

BARRY CORNWALL'S well known words have already been subjected to musical treatment. The present setting is none the less effective because the composer has aimed at simplicity of style in dealing with the poem.

Six Miniatures. For Violin and Pianoforte. By Frank Evelyn. [Wood and Co.]

THESE are evidently designed for the use of moderate players on both instruments, and as such display uncommon ingenuity and commendable judgment and taste.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, in the key of E flat. By F. Alban Barraud. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WITHOUT being in any way elaborate or pretentious, this setting of the Canticles out of the Evening Service is thoughtful and reverent. It contains no difficulties to daunt choirs of the most moderate capacities.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THIS year's Bayreuth performances, as has now been definitely settled, will extend from July 22 to August 19. There will be four performances each week, "Parsifal" being given on Sundays and Wednesdays, and "Die Meistersinger" on Mondays and Thursdays. The following artists have been announced to take part in the representations—viz., in "Parsifal," Mesdames Materna, Malten, and Sucher (Kundry); Herren Gudehus, Winkelmann, and Van Dyk (Parsifal); Herren Reichmann and Scheidemantel (Amfortas); and Herren Wiegand and Gillemester (Gurnemanz). In "Die Meistersinger"—Herren Reichmann, Gura, and Planck (Hans Sachs); Herren Wiegand and Gillemester (Pogner); Mesdames Malten, Sucher, and Bettoque (Eva); Herren Gudehus, Winkelmann, and Van Dyk (Walther Stolzing); Herren Friedrichs and Kürner (Beckmesser); and Herren Schrödter and Hofmüller (David). The Festspielhaus will be illuminated this year by the electric light.

Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde," it has now been definitely decided, is to be performed in the Italian language in connection with the International Musical Exhibition to be opened this month at Bologna. Hitherto this most characteristic work of the Bayreuth master has not been performed in any other language but that of the original.

Handel's Serenata "Acis and Galatea" was recently performed, with stage accessories, and compressed into one act, at the Hof-Theater of Carlsruhe, under the direction of Herr Felix Mottl. The ever-green work, which is but rarely heard in Germany, is said to have delighted the connoisseurs present, while the general public "managed to conceal its ennui out of respect for the revered name of its composer."

Bach's St. Matthew Passion Music was performed on Good Friday last, according to the now well-established custom, by all the leading Choral Societies of Germany. The same master's setting of the "Passion according to St. Luke" was also recently performed by the Bach-Verein of Leipzig.

A new Oratorio, "Die Grablegung Christi," by Herr August Klughardt, recently performed at Dessau, is most favourably commented on in the German musical press. The fact is the more noteworthy, since this particular art-form has been somewhat neglected of late years in the Fatherland.

A new comic opera, "Turandot," by Herr Theobald Rehbaum, was produced as the first novelty of the season, on the 11th ult., at the Royal Opera of Berlin, and is said to have greatly pleased the audience.

Heinrich Zöllner's "Faust" music (a setting of the first part of Goethe's drama), recently so successfully produced at Munich and Cologne, has just met with considerable success on its performance also at the Bonn Stadt-Theater. The gifted young composer is, we understand, now engaged upon a similar musical treatment of the second part of Goethe's work, not however, we should think, in its entirety.

The centenary takes place, on the 16th inst., of the birth of the poet Friedrich Rückert, to many of whose verses German classical song-writers have wedded some of their finest strains. If an example is to be quoted, we need only refer to Schumann's beautiful setting of the equally beautiful lines Du meine Seele, Du mein Herz.

Herr Mahler's version of Carl Maria von Weber's opera fragment, "Die drei Pintos," first produced at the Leipzig Stadt-Theater, was brought out last month at Hamburg, under the direction of Herr Pollini, and at the Munich Hof-Theater, where it was well received.

Herr F. Gernsheim, the well-known composer, has been elected a member of the Berlin Academy of Fine Arts.

A Schubert Museum, analogous to the existing institutions devoted to the collection of Beethoveniana and Wagneriana, is to be founded at Vienna, under the auspices of the Viennese Schubert-Bund.

At the Berlin Victoria Theatre a series of operas by Russian composers is to be given this month by members of the Imperial Opera of St. Petersburg.

Herr Franz Rummel, the highly gifted pianist, has returned from this country to the German capital, having given, en route, a most successful Concert at Cassel.

M. Alexander Guilmant, the eminent French organist, gave two Concerts, in conjunction with M. Colonne's orchestra, at the Paris Trocadéro last month. Among the works performed were two Organ Sonatas by the Concert-giver, Concertos by Handel and Mozart, and an Organ Sonata by F. W. Rust. The performances excited much interest.

The project of erecting in the vicinity of Paris a Wagner-Theatre, for the purpose of producing that master's music-dramas, appears to be gaining ground, M. Lamoureux, the originator of the idea, being well supported in the matter by a number of influential admirers of the Bayreuth reformer.

At the Argentina Theatre of Rome a new four-act Opera, entitled "Jacopo," the words and music by the Maestro Antonio Leonardi, met with a complete fiasco on its first representation last month.

According to a correspondent of the Leipzig Musik und Kunst-Zeitung, Wagner's "Lohengrin" is just now being performed at Trieste with "alterations" somewhat after the custom which prevailed on the operatic stage in this country some sixty years ago. Thus, for instance, in the third act of the Bayreuth reformer's music-drama, as produced in the above town, a duet is inserted from "Les Huguenots." Poor Wagner, and Meyerbeer's music too, of all others!

Wagner's "Lohengrin" has continued to attract numerous and enthusiastic audiences at the Pergola Theatre of Florence during last month.

An opera, "La Donna Bianca," by a German composer residing in Portugal, M. Keil, has just been produced with marked success at the Royal Theatre of Lisbon.

A "Stabat Mater," by Signor Bernardo Bellini, recently performed at Naples, has met with an enthusiastic reception, and is said to be a remarkable work. The composer, who is not in any way related to the celebrated author of "Norma" and "La Sonnambula," is a professor at the Naples Conservatoire.

A very fine spacious Concert Hall, capable of accommodating 1,800 people, was inaugurated, on the 11th ult., at Amsterdam, the festival programme including the performance of part of Haydn's "The Seasons," of the "Hallelujah" Chorus from "The Messiah," and of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

A new music journal, entitled Orpheus, has just been started at Amsterdam. Holland is peculiarly deficient in literature of this description, and with the exception of one or two minor publications devoted to a special branch of the profession, that country has hitherto possessed but one journal devoted to the art generally—viz., the Cæcilia, published in the Hague, under the editorship of M. Nicolai.

Under the title "Bibliographischer und Thematischer Musikcatalog des päpstlichen Kapellarchives," Herr F. X. Haberl has just published (Breitkopf and Härtel) a highly interesting catalogue of the contents of the musical library of the Pontifical Chapel at Rome, specially important as regards compositions appertaining to the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

"Georges Bizet, la sua vita e le sue opere," is the title of a biography of the composer of "Carmen" just published at Rome (Paravia) from the pen of Signor Leopoldo Mastrigli. The work is dedicated to M. Charles Gounod.

A committee has been formed in Paris, under the presidency of M. Ambroise Thomas, for the purpose of raising a monument to Méhul, at his native town of Givet, in the department of the Ardennes.

A monument is to be erected to Johann Nepomuk Hummel at Weimar, where, between the years 1820 and 1837, he occupied the post of operatic Conductor.

We have to record the death, on March 25, at New York, of Josef W. Drexel, president of the New York Philharmonic Society, and one of the directors of the Metropolitan Opera House of that city. Mr. Drexel was an excellent violoncello player, and the possessor of one of the most extensive musical libraries in the United States.

Charles Valentin Alkan, the well-known composer of pianoforte music (whose real name was Morhange) died, on March 29, at Paris, aged seventy-five, the deceased artist having been born in the French capital in 1813.

Franz Goetze, the celebrated singing master, and for a number of years a professor at the Leipzig Conservatorium, died at Leipzig, on the 2nd ult., aged seventy-four.

Enrico Calzolari, once a celebrated tenor of La Scala of Milan, died recently at that town aged sixty-two.

F. A. Garbe, for more than thirty years the conductor of the Kurhaus Orchestra of Homburg, died at Frankfurt, on the 9th ult., aged eighty-one.

The death is also announced at Corbeil, on the 15th ult., of Théophile Semet, the composer of several successful operas and operettas ("La petite Fadette," "Gil Blas," "Ondine"), cantatas, and songs. Semet was born at Lille in 1824.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MISPRINTS IN BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In a communication to the Neue Berliner Musik-Zeitung some time since, Herr Ludwig Bussler draws attention to misprints in two of Beethoven's Sonatas which appear hitherto to have escaped notice.

In the first movement of the Sonata in B flat major (Op. 106), about the middle of the second section, occurs the bar—

Here the note F (*) ought to be E. The whole character of the passage points to this emendation. Contrapuntal analysis removes all doubt as to its correctness by showing that the passage is simply a working-out in thirds for four parts of a subject which occurs in two parts a few bars before. Hans von Bülow accepted this corrected reading in his Concert in Berlin on March 10 of last year.

The Sonata in A major (Op. 101) contains a similar error. In the last movement, at the beginning of the fugal "working-out" section, occur the following bars—

Here the two D's (*) in the left hand should be altered into E, for here again we have to do with a working-out in sixths of a previously stated theme. A comparison of the passage with the rest of the section, in which the same device is frequently repeated, will be found to corroborate this view.—Yours, &c.,

F. J. S.

[It is a question whether our correspondent's suggested alteration in the passage from Op. 106 is necessary. Some allowance must be made for the right of the composer to alter a sequential passage. In the second example there is no doubt of the mistake. The suggested change is in exact conformity with the remainder of the text. It may interest not only our correspondent, but our other readers, when it is said that Miss Agnes Zimmermann had already discovered the misprint which had escaped the eyes of the editors of other editions, and had printed it in her edition of the Sonatas.—ED. M. T.]

GLEES AND MADRIGALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—It is scarcely necessary at the present day to remind the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES how deeply indebted all lovers of music are to the enterprise and discrimination of Messrs. Novello during the last forty years. And while their labours in that way have extended in almost every direction, the students of glees and madrigals have not been forgotten, as can be evidenced in the pages of their "Glee Hive," "Part-Song Book," "Orpheus," "Bishop's Glees," and even THE MUSICAL TIMES itself. Yet it must be said that, despite all that has been done in these works, many fine standard glees and madrigals are still a sealed book to the great mass of vocal readers—many being only to be procured in expensive and scarce collections, and not a few have never been published separately at all. It seems to me the present might be no unfruitful time to bring out a number of those beautiful compositions, which could be done either by issuing a new series of the "Glee Hive" or by distributing them among the other serial works. I shall only speak at present of a few—comparatively speaking—all of which are, I believe, non-copyright—which would be welcome additions to the libraries of our glee-clubs.

The following are for male voices: "In the pleasant Summer day" (W. Beale), "Majestic night" (Sir H. R. Bishop), "No more the morn" (Sir H. R. Bishop), "Green thorn of the hill" (Dr. Callcott), "Why does beauteous Lina" (Dr. Callcott), "Go to my Anna's breast" (J. Danby), "Prestat bibere!" (J. Danby), "Blow light, thou balmy" (W. Horsley), "Cold is Cadwalla's" (W. Horsley), "Mine be a cot" (W. Horsley), "Let happy lovers fly" (J. S. Smith), "How calm the evening" (R. Spofforth), "O Thou! that rollest" (R. J. S. Stevens), "Some of my heroes" (R. J. S. Stevens), "Buds of Roses!" (Sir J. A. Stevenson), "Island of bliss!" (T. F. Walmisley), "The leaf that fades" (T. F. Walmisley), "Daughter, sweet" (S. Webbe), "Music's the language" (S. Webbe), and "Shall I, wasting" (C. S. Evans).

And for mixed voices: "Sister, awake!" (T. Bateson), "Have I found her?" (T. Bateson), "Rise, winds of Autumn!" (Dr. Callcott), "Sweet thrush!" (J. Danby), "Go, crystal tears!" (J. Dowland), "O, poesy divine!" (W. Horsley), "Lo! where with flow'ry" (T. Morley), "Let us, my Lesbia" (J. S. Smith), "Kingcup, daffodil, and rose" (R. Spofforth), "Come unto these yellow" (Sir J. A. Stevenson), "Tis Love that murmurs" (Sir J. A. Stevenson), "Tread lightly here" (T. F. Walmisley), "When should lovers" (T. F. Walmisley), "Hope of my heart!" (J. Ward), "Upon a bank" (J. Ward), "As o'er the varied" (S. Webbe), "Cecilia, more than all" (S. Webbe), "With breath the spacious" (S. Webbe), "Die, hapless man!" (J. Wilbye), "Happy streams!" (J. Wilbye).

The above may to some appear a long list. I can only say that it is but a tithe of what could be named, but if even those mentioned, and about as many more besides, were published in a cheap octavo form, a great boon would be conferred upon our part-singers. I have already exceeded my limits, or would have gone on to advocate a cheap reprint of several entire collections (as Wilbye's two sets of Madrigals, reprinted by Musical Antiquarian Society, 1841 and 1845), but must postpone that for the present.—I remain, yours, &c.,

"MUSIC IN AMERICA."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I was much interested in the February letter from your "Own Correspondent," dated from New York. In it he says that Mr. John S. Dwight is completing a history of the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston. I shall be glad to know where I can get a copy of the book when finished. Mr. Arthur Hayter has in his possession a large silver pitcher and pair of goblets given by that Society to his father in 1845, with the following inscription on them:—

"Presented by the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston to A. U. Hayter, in token of their estimation of his services as Organist and his assiduous exertions in bringing so successfully before the public Handel's Oratorio of 'Samson.'—May 20, 1845."

I think that this and the following extract from a Boston paper, published July, 1873, at the time of Mr. A. U. Hayter's death, may be interesting to your "Own Correspondent" and Mr. John S. Dwight:—

"A. U. Hayter, Esq.—This gentleman, for more than twenty-five years Organist of Trinity Church, died yesterday. . . In 1839 Mr. Hayter was elected Organist and Conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society, during which year he visited Europe for the purpose of selecting new oratorios. He achieved great success for the Society, bringing out all the oratorios ever given by it. Among these may be mentioned 'David,' 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' 'Last Judgment,' and 'Samson.' In 1844 'Samson' was performed thirteen times. The success was entirely unprecedented. For this success Mr. A. O. Bigelow, Secretary of the Society, said 'We are indebted in a great measure to the untiring efforts of our Organist, Mr. Hayter. It was through his influence we were induced to try the experiment, and it is doubtful whether we could have given a single performance without his assistance.' At a meeting of the Trustees of the Society a Committee was appointed to procure a service of plate to be presented to Mr. Hayter, in view of his special services to the Handel and Haydn Society. Subsequently a meeting of the Board was held to present the gift to Mr. Hayter, which took place May 20, 1845. In 1848 Mr. Hayter resigned his situation, the duties being too arduous in connection with his other professional labours. He was succeeded by his son, George F. Hayter."

The extract is longer than this, but it relates to other musical work. George F. Hayter is dead, but his other son, Arthur Upjohn Hayter, is Organist of St. Mary's, Stratford, Bow.—I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

E. HAYTER.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur. Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

B. and C.—Both have Baritone voices.

BAMFORD (ROCHDALE).—The song is printed, with the music, we believe, in Dr. Spark's "Liber Musicus."

R. G. W. H.—For list of Glee by Arne and Battishill, consult Novello's Catalogue, No. 5.

FRANK J. ALLEN.—Letter received with thanks.

ST. BEES.—We cannot tell where your information concerning Reginald Spoforth was obtained, but it is, as you say, very meagre, if not absolutely incorrect. He was born at Southwell, in 1770; was trained by his uncle, Organist of the Minster; came to London, in 1789; was harpsichord player at Covent Garden Theatre under William Shield; wrote a number of glees, songs, and operatic pieces; was one of the founders of the Concercole Society, and died at Brompton in 1827. For further particulars, see Barrett's "History of Glees and Part-songs." Longmans and Co.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ACCRINGTON.—The last Concert of the season of the Choral Society was given in the Town Hall on the 11th ult. The first part of the Concert was occupied by Prout's dramatic Cantata Alfred. The principal vocalists were Mr. Charles Chille, Miss Fusselle, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. The choir by their performance reflected great credit both on themselves and the Conductor, Mr. Thalberg Brown. Mr. W. H. Robinson, Conductor of the Blackburn Vocal and Clitheroe Vocal Societies, was at the pianoforte, and Mr. T. E. Higham officiated at the harmonium. The second part of the Concert, of a miscellaneous character, commenced with a selection by the band, which numbered about sixteen performers, under the direction of Mr. A. Pollard.

ALFORD.—Gaul's Cantata The Holy City was sung by the Choral Society on the 5th ult. The performers engaged were Miss Vinnie Beaumont, Mr. Hayes, and Mr. Kitching. Mr. H. Brown conducted and Dr. Dodds presided at the pianoforte. The second part of the Concert consisted of miscellaneous sacred music.

AUDENSHAW.—On the 9th ult. a Concert took place at Red Hall Chapel, at which the choir, assisted by friends from Ashton, Denton, and Droylsden, gave some selections from Handel's Oratorio Judas Maccabæus. Mr. C. H. Waterhouse was the Organist and Mr. Charles Wakefield the Conductor. The principal vocalists were Miss Eaton and Mr. Faulkner. Organ solos by E. Townsend Driffield and by Mr. Waterhouse were well received. Miss Eaton sang, as her last piece, "Requiem Æternam," by Piccolomini, and the Concert closed with "The heavens are telling" (Haydn).

BARNESLEY.—The St. Cecilia Society gave a miscellaneous Concert, on Thursday, the 12th ult., in the Public Hall. Miss Dews (Manchester) was the principal vocalist. The first part was miscellaneous, and in the second part Stanford's Choral Ballad The Revenge was the chief item. Mr. Charles Bulmer was solo pianist, and the Conductor was Mr. K. S. Burton.

BASINGSTOKE.—The Choral Society gave its second Concert for this season in the Town Hall on the 5th ult. The 42nd Psalm (Mendelssohn) and Loreley (Mendelssohn), with Miss Bertha Moore as solo vocalist, were the chief items of the programme. One of the features of the Concert was the playing of two of Moszkowski's Pianoforte duets, "Nos. 1 and 4, German Rounds," by Mr. C. S. Macpherson and Mr. H. E. Powell, which gained for the performers a double encore. Two violin solos, well played by Mr. A. L. Spittle, some songs by Miss Bertha Moore, which were encored, and part-songs by the choir completed the programme. Miss Powell and Mr. C. S. Macpherson accompanied on the pianoforte and American organ respectively, and Mr. H. E. Powell conducted.

BELPER, DERBYSHIRE.—On Tuesday, the 3rd ult., a Concert was given in the Public Hall. The performers were Misses Holme, Miss Donnelly, Miss Fisher, Miss Cope, Miss Dawes, Miss Best, Rev. F. A. Friend, Mr. J. S. Lee, Masters Banks and Eley (Belper Church boys). Miss Holme was the solo pianist. Mr. W. W. Windle was solo Organist and Conductor.

BLACKBURN.—On Monday, the 9th ult., the St. Cecilia Society gave the second Concert of their thirteenth season in the Exchange Hall. The first portion of the Concert was occupied by Gade's Cantata, The Crusaders. The title furnishes the index to the theme. The solo parts were sung by Miss Frederika Taylor, Mr. Hugginson, and Mr. C. Banks, and the choruses were well sung. The St. Cecilia Society as a body has rarely acquitted itself better. In the second half of the programme, which was of a miscellaneous character, Miss Ada Duckworth and Miss Taylor sang. The band, selected from Mr. Hallé's orchestra, gave Sullivan's "Graceful Dance" in a charming manner, and Mr. Rooks conducted.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Two performances of Gounod's grand and impressive Oratorio The Redemption were given at the New Town Hall on the 18th ult. with success. The soloists engaged were Miss Sophie Robertson (Mrs. Stanley Stubbs), Madame Bolingbroke, Mr. William Nicholl, and Mr. Charles Kingsley. The chorus and orchestra consisted of 200 performers. Mr. J. T. Carrodus was the leader of the orchestra, Mr. T. A. Aldridge presided at the organ, and Signor La Camera conducted.

BURNLEY.—The Holy City (A. R. Gaul) was sung in Zion Chapel on the 22nd ult. Miss Marjory Eaton, Miss Dews, Messrs. Burrell and Arnold were the principals. The choruses were rendered with great correctness and precision by an augmented choir. Mr. Jackson, the Organist, played the Symphonies "Contemplation" and "Adoration" with great effect. The Choral Sanctus was sung by solo boys from Holy Trinity Choir, by permission of Mr. Watson.

CALNE, WILTS.—On Tuesday, the 3rd ult., Handel's Messiah was given in the Town Hall by the Musical Society. The soprano and contralto solos were taken by lady members of the Society, and Mr. D. Sutton Shepley and Mr. Fredericks, of Lichfield Cathedral, sang the bass and tenor solos. The choruses were given in a satisfactory manner. Mr. W. R. Pulein conducted.

CLECKHEATON.—The Philharmonic Society gave the second Concert of the season on Wednesday, the 25th ult., in the Victoria Hall. In the first part Mendelssohn's Athalie was the chief work given, and in the second part a miscellaneous selection, vocal and instrumental, was presented. The principal vocalists were Miss F. Coates, Miss Maud Kippax, Miss Marianne Tomlinson, and Mr. A. Rushforth. The band (leader, Mr. F. Knowles) and chorus gave good effect to the work they had to do. Mr. S. Midgley was Conductor and Accompanist, Mr. Herbert Thompson, M.A., LL.M., barrister-at-law, was the reader of the Lyrics in Athalie.

CLIFTON (BEDFORDSHIRE).—On Easter Day the Choral Services in All Saints' Church included some hymns, Calkin's sentences "If we say that we have no sin" and "To the Lord our God," the Te Deum, Benedictus, and Athanasian Creeds, sung to festival arrangements of Gregorian Tones, and the Nicene Creed to Helmore's plain song, together with Mr. W. B. Cook's setting of the Offertory Sentences. At Evensong the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Winchester's arrangement of the Roman Chant. The Anthems were "Hallelujah! Christ is risen" (Winchester) and "Christ is risen" (Sydenham). Mr. W. B. Cook was the Organist. The services were repeated on the 8th ult., when the Anthem at Evensong was "Worthy is the Lamb" (Messiah).

COCKERMOUTH.—The Harmonic Society gave their thirty-third Concert in the Drill Hall, on the 4th ult., when Judas Maccabæus was performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Conway, Miss Alice Bertenshaw, Mr. Kendal Thompson, and Mr. Kinnell. The orchestra comprised twenty-five members, Mr. F. W. Schofield, of Mr. Hallé's orchestra, being leader, the chorus numbering 120 performers. Mr. P. T. Freeman was the Conductor. The whole performance reflected great credit on the Society and its Conductor.

CONSETT.—The Choral Society gave a novel entertainment on the 3rd ult., which was highly appreciated. Balfe's Opera The Bohemian Girl was presented as a Recital, under the direction of Mr. Stephenson. Mr. Whatford, Miss Annie Cairns, Mr. G. W. Welsh, Mr. John Nutton, and Mr. Lewis Campion were the soloists. The choruses were fairly well rendered, and the instrumental accompaniments contributed largely to the success of the performance.

CROYDON.—A Students' Concert and Distribution of Prizes in connection with the Conservatoire of Music took place at the Public Hall on the 24th ult. The prizes were distributed by the Mayor, the successful students being Misses Crowder, Van der Heyde, Alice Carr, Janet Morland, Drayton, Mildred Harwood, Alice Knapp, Edith Eyre, Hopewell, Lamb, Lock, Middleton, Oliver, Purton, Wiffin, Man, Beatrice Peard, Greta Roper, Eva Bretherton, Mabel A. Smith, Adeline E. Ellis, Mildred Mabey, Irene Hatchett-Jones, Ethel M. Jenkins, Masters Reade and A. Leo Low. Several of the successful students took part in the Concert, together with the following Professors: Mr. J. Earnshaw, Mr. J. Boatwright, Miss Louisa Pyne, and

Mr. G. F. Geaussen (Principal), the students generally reflecting great credit on the training received in the Institution. Miss Lucy Churchill represented the elocution class, and gave a recitation with excellent effect.

CULLUMPTON, DEVON.—Mr. H. J. Taylor, F.C.O., who for the past eighteen months has been officiating as Organist and Choirmaster of the Parish Church, was last week the recipient of several gratifying presents from his friends in Cullumpton, on leaving the neighbourhood for his new appointment at Christ Church, Dover.

DARTFORD.—On Good Friday a performance of The Messiah was given, in the Parish Church, by the Choral Association. The solos were taken by Miss Ada Beck, Miss Aiston, Mr. Essenhigh, and Mr. Whatley. The Erith Choral Society gave a Concert (Mr. Richard Lemaire, Conductor) at the Public Hall, on the 18th ult., of Mendelssohn's Oratorio Elijah. The soloists were Miss Ada Beck, Miss Lottie West, Mr. Musgrove Tufnail, Mr. Lawrence Fryer, Mrs. Catliff, Miss Ellen, and Mrs. Norris. Mr. Musgrove Tufnail has seldom been heard to better advantage. Mr. Lemaire had the services of an efficient orchestra, of which Mr. Halfpenny was the leader. Mr. Sidney Naylor presided at the pianoforte with skill and ability, and Mr. F. Squires, F.C.O., Organist at Dartford Parish Church, accompanied at the harmonium.

DEMERRA.—The members of the Musical Society gave an invitation Concert at the Philharmonic Hall on the evening of the 22nd March. The programme submitted was of a miscellaneous character—unpretentious, short, well selected, and sufficiently varied. There were five soloists, Messrs. Baldwin, Brown, and Semple, Mrs. Wight and Mrs. Proudlock; but the bulk of the work fell upon the chorus, who were fairly efficient, while the orchestra of half-a-dozen instrumentalists showed decided improvement upon previous attempts. The programme commenced with a few selections from Barnett's Cantata on Coleridge's story of The Ancient Mariner, and the programme volunteered the information that the few numbers were given for the first time in Georgetown, and that it is intended to present the complete work at a future concert. Most of the accompaniments were very skilfully played by Mr. A. Smellie, and Mr. W. R. Colbeck, to whose untiring efforts the existence of the Musical Society is entirely due, was Conductor. Thanks to the good friends he rallies around him, music in Demerara is prevented from becoming a lost art.

DUFFIELD.—On Easter Monday Mr. W. W. Windle, Organist of Belper Church, gave an Organ Recital in the Free Methodist Chapel. Mr. Windle played works by Guilman, Batiste, Handel, &c., and a work from his own pen.

ENFIELD.—A Festival of the Choirs of the Free Churches of Enfield and the neighbourhood was held in Christ Church, Enfield, on the 18th ult. The idea originated with the Rev. H. S. Toms, the minister of that church, and was heartily carried out by the choirs concerned. The choirs taking part were those connected with Christ Church, Enfield; the London Road Baptist Chapel, Enfield; the Wesleyan Chapel, Enfield; the Congregational Chapel, Ponders End; the Congregational Chapel, Enfield Highway; and the Congregational Chapel, Winchmore Hill, and numbered 120 voices. The Festival partook of the nature of a religious service. Two hymns, taken from the New Congregational Church Hymnal, were sung by choir and congregation. The rest of the programme of music consisted of anthems, solos, a quartet, Mendelssohn's Motett Hear my prayer, and some organ pieces. The soloists were Miss Bertha Moore and Mr. Routledge Smith. The choir pieces were the "Te Deum," arranged to Gregorian tones by Dr. Stainer; Sir A. Sullivan's "O gladsome light" (unaccompanied); Dr. Steggall's "God came from Teman" Sir J. Goss's Anthem "O taste and see," and Dr. Stainer's Anthem "What are these." The chorus-singing was marked by precision and effect, and betokened careful practice under skilled training. Mr. Bernard Fison presided at the Organ, and Mr. F. G. Fitch conducted.

EPPING.—The Easter Day Services at St. John Baptist's Church were unusually well attended. At the morning service the Psalms were sung to their respective chants. The Anthem was "He is risen" (Caleb Simper). The evening service was fully choral, the Anthem being "Now on the first day of the week" (Henry Lahee). At the close of the services Miss Elsa Odell, Organist of the Church, played selections from The Messiah, ending with "Worthy is the Lamb" and the "Hallelujah" Chorus.

FAKENHAM.—A Concert was given by the Choral Class on the 3rd ult. under the conductorship of Mr. Loraine Holloway, A.C.O. The first part of the programme consisted of Dr. Stainer's Cantata The Daughter of Jairus, the solo parts being entrusted to Miss Fusselle, Mr. Wadsworth, and Mr. Frank May. The choruses were well given in every respect. The pieces in the second half of the Concert were very well selected. Miss Fusselle sang Venzano's vocal waltz "Ah che assorta." Mr. Frank May gave Mendelssohn's "I'm a roamer," and Mr. Wadsworth a new song, "Love's dream," composed by Loraine Holloway. The instrumental pieces comprised the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, by Miss Annie Holloway; Weber's Polonaise Brillante, arranged for two pianos by Liszt, and played by the Misses Holloway, and Chopin's Valse in E flat, given by Master F. Holloway.

FAVERSHAM.—Under the auspices of the Faversham Institute Singing and Instrumental Class, with Mr. R. Pearson as Conductor, a performance of Handel's Messiah was given in the Lecture Hall on the 4th ult. The choruses went exceedingly well. The solos were entrusted to Miss Ada Beck, Miss Josephine Cravino, Mr. C. Kenningham, and Mr. R. Rhodes.

FOLKESTONE.—An Organ Recital was given in aid of the expenses incurred in repairing and improving the organ, by Mr. Alfred Oake, on the 4th ult. Pieces by Handel, Archer, Mendelssohn, S. Bennett, Lemmens, Clark, Stainer, Cowen, and Lemaire formed the programme. The Rev. H. A. Wansbrough, M.A., was the solo vocalist.—An Organ Recital was given in St. Michael's, by Mr. J. H. Holloway, on the 16th ult. The pieces played were selected from the works of Bach, Mendelssohn, Bennett, and Beethoven, which were interspersed with songs by Mr. H. Pope and Master G. Lemmey.

FROME.—The Creation was performed at Wesley Chapel, on the 12th ult., with full band and chorus. Mr. T. Grant, the Organist of the chapel, was Conductor; the organist was Mr. H. Chislett, and the leader was Mr. W. E. Cox. The principal vocalists were Miss Annie Lee, Mr. E. T. Morgan, and Mr. D. Harrison. The chorus, which numbered about sixty voices, acquitted themselves in a highly satisfactory manner, the whole performance being very successful.

GALWAY.—A new Choral Society gave a most successful Concert here on the 10th ult. The programme included Cowen's Rose Maiden, the soloists being Miss Adelaide Mullen, Miss Moon, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. T. Hughes. Dr. Biggs conducted, and Mr. F. Hogben accompanied throughout. A feature of the programme was Mr. C. J. Wood's clever playing of Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo in E.

GOOLE.—The Philharmonic Society gave Coward's Magna Charta, on the 4th ult., with Miss Vinnie Beaumont, Mr. Dunkerton, and Mr. Billington as soloists. Mr. W. H. Smith, of Hull, conducted.

HALSTEAD.—Mr. George Leake gave a Concert on the 5th ult. in the Town Hall, assisted by Mr. Hubert Armfield (violin) and Mr. A. R. Blagrove (violinello). The programme consisted of chamber music by Niels Gade, Chopin, De Beriot, Beethoven, Ersfeld, Dunkler, Bach, and Paganini. The vocal music was entrusted to Mrs. Carlisle.

HAWICK.—On the evening of the 27th ult. the Sacred Harmonic Society gave a performance of Gounod's trilogy Mors et Vita. The Committee were fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Dambmann's celebrated band from Edinburgh. The soloists were—Mrs. Clark, Mrs. Creser, Mr. Verney Binns, and Mr. Wallis A. Wallis. The performance all through was a very creditable one, when we consider the difficult task the Society had undertaken, the choral singing throughout being admirable. The rendering of the chorus "Confutatis maledictis," the "Sanctus," and "Dies iræ," as well as a "Requiem æternam" in the Requiem, was very commendable. Mr. W. Fiddes-Wilson conducted with ability, and deserves much praise for having given so successful a rendering of Gounod's work.

HERNE.—On Easter Day the musical arrangements at the venerable Parish Church included Elvey's Anthem "Christ being raised," the Morning, Communion, and Evening Services being respectively Tours in F, Woodward in E flat, and Parry in D, all of which were given under the direction of the Organist and Choirmaster, Mr. Alfred Carey. On Easter Monday the choir, assisted by friends, and conducted by the Rev. J. R. Buchanan, the Vicar, gave a Concert of Sacred Music, selected from the works of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, and Gounod. The soloists were Miss Mildred Dubois, Mr. John F. Hill, Mr. H. Scott, and others. Mrs. Gray was the accompanist.

HERNE BAY.—At the services in the Parish Church, on Easter day, both morning and evening, Dr. Stainer's fine Anthem "They have taken away my Lord" was sung. The latter service was fully choral, and concluded with the "Hallelujah" Chorus. A service for the school children was held in the afternoon in the Parochial Room.

HIGH WYCOMBE.—The Choral Association gave its third and last Concert of the season in the Town Hall on the 9th ult. The chief item in the programme was Bennett's May Queen, which was well rendered. The second part contained songs by Pinsuti, Cowen, Gordigiani, and Mozart. Mr. W. C. Hann played some violinello solos by Godard, Popper, and Dunkler, and, with Mr. J. G. Wrigley, who also conducted, Mendelssohn's Variations in D.

HOUGHTON-LE-SPRING.—On Easter Monday, the 2nd ult., Handel's Judas Maccabeus was given in the Wesleyan Chapel, with full orchestral accompaniments. The solo parts were sustained by Miss Farror (Sunderland), Miss C. Bellas (Newcastle), Mr. Welsh, and Mr. Grice (Durham Cathedral). Mr. J. G. Craggs conducted, and Miss A. Leonard was the Organist.

LEFORD.—The Vocal Union gave its third Concert of the present season in the Reading Room, on Good Friday last, the chief items being Mozart's Mass in C (No. 1) and Weber's Mass in G. The principal parts were sustained by Madame Clara West, Miss Lottie West, Mr. Herbert Clinch, and Mr. Arthur Taylor in a highly artistic and effective manner. The accompaniments were played by a small orchestra practising in connection with the Vocal Union, with professional assistance. The Choir showed marked improvement and the Concert was from an artistic point of view most successful, the "Donna nobis pacem" in Weber's and the "Gloria" and "Credo" in Mozart's Mass being particularly deserving of notice. Mr. A. Storr conducted.

LEAMINGTON.—The musical Festival given in St. Alban's Church, in the week commencing the 8th ult., comprised Costa's Eli, Handel's Messiah, a Mendelssohn selection, and several miscellaneous selections, vocal and instrumental, supported by local amateurs; together with Organ Recitals by Mr. E. Roberts West (who also conducted), which were very successful. An orchestra of twenty performers and a choir of fifty voices gave good effect to the pieces. The duties of Secretary were discharged by Mrs. Unett. The Festival concluded with a service at Evensong on the 15th ult.

LEEDS.—The Concert which Mr. John Dykes and Herr Heinrich Dittmar gave on the 16th ult. in the Philosophical Hall, was chiefly notable as introducing a young musician who has recently made a highly promising debut in London, and in whose welfare local associations give Leeds people an interest. Besides appearing as a pianist, Mr. Dykes submitted an example of his powers as a composer, in the form of a Trio in E minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violinello. This work received a very attentive hearing and had a flattering reception, to which its cleverness in many respects entitled it. It would hardly be just to expect any settled or matured style from so young a musician, and Mr. Dykes exhibits the traces of various influences. The training Mr. Dykes received under Madame Schumann and the late Herr Raff has been well bestowed. He has learnt the lesson of accuracy, which so many eminent pianists disdain. His touch is firm, yet delicate; while, as a rule, the expression of the composer under treatment is well brought out. His solos included a couple of Chopin pieces and a couple of charming trifles by Raffi, bracketed with Rubinstein's Valse Caprice. It was in these latter, perhaps, that he shone most. Herr Dittmar is an exceptionally clever violinist. He played finely in the opening trio and in Mendelssohn's D minor, and his solos by Vieuxtemps and Spohr further displayed his superb tone and admirable technique. M. Veerman, the violoncellist, also deserves commendation. Some songs were very tastefully contributed by Miss Amy Brook.

LONDON.—On March 27 the choir of St. Columb's Cathedral gave a performance of Haydn's Passion, under the direction of Mr. D. C. Jones, Mus. Bac., Organist. The solos were taken by Master H. Simmonds and Messrs. Ward, Bromley, Cattley, and Hemmingway.—A highly successful Concert was given on the 10th ult. by the St. Columb's Choral Union, when Handel's Acis and Galatea was performed with full band accompaniment. The second part was miscellaneous. The principals engaged were Miss Fannie Sellars, Mr. H. Cattley, and Mr. J. Hemmingway. Solo violin, Mr. R. Jones; Conductor, Mr. D. C. Jones.

LYTHAM.—A Concert was given at the Baths Assembly Room, on the 2nd ult., by the Choral Union. The principals were Madame Laura Smart, Madame Emilie Young, Mr. Eaton Batty, and Mr. Frank Weston. The items of the programme were selected with care, and with scarcely a single exception they were exceedingly well rendered. Miss Fell discharged the duties of accompanist with ability, and the Conductor was Mr. W. F. Holden.

MAIDENHEAD.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Bennett's May Queen at their last Concert, on the 10th ult., in the Town Hall, under the direction of Mr. J. G. Wrigley, Mus. Bac., Oxon. The solo parts were sung by Madame Lita Jarratt, Miss Thurlow, Mr. Dyved Lewys, and Mr. David Hughes. The second part of the programme included songs by Cowen, Hobbs, Hatton, &c., and Schumann's "Warum" and Novellette in F (No. 1), admirably played by Mr. Wrigley. The choruses were fairly well sung and the whole Concert was most enjoyable.

MAIDSTONE.—Dr. Stainer's Cantata The Daughter of Jairus was performed on the 4th ult., at the Parish Church, by the choir, with organ accompaniment.

MALTA.—Special services were held at the Collegiate Church of St. Paul, on the Sunday evenings of Lent, at which the several scenes of Gaul's Passion Service were sung by the choir, accompanied by a small orchestra and the organ. The services were productive of great good to the large congregations which each week assembled to hear them. On Good Friday and Easter Day the greater part of The Messiah was sung by the choir and auxiliaries. The result was remarkably satisfactory from a musical point of view, although all the vocalists were volunteers. The thanks of the English community are due to those who organised, and all those who helped to carry to success the enterprise.

MELBOURNE, DERBYSHIRE.—On the 17th ult. the Glee and Madrigal Society gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul, with full band and chorus. Miss Kate Fusselle, who made her first appearance at these Concerts, sang the soprano music. Miss Haimes gave every satisfaction in the contralto music. Mr. A. Bambridge sang "Be thou faithful unto death" (violinello obbligato, Mr. T. A. Adcock) with much expression. Messrs. P. M. Warren and W. Crowther divided the bass solos. The band and chorus acquitted themselves in a highly satisfactory manner. Mr. Wilson conducted.

MOUNTAIN ASH.—A performance of Spohr's Cantata God, Thou art Great, was given on the evening of Thursday, the 5th ult., at St. Margaret's Church. The principal vocalists were the Hon. P. G. Bruce, Miss J. Shipton, and Miss M. Jones. The choruses were sung with much precision and due attention to light and shade. Mr. Mackenzie played a violinello solo, with organ accompaniment by Miss Colston, Organist. The organ was supported by brass and string instruments. Conductor, Mr. M. Morgan.

MUSSELBURGH.—The Choral Society brought its third season to a close on the evening of the 19th ult., in the Town Hall, when they produced two important, though short, choral works of the modern school. The first of these was The Bride, by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, and it speaks well for the progress this young Society has made that all the difficulties were so successfully overcome; and the second was The Sun Worshipers, by A. Goring Thomas, which had already been produced at a former Concert. Its reproduction was amply justified by the accuracy and verve with which all the numbers were rendered. The solo parts in both works were taken by Miss Charlotte Clark (soprano) and Mr. George Wilson (tenor), and are especially deserving of praise. A small orchestra played the accompaniments in a satisfactory manner. The other numbers were very enjoyable. Miss Moore presided at the pianoforte, and we must again congratulate the Society on having such an accomplished musician as accompanist; Mr. R. W. Pentland assisted on the harmonium; Mr. George Maxwell was the Conductor, and to him, no doubt, is due the very marked improvement which the Society has made.

NAPIER, N.Z.—Mr. Spackman's Concert, at the Theatre Royal, on February 7, was very successful. Handel's "Occasional" Overture, and vocal and instrumental pieces by Hatton, Sir H. S. Oakeley, Bishop, Barnby, with Mendelssohn's Overture Son and Stranger, were all well performed. A duet Sonata, by Mozart, scored by H. G. Spackman, was the next item, the choir then contributing Hatton's beautiful composition "Stars of the Summer Night." An arrangement of the Adagio from the Sonata Pathétique, by Beethoven, was played by Miss E. Williams, Messrs. Dicken, Humphries, and Spackman—pianoforte, violin, violoncello, and organ. Schubert's Overture Rosamunde was finely played by the orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. Spackman. The Napier amateurs are to be heartily congratulated on their efforts. A violin solo, "Fantasia sur Norma," by Alard, was played by Mr. Herman, and in response to an encore he gave Raff's Cavatina. Miss E. Williams and Mr. L. Armstrong contributed some songs, and the Concert was an artistic success.

NEWBURY.—Under the auspices of the Literary and Scientific Institute, the Orchestral Union gave an evening Concert on Tuesday, the 3rd ult. The Overture to Le Nozze de Figaro, Haydn's "Farewell" Symphony, Boccherini's Minuet, and other selections, were well performed by the orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. Eatwell. Miss Alice Penfold sang Braga's "La Serenata," Mr. T. E. Gatehouse playing the violin obbligato; Miss Hopson gained an encore for "The Sailor's Knot," mainly, we imagine, from the sentiment conveyed by the words; and Mr. E. L. Staples, a light but pleasing tenor, was equally successful in the song "When love is nigh." Messrs. Staples, Cary, Hawkins, and Stradling formed a vocal quartet, the latter gentleman also giving "The lads in blue"; Miss Clara Draper displayed considerable command over the violoncello in a solo by Dunkler, and Mr. Gatehouse played several violin soli with much success.

NORTHLEET.—The Choral Society gave their Fourth Concert in the Factory Hall, on the 17th ult., when Gaul's Joan of Arc and a miscellaneous selection were given. The soloists were Miss Tipple, Mr. Maxwell Tod, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail, who rendered the various solos in a manner worthy of all praise. The choruses were excellently rendered by the Society. Mr. J. Carter Jenner was the Conductor and Mr. G. R. Ceiley accompanied.

NORWICH.—On Easter Tuesday, after Evensong, a performance of Sacred Music was given in the Church of St. Mark, Lakenham, by the Choir, assisted by a few friends numbering about fifty voices in all. The selection consisted of solos and choruses from Judas Maccabeus and The Messiah. Mr. J. W. Muirhead, Organist of the Church, conducted, and Mr. C. H. Duffield, Organist of St. John's, Timber Hill, presided at the organ. The offertory was in aid of the Church Restoration Fund.

OLDHAM.—At the fourth Concert of the season, on the 19th ult., Judas Maccabeus was given by the St. Cecilia Musical Society, at the King Street Co-operative Hall. The principals were Mrs. Wood, Miss Karell, Mr. C. Chadderton, and Mr. J. Whittaker (Fallsforth). The band and chorus numbered about 110. The St. Cecilia band has been formed only during the current season, and it is very encouraging to note its rapid progress. The Conductor was Mr. J. F. Slater, F.C.O., who is to be congratulated upon raising the choir to such a degree of excellence. The recitatives were accompanied by Mr. John Lawton on the harmonium, and the violinello obbligato in the air, "Ah, wretched Israel," was played by Mr. Smith.

PEEL.—A selection from Mendelssohn's Oratorio St. Paul was given on the 12th ult. in the New Church, by the Douglas Vocal and Peel Choral Societies, amalgamated for the occasion, and assisted by a number of friends from Ramsey. Mr. F. Broad, F.C.O., Organist and Choirmaster at King William's College, officiated as Conductor; Miss M. L. Wood was the Organist, and Mr. Harry Wood (violin) and Master D. Wood (flute) assisted in the accompaniments. The soloists were Mrs. Friend, Mrs. Bruhl, Miss Boyde, Mr. J. E. Kelly, Mr. J. Lucas, and Mr. J. Cannell. The chorus sang well and the work reflected the greatest credit on all concerned.

PENRITH.—The sixth annual Concert of the Penrith Musical Society was given in the Crown Hotel Assembly Room, on the 13th ult. The first part of the programme consisted of J. F. Barnett's Cantata The Ancient Mariner. The principal solos fell to Miss Holt, Mrs. Monnington, Mr. Holberry Hagyard, and Mr. Salkeld. The choruses were very creditably performed. The band consisted of twenty-one instruments, led by Mr. James Crozier, of Carlisle; Miss Nicholson presided at the pianoforte, Miss Openshaw at the harmonium, and the Rev. W. J. Marsh was the Conductor. The second half of the programme consisted of vocal and instrumental selections. Miss Bessie Holt sang "Angels ever bright and fair," accompanied on the harp by Madame Frost, and as an encore she gave "Home, sweet home."

PORLOCK, SOMERSET.—Mendelssohn's Lauda Sion was given as the Anthem during the service on the 15th ult., in the Parish Church. The choruses were sustained by the Church Choir, with but few extra voices, and there was an orchestra of twenty-two instruments, with Mr. Sadler as leader.—At a Concert, on the 16th ult., the Second Symphony of Beethoven was performed by the orchestra. Solos were played by Mr. Sadler (violin), by Colonel Twyte (horn), and Captain Acland Twyte (clarinet). Two movements of Beethoven's Septet were given. The vocalists were Miss Amy Bull, Mr. Powell (of Taunton), and Dr. Ollerhead.

REDRUTH, CORNWALL.—Mendelssohn's Elijah was given by the Choral Society, on the 9th ult., in the United Methodist Chapel. The chief vocalists were Miss Kate Fusselle, Miss Lily Rowe, Mr. Morgan (of Bristol), and Mr. Montague Worlock. Master Leo Heath took the part of the Youth. The chorus, numbering about 100, sang well, the points were taken up with precision, and the lights and shades of expression were closely observed. Mr. J. Hele, Mus. Bac., presided at the organ. Mr. John Pardew led his quintet of strings most efficiently. The Conductor was Mr. R. H. Heath.

RYDE, I.W.—On Thursday, the 5th ult., a new Cantata entitled Drusilda, by James C. Beazley, was produced for the first time. The performance was very successful, and reflected credit on all who took part in it.—The Choral Union, under the able leadership of Miss Margaret F. Fowler, gave a very spirited and successful rendering of Mendelssohn's St. Paul on Monday evening, the 16th ult. The tone and precision of the chorus were excellent. An efficient orchestra (composed mainly of local amateurs) performed the accompaniments, and the solos were taken by Miss Mary Biiss, Mrs. Seymour Kelly, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Vaughan Edwardes.

SALTASH.—The Choral Society gave a Concert at the Guildhall on the 13th ult. Gaul's Cantata Joan of Arc occupied the chief place on the programme, and was followed by a miscellaneous selection. The performers were Miss Hicks, of Torquay; Mr. Mason, Vicar Choral of Lichfield Cathedral; and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail, R.A.M. The chorus numbered seventy voices. Mr. John Pardew and Mr. J. W. Wingate were the principal violinists. Miss B. Tregillus was at the organ, and Miss Tinson, of Liskeard, accompanied. Mr. A. C. Fauld discharged the duties of Conductor.

SEVENOAKS.—An excellent Concert was given by the Kippington Choral Society, on the 23rd ult., when Mendelssohn's Athalie constituted the chief feature. The principal vocalists were Miss Ethel Winn, who, notwithstanding she was suffering from a severe cold, sang with much spirit, and Madame Leonora Pople, who displayed a refined style in the contralto music. Subordinate parts were sung by Mrs. Nugent and Miss Wilson; the connective verses were recited with due dramatic effect by Mr. Charles Fry. The choir, although wanting firmness in attack, sang, on the whole, very commendably; and a small, but efficient orchestra, amongst whom were Mr. W. F. Reed, Mr. Spelman, Mr. Whitehead, and other professional instrumentalists, gave a very spirited rendering of the Overture and War March. Much credit is due to Mr. Henry Spain, the Hon. Conductor, for his conscientious care in conducting, which ensured a very satisfactory result. In addition to the vocalists named, Miss Buchner, Mrs. Spain, Miss Parson, and Mr. Hardcastle appeared in the miscellaneous second part, and a pianoforte solo was given by Miss Lilly McLaughlin.

SHREWSBURY.—The Harmonic Society gave a most successful performance of Dr. Heap's Maid of Astolat, under the conductorship of the composer, on the 12th ult. The soloists, Miss Bertha Moore, Miss Alice James, Messrs. Lloyd James and Horrex, rendered their respective parts in an able, effective manner, and the band, small, though of excellent quality, contributed in no slight degree to the general excellence of the performance. The choruses had been prepared with much care by the Society's Conductor, Mr. Lea.

SHROPSHIRE.—On the 6th ult. the united parishes of Longnor and Leebwood held a Concert in aid of their Schoolroom fund. The performers were Miss J. Hope-Edwards, Miss K. Corbett (pianoforte), Miss L. Jones, Miss A. Corbett, Mr. E. Gamble, Rev. Donald Carr (Vicar of Woolstaston), Mr. James Jones, Mr. R. Dayus, and a Glee Party.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Two grand orchestral and vocal Concerts (sacred) were given in the Philharmonic Hall on Good Friday. The vocalists were Mrs. Ivimey (soprano) and Mr. Charles Geddes (baritone). The orchestral portion of the programme was splendidly performed by a string band of thirty performers, comprising all the leading professional instrumentalists of the town. Mr. G. Howes conducted.

STAMFORD.—The Musical Society gave its first Concert at the Assembly Rooms, on Friday, the 6th ult. The first part of the Concert consisted of Dr. Stainer's Daughter of Jairus. The orchestra was led by Mr. A. Rippon, of Stamford, and there was a chorus of about sixty. The soloists were Miss Duddington, Mr. W. Clarke, and Mr. J. B. Smith, all of Peterborough. The second part of the Concert was of a miscellaneous character. The Conductor was Mr. Haydon Hare, Organist of All Saints' Church, pupil of Dr. Keeton, of Peterborough.

STOURPORT.—The members of the Musical Society gave a very successful Concert (the last of the season) in the Town Hall, on the 5th ult. The programme consisted of Sir Sterndale Bennett's The Woman of Samaria, and a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Mrs. Glover-Eaton, Miss Hemmings, Mr. George Blandford, Mr. Edward Noke, all of whom gave great satisfaction. In the second part Mr. G. Wallace Hill (of Birmingham) gave two violoncello solos with much ability. Mr. J. Irving Glover played the harmonium and Mr. J. L. Wedley the pianoforte. Mr. Fred. J. Griffiths (Organist and Choirmaster of All Saints, Willden) conducted.

SUTTON AND MANSFIELD.—The United Harmonic Societies gave two Concerts in Easter week, the first at the National Schools, Sutton-in-Ashfield, on Easter Tuesday, the 3rd ult., the second at the Wesleyan Chapel, Mansfield, on the following day, Haydn's Creation (Parts 1 and 2) was the chief work selected, with a miscellaneous second part. The vocalists were Miss Adelaide Mullen, Miss Mitchell, Mr. Charles Blagbro, and Mr. Bingley Shaw. The band and chorus consisted of 200 performers. The Leader was Mr. J. E. Pickerrill, Nottingham; the Organist was Mr. T. Pickard, and the Conductor, Mr. Arthur Howard Bonser.

WAKEFIELD.—On the 28th ult. a special Musical Service was held in the Parish Church, when the Oratorio The Passion of our Lord, by C. H. Graun, was given by an augmented choir of about sixty voices, including a number of lady vocalists. Mr. M. H. Peacock, the honorary choirmaster, may be heartily congratulated upon the success of the service, and he deserves the thanks of the musical public of Wakefield for making them acquainted with the work. All the concerted portions were given with much expression and precision. The arias in the work were omitted, but the necessary connective recitatives were given by Mrs. W. A. Statter, Mr. J. M. Walker, Mr. A. Westwood, and Mr. W. Radley. The trio "Lament and weep" was sung by Miss Wright, Mrs. H. Wood, and Mr. Walker. The accompaniments were played by Mr. Hardy, who also performed as a fitting introduction to the work Bach's Fugue in E flat, the "St. Anne."

WALSALL.—On Easter Sunday at the Parish Church, after evensong, the second part of Gounod's Redemption was performed, the choir being largely augmented for the occasion, the full orchestra being most ably led by Mr. Fred. Ward, of Birmingham. The Redemption was preceded by the Adagio from Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, and, after the blessing, Handel's Overture to the Occasional Oratorio was played. The Conductor was Mr. John E. Jeffries, Organist of the Church, and Mr. Horace Chant was the Organist. The whole was a most efficient and satisfactory rendering, given with befitting reverence; and the behaviour of the vast congregation left nothing to be desired.

WARMINGHAM.—On Easter Tuesday the Grammar School gave its annual Invitation Concert. The programme included Haydn's First Mass, the Overture to Zampa, Mr. Wentworth Bennett's Flute Concerto, Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, and Mendelssohn's chorus, "Thanks be to God" (Elijah). There was a complete orchestra, and Dr. Alcock and his son, Mr. T. C. Alcock, head and second masters respectively, conducted. The Mass was admirably performed, and the singing of the School Choir showed careful preparation. The School has already performed at its previous Easter Concerts the following among other works:—Beethoven, seven Symphonies (four entire), Ruins of Athens, Overtures to Prometheus, Coriolan, Choral Fantasia, &c.; Weber, Overtures Oberon, Der Freischütz, Jubel, Jubilee Cantata, Preciosa (complete), &c.; Handel, Acis and Galatea, Coronation Anthem, &c.; Haydn, Spring, First Mass, Symphonies in C, D, &c.; Smart's Bride of Dunkerron; Mendelssohn, G Minor Concerto, Part-songs, &c.

WATERFORD.—On Easter Sunday the services at St. Patrick's Church were effectively rendered by the choir of about thirty voices. The Anthem "Now is Christ risen," by Allen, with the other parts of the services, were hearty, reverent, and appropriate, and reflected much credit on the Organist, Mr. Charles Davies. On this occasion the Psalms were chanted for the first time in the history of this church. Mr. Davies played as voluntaries, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," "The trumpet shall sound," and "Worthy is the Lamb."—A performance of Haydn's Creation was given, on Thursday, the 12th ult., in the Protestant Hall, by the Cathedral Choir, under the leadership of Mr. Morland, the Cathedral Organist. The parts of Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael were taken by Master Alick Chesnut and Messrs. Atherton and Fielding respectively. On the whole, the performance was fairly good; Mr. Morland presided at the harmonium, and Mrs. Behm at the pianoforte.

WHALLEY.—The Vocal Society brought its season to a close on Friday, the 13th ult., the programme including Wreck of the Hesperus (Anderson) and Hear my Prayer (Mendelssohn). Mr. W. H. Robinson, of Blackburn, was the Conductor.

WREXHAM.—The Philharmonic Society gave its first Concert of the present season on the 16th ult., in the Public Hall. The first part of the performance consisted of Bennett's Woman of Samaria, the second part of Mendelssohn's Loreley, and a short miscellaneous selection. The principal artists were Miss Adelaide Mullen, Miss Coyte Turner, Messrs. Beaumont and W. H. Brereton. The chorus acquitted themselves admirably in the Cantata, the attack being excellent and the light and shade carefully marked throughout. Loreley was performed for the first time in the neighbourhood, and made a great impression. The band, chiefly from Mr. Hallé's orchestra, was ably led by Mr. T. Shaw. The work was brilliantly sung and evoked the warmest applause. A word of special praise must be given to Miss Mullen, who infused much dramatic power into the very trying soprano music, which she sang admirably. The Rev. C. Hylton Stewart, Precentor of Chester, conducted.

VIEWSLEY.—On the 16th ult. Dr. Stainer's Cantata The Daughter of Jairus was given before a crowded audience in St. Matthew's Schools, by the Choral Society, as the first part of their programme, which also included solos, duets, quartets, part-songs, and instrumental selections. The performers were Miss Edith Price, Miss Amy Becket, Messrs. Oliver, Hugh Roy, Fulker, Thonger, Hall, and Bragg, vocalists; Mr. Neighbour, violin; Miss Becket, pianoforte; Mr. English, organ. Mr. Davis conducted.

RUDALL, CARTE AND CO.'S

INDESTRUCTIBLE EBONITE

CLARINETS, FLUTES, OBOES,
BASSOONS, &c.

MESSRS. RUDALL, CARTE AND CO. beg to draw special attention to their Clarinets, Oboes, Bassoons, Flutes, and Piccolos of Ebonite or Vulcanized India-rubber, which material they have been for some time using with the most satisfactory results.

Ebonite has no grain, and is impervious to moisture. It can therefore neither warp nor crack, and is consequently eminently suitable for these instruments. It does away with a very great trouble of clarinet players—i.e., the necessity for having the mouthpiece frequently relaid, in consequence of the moisture of the mouth having destroyed the "lay."

The Clarinets in Ebonite which have been made during the last few years, and the numerous Flutes that have been made of this material, by this firm, for orchestral and other purposes, have thoroughly tested it in every way. The tone is everything that could be desired in quality and volume, and it is very easy to produce. Some poor kinds of Ebonite have been made abroad with not very satisfactory results, but Messrs. RUDALL, CARTE and Co. can recommend these instruments with perfect confidence, as during the whole period that they have been using the material regularly—i.e., for fifteen or sixteen years—they have not had one instance of an instrument cracking, and they have found them to give universal satisfaction.

The difficulty of making instruments in Ebonite prevented their being introduced at first, but that having been overcome, and experience having shown them to be eminently durable, and very beautiful in tone, there is no doubt that they will now carry all before them.

RUTH

A PASTORAL CANTATA

Words by EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"'Ruth' is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"'Ruth' has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

PERFORMED IN THE TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM, ON TWELVE OCCASIONS.

Vocal Score, paper cover, 2s.; ditto, paper boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 4s. The Choruses (only) in Vocal Score, for Musical Societies, paper cover, 1s.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL AND DRAMATIC CANTATA

WORDS BY FREDERICK ENOCHMUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

"In abstract musical merit we are inclined to regard it as an advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and one of them, 'On to the battle, on,' is exceedingly spirited. An 'Ave Maria,' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."—Athenæum.

"As in his other works, particularly 'The Holy City,' the composer writes admirably for the solo voices, and equally well for the chorus. . . . The fact must strongly be insisted upon that 'Joan of Arc' is a work which is bound to be widely taken up by provincial societies, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful, and will probably be considered the gem of the work."—London Figaro.

"'Joan of Arc' was last night produced for the first time in the metropolis by Mr. McNaught and the admirable choir of the Bow and Bromley Institute. . . . Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of provincial and other choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."—Daily News.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."—Referee.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer. From beginning to end 'Joan of Arc' is marked by perfect and natural melody, a smoothness that is really delightful, and instrumentation that indicates the touch of a masterhand."—Liverpool Courier.

"The music from beginning to end is of the highest order, both in form, construction, dramatic expression, and religious colouring. Particularly beautiful is the great wealth of melody, which carries with it the impression that it is the outcome of the inspiration and genius of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City,' . . . 'Joan of Arc' is one of the most melodious, refined, and expressive works that has come under our notice."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it, nor any number which can be accused of impairing the dignity of a composition having a lofty aim."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The choruses are always effectively written—the solos are extremely melodious; deserves, and will probably achieve, great popularity."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Journal.

"There is a reality about the whole tone of the work that seems to bring every scene in the life of the French heroine vividly before us."—Border Counties Herald.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."—Birmingham Daily Times.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. The music displays more skilful workmanship than any music we have received from the same hands. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Now with matured experience and ripened scholarship he gives to the town which has received and welcomed his first triumphs his magnum opus, 'Joan of Arc.'"—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"The Cantata, from the first bar to the last, is rich in melody, beautiful harmonic combinations, and clever orchestration. The beautiful 'Ave Maria' is a splendid example of pure and fervent church music, but there are so many exquisite points of merit in Mr. Gaul's latest work that they hardly need detailing. Taking the work as a whole, it bids fair to become a great favourite with all choral societies."—Birmingham Weekly Post.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."—Manchester Guardian.

Price, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; ditto, boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100. (Ent. Sta. Hall.)

The gratuitous loan of Instrumental Parts may be had on application to the Composer, and full liberty is given to perform this Cantata and to insert the words in any programme without further permission.

"SONGS OF A SUMMER'S DAY," a Collection of Four Vocal Duets by FRANK J. SAWYER, and entitled respectively 'Dawn,' 'Noon,' 'Twilight,' and 'Night,' is a pretty notion prettily carried out. The composer's associations with the various divisions of the day are evidently all cheerful ones, that character being imparted to 'Night' by the tripping of merry elves. Perhaps, for the sake of a contrast, this last subject might have been treated more quietly with advantage: but these Duets, as they stand, are interesting and effective, and possess qualities to recommend them to the attention of vocalists."—Musical World, April 14, 1888. THE ORGANIST'S QUARTERLY JOURNAL will have attained its twentieth year of publication in December next, and "there can be no doubt," said the Choir, "this serial gave an impetus to the production of organ music, which has been of the greatest value to organists and organ writers throughout the British speaking countries."

NEW MUSIC for HARVEST FESTIVALS

COMPOSED BY

Mus. Doc., Cantab.; Fell. Coll. Org.,

88, TYRWHITT ROAD, ST. JOHN'S, S.E.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME.

ANTHEM. Price 6d.

This Anthem (24 pages) is a setting, for festival purposes, of the popular Harvest Hymn by the late Dean Alford, and in it Sir George J. Elvey's well-known tune to the same words ("St. George") is introduced in several ways.

DESCRIPTION.

1st part: Original work, consisting of sentences in unison for Tenors and Basses in Chorus (or Bass Solo), then for Trebles and Altos in unison (or Treble Solo), then Tenors and Basses in two-part vocal harmony, followed by Trebles and Altos in two-part harmony, then by full Chorus. 2nd part: Quartet or Semi-chorus, in which "St. George" first appears as a theme for the bass voice, while the other parts sing various counterpoints. 3rd part (a Chorus) gives the theme to the Tenors, while Trebles and Altos sing in unison an independent melody, the Bass also having independent counterpoint. 4th part (which may be a verse if desired) gives the theme to Trebles and Altos in unison, while Tenors and Basses sing in imitative florid counterpoint, then, after a reprise of the first part with its unison passages (or Solo), two-part vocal harmony and chorus, the theme finally appears as a grand unison in which the congregation are to join.

To facilitate the preparation of the Anthem by choirs, breath marks are given, and orchestral letters (which will save trouble in rehearsal by enabling reference to be made back to almost any possible starting point) are also given. Choirmasters' attention is also directed to the frequency of the theme in first one part and then another, facilitating the "getting up" by the choir.

For choirs who find the Anthem too long, a curtailed edition (16 pages, beginning at letter Q) will be issued, price 4d.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME.

VARIATIONS FOR THE ORGAN. Price 3s. net.

This piece is issued (with illustrated title) as a companion piece to "Hark, the herald angels sing," and consists of an Introduction and thirteen Variations upon Sir G. J. Elvey's popular hymn tune "St. George," which is so well known in connection with that hymn. The variations are not dependent upon each other, therefore when the whole are not required, a selection of the easiest can be made, and in place of the last, the hymn might be sung. It is clearly printed in large clear type (uniform with the "Volontaires") upon eighteen plates, is profusely fingered and pedal-marked throughout, with full instructions for its proper rendering, is set for a two-manual organ, and the variations are easy to play.

DESCRIPTION.

Introduction, Theme.—Var. 1, left-hand, and species counterpoint and no pedal; Var. 2, chromatic harmonies; Var. 3, theme in tenor, accompanied by 4th species counterpoint; Var. 4, with independent melody for left-hand; Var. 5, with theme concealed by ornamentation; Var. 6, theme on pedals; Var. 7, with running counterpoint; Var. 8, theme in inner part, and independent melody above it; Var. 9, florid passages for alternate hands; Var. 10, with carillons; Var. 11, with carillons, continued; Var. 12, minor; Var. 13, Alla marcia.

OFFICE FOR THE HOLY COMMUNION

(INCLUDING BENEDICTUS AND AGNUS DEI)

FOR PAROCHIAL AND GENERAL USE

EDITED BY

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price One Shilling each.

Church-music which is modern in form, interesting to a choir, and devotional in effect, whilst also of easy execution and of moderate compass for the voices, is certainly much needed in these days when choral societies are almost universal. This want is specially felt with regard to music for the Office of Holy Communion, and it is hoped that these services will be found well within the capabilities of an ordinary choir, yet not wanting in an effort to give due expression to the solemnity of the words. PROSPECTUS.

Some years have passed since Mr. Joseph Bennett began, in THE MUSICAL TIMES, a series of biographical notices which are still far from ended. The original purpose was a limited one—namely, to throw light upon the personality of famous musicians by means of extracts selected and arranged from their letters and other writings. Hence the series had for first title "The Great Composers, sketched by themselves."

Consequent upon the remarkable favour with which the notices were received, it was determined to extend their scope, and, while making prominent the Masters' own testimony, to deal with each subject in a complete biographical form, as far as allowed by the limits necessarily imposed. The words "sketched by themselves" were therefore dropped from the title.

It was further resolved to make additions in the case of the composers dealt with under the original idea, and to issue the notices separately as "Primers of Musical Biography."

The intention of "Novello's Primers of Musical Biography" is to convey, as clearly as the limits of an elementary work will allow, a just idea of each composer's personality, and to record the principal events of his life. Knowledge of what a man is helps the understanding of what he does. These little books may serve, therefore, as a first step towards acquaintance with the genius and compositions of the masters to whom they are devoted.

For the copious extracts made from letters, &c., throughout the series, no apology is offered. They are the best material upon which to base an estimate of character.

MR. PERCY WHYTE'S CONCERT COMPANY.

SEASON 1888-9.

Open to Engagements for Oratorios, Operatic Recitals, or Sacred and Secular Concerts. MR. PERCY WHYTE, of the principal Liverpool and Provincial Concerts, has great pleasure in submitting to the notice of his patrons and the public the accompanying list of Artists, any of whom may be engaged singly or otherwise on the most reasonable terms.

CONCERT PARTIES of any number of Artists may be made up from the undermentioned list of Vocalists:—

MISS FANNY BOUFFLEUR,

SOPRANO

(Of the Liverpool, Manchester, Preston, and Southport Concerts).

MISS HARRIETTE RUTHERFORD,

CONTRALTO

(Of the London, Liverpool, and Provincial Concerts).

MR. PERCY WHYTE,

TENOR

(Of the Liverpool, Sheffield, Preston, and Southport Concerts).

MR. GEORGE PLATT,

BARITONE

(Of the Preston, Southport, and Leicester Concerts).

MR. FRANK WESTON,

SOLO VIOLONCELLO

(Of the Birmingham, Leeds, Newcastle, and Scarborough Concerts).

MR. H. J. NICHOLLS,

BUFFO

(Of the Liverpool, Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Preston Concerts).
Author and Composer of Operetta, "Figaro Junior," and the following original Buffo Songs, &c.: "Comparisons," "Le Jeune Français,"
"The Dry-land Sailors," "A Lullaby," "Blue Beard," "Blue Bottle," &c., &c.

MR. PERCY WHYTE'S QUARTET, viz.:—
Miss FANNY BOUFFLEUR, Miss HARRIETTE RUTHERFORD,
Mr. E. J. MACREADY, and Mr. GEORGE PLATT.

MR. HUBERT WHITTINGHAM, Organist, Childwall Church, Liverpool, Accompanist.

The above Company have just completed a most successful series of engagements at the following (among other) towns: Sheffield, Leicester, Barrow-in-Furness, Nantwich, Oldham, Mossley, Blackburn, Preston, Liverpool, &c.

Full particulars, press opinions, and specimen programmes sent upon application to MR. PERCY WHYTE, Laburnum Villa, Church Road, Stanley, Liverpool.

"GEMS OF THE OPERAS" CONCERT COM-PANY. MR. JOSEF CANTOR, at the close of another season, begs leave to draw attention to the phenomenal success achieved by this organisation, which has exceeded the most sanguine expectations.
In such musical centres as Leeds, Manchester, Huddersfield, Bradford, Halifax, Preston, Bolton, Dewsbury, Blackburn, Oldham, and at Mr.
Spark's well-known Worcester Subscription Concerts, the reception accorded to this unique and interesting programme has proved gratifying in the highest degree, whilst the Press have unanimously pronounced these Concerts to be amongst the most successful and artistic of those at present before the public. The opinions of such important provincial journals as the Manchester Guardian, Leeds Mercury, Yorkshire Post, Manchester Examiner, Preston Herald, Bradford Daily Telegraph, Liverpool Mercury, &c., embolden this Concert Company in the belief that, should they be able to extend their operations over a wider area, a yet more emphatic series of successes would assuredly follow.

The répertoire embraces Selections from thirty different Operas, including "Tannhäuser," "Mefistofele," "Nadeshda," "Esmeralda," "La Gioconda," "Irene," "Carmen," "Oberon," "Talismano," "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Martha," "Lily of Killarney," &c., &c.

The personnel comprises from twenty to twenty-five Artists, all of whom are thoroughly competent Soloists. Selections are also introduced from the lighter compositions of Balfe, Wallace, Clay, Offenbach, Suppé, Cellier, Audran, and the Gilbert-Sullivan series.

Mr. Cantor is now booking dates for the ensuing Season, and will be pleased to forward full particulars, specimen programmes, &c., on application.

Address, Church Street, Liverpool. Telegrams—"Cantor," Liverpool.

JAMES RUSSELL AND CO.,

120, High Street, Oxford,

THE OXFORD CONCERT AGENTS,

Share, Commission, or Purchase. Vacant dates for June, October, November, and December.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

JUNE 1, 1888.

HENRY LITTLETON.

AMONG the concluding sentences of "A short History of Cheap Music," published last year, were the following :—

"The retirement of Mr. Henry Littleton from the active direction of the firm (Novello, Ewer and Co.) at the beginning of 1887, introduced a fourth generation to the charge and conduct of the business. In the full possession of manly power and mental vigour, he can enjoy the ease he has earned by a long course of industrious labour, and if ever just cause of pride existed, it accompanies him in his retirement."

Even under present circumstances, when he of whom these words were written has passed away, it cannot be said that their anticipatory character was without warrant. All who knew the man we now lament expected as well as hoped for him a prolonged and peaceful evening of life. He was not old, as we now count age; he was "in full possession of manly power and mental vigour"; he could look back upon a life well spent and crowned with astonishing success; about him gathered "honour, love, obedience, troops of friends," and it seemed that the sun of his career would go slowly down in a cloudless sky. Alas for human foresight when it would pre-arrange the action of Death!

Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all—
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death.

And so it came to pass that the restful evening of our friend was "short as the watch that ends the night." He had scarcely felt himself free from the yoke of life's labour, had hardly realised that for him there was no more to do, when the summons arrived to a profounder repose than earth can give. In itself this is an ordinary circumstance. Men are falling about us under like conditions every day, but the case of Henry Littleton was not wanting in a pathos of its own. Under the mask of the man of business—which was all that the general public saw—lay a most affectionate and tender nature, capable of doing much for the objects of its love; capable, also, of suffering much, for the one capacity is an attendant upon the other. Our friend had gone through life without some of its severest trials till 1885, when his home was bereft of a beloved daughter. The blow came upon the poor father with terrific force. It struck him down. Such grief should be sacred, and is only referred to here as having what all who observed him know to be a real connection with his own passing away. In that regard it cannot be overlooked, nor indeed would one turn from it without profoundest sympathy, or without recognising the mysterious and infinitely touching relationships which bind human souls closer than is possible even to the ties of flesh and blood. It sometimes happens that those bonds become closer with death, and the living follows the dead as by an attraction more powerful than all the reasons and interests that say "Remain." Who is sufficient for these things?

The career of Henry Littleton can only be touched upon here, though it eminently deserves a full discussion as one conveying important lessons and rich in matter for reflection. From first to last it emphasises a truth which Carlyle has put into words more eloquent than any I could use :—

"Instead of saying that Man is the creature of circumstance, it would be nearer the mark to say that Man is the architect of circumstance. It is character which builds an existence out of circumstance. Our strength is measured by our plastic power. From the same materials one man builds palaces, another hovels; one warehouses, another villas; bricks and mortar are mortar and bricks until the architect can make them something else. Thus it is that, in the same family, in the same circumstances, one man rears a stately edifice, while his brother, vacillating and incompetent, lives for ever amid ruins; the block of granite which was an obstacle in the path of the weak becomes a stepping-stone in the pathway of the strong."

The man we have just lost was conspicuously an architect of circumstance—conspicuously because he built a fair and splendid edifice, though no one, at the outset, ever had circumstances less favourable to deal with. Carlyle speaks of materials—bricks and mortar and granite blocks—as though they lay ready to hand. But, in this case, the architect, before he could begin to build, was compelled to burn the lime, shape the clay, and hew the stone for himself. As a matter of fact, the boy of fourteen, named Henry Littleton, who, in 1837, went about the streets of London looking for work, had everything to do. Help from without was hopeless. He possessed nothing but the native energy and shrewdness of his character; those qualities being all his fortune and, practically speaking, all his friends. But even such endowments avail nothing without opportunity for their exercise, just as the speed of the swiftest horse in a race is useless unless the animal can get clear and have a fair course. Opportunity cannot be made. It must be watched for and seized exactly at the right moment, though sometimes it comes by what we call accident. This was the case with Henry Littleton, who, one day in 1837, wandered into the City looking for opportunity, and not in a mood, we may fairly assume, to be particular as to its kind. He would gladly have taken a lowly post in any of the warehouses off Cheapside, or in any of the shops of St. Paul's Churchyard. A ticket, in no matter what window, inscribed "Boy wanted," would have delighted his eyes, and, perhaps, so determined his career that the pen now writing these lines would never have shaped his name. But the ticket was not visible, and yet St. Paul's Churchyard was not "drawn blank," for there came along another boy, whistling, perhaps, in utter unconsciousness of the fact that he was about to influence a life and much else. Now occurs the critical moment—the tide in Henry Littleton's affairs which, if taken at the flood, shall lead on to fortune. Let the two boys pass each other and the chance is lost. They draw nearer and nearer; they look into each others eyes; they stop and speak. The chance is not lost. Young Littleton asks if the providential agent knows a place where a boy is wanted. He does know of such a place; his own employers, Messrs. George and Manby, of Fleet Street, carrying on business in what is now the Punch office, are looking about for a likely lad. Henry Littleton goes straight to Messrs. George and Manby's, offers himself for the vacant post, and is engaged. Messrs. George and Manby keep a music-shop, and their new assistant has got his foot on the ladder, the topmost round of which is, by and by, to know him well. Not long afterwards the youthful Queen Victoria, just come to the throne, makes a triumphal progress down Fleet Street to the City, and is watched, from the leads over the shop, by a boy than whom she is not happier in the possession of a post of duty and fair hopes.

Young Littleton did not remain at George and Manby's during the whole period intervening between his engagement and his appearance under the circumstances about to be detailed. He changed his place to another establishment in the same line of business (Monro and May, Holborn); but we may be sure that the whole time was spent in carrying out the Scriptural injunction: "Whatsoever thine hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might." It is impossible, if the boy be father of the man, to imagine Henry Littleton as a perfunctory servant, working as little as possible, and that little not for the love of it. Take for granted that his masters' shutters were down to time in the morning, their errands well run, their interests safeguarded in every way that subordinate functions allowed. But the lad was ambitious, and devotion to the present did not blind his keen eyes to the future. Already, perhaps, he dreamed of rising to the dazzling eminence of a place behind the counter. So he kept a smart look-out and, in 1841, being then eighteen years' of age, saw that Mr. J. Alfred Novello, music publisher, of 69, Dean Street, Soho, wanted a "collector"—that is to say a person charged with the task of going round the publishing houses obtaining ordered copies of works not issued by the firm. Henry Littleton promptly presented himself in Dean Street, and was taken on the strength of the establishment forthwith. How little Mr. Alfred Novello dreamed that the eager youth whose services he accepted would, in twenty years' time, be his partner, and in five years more his successor! In 1841 the foundations of the house of Novello had been well laid. Apropos, it may be read in "A Short History of Cheap Music": "Alfred Novello's commercial tours were exalted to the dignity of musical missions. His knowledge of music and wide-minded sympathies constituted his authority in cases of appeal or advice. His cheap publications had made the formation of choral societies possible. In the large factories of Yorkshire and Lancashire many choral unions existed, and the publications of the house were gladly welcomed, because of their modest price and their perfect accuracy. The publisher in his progress was always cordially received, and often concerts were given in his honour, the performers making extra exertions to show their advancement since his last visit. The cause thus received its greatest help from Alfred Novello, not only by his valuable and useful publications, but by his personal influence." If, however, we find the guiding principles which have made the "London Sacred Music Warehouse" so famous established at this early date, their results were not as now. Much opposition had to be encountered, and at times it became a question of reducing somewhat the burdens of the Dean Street establishment. On two occasions Mr. Novello thought seriously of lightening the ship by making a Jonah of Henry Littleton who, being his youngest "hand," was considered, perhaps, to be the most easily spared.

Littleton, it is said, had some reason to suspect that his tenure of place was unsafe, and at critical moments took care not to be in evidence. Anyhow, the threatened calamity advanced to no more acute stage, and when, as must speedily have happened, Mr. Novello discovered the worth of his young assistant, danger entirely disappeared. Henry Littleton's "extraordinary business capacity, grasp of detail, and general strength of character were soon recognised"—I am quoting the authority already cited—"and, starting from the lowest round of the ladder, in three years he attained a position only second to the head of the firm." At twenty-one, then, seven years or thereabouts after encountering the providential boy in St. Paul's Churchyard, Littleton, from being a mere waif drifting on the great ocean of London life, and looking about for something to cling to, found himself the lieutenant of an important and increasing business enterprise.

I do not purpose following in this place the development of the house to which the subject of my remarks became, in the foregoing manner, permanently attached. The whole story is well told in "A Short History of Cheap Music," and, indeed, can be read, to more or less good purpose, in the amazing catalogue of the firm, in the evidences of its enterprise to be found wherever music is cultivated, and in the wide and varied scope of its operations. All who are likely to read these pages must have a general knowledge of what "Novello, Ewer and Co." implies, and must be aware of the fact that in Henry Littleton's rare combination of business qualities and daring yet sound enterprise, much of it originated. But the more personal matters with which all this is mixed up may not be passed over.

In 1857 Mr. Alfred Novello, desiring to enjoy well-earned rest after many years of hard and anxious work, and finding his chief assistant fully equal to the management of the business, took up his residence in Italy. "From that day forward the task of carrying out and extending the operations of the firm was in the hands of Mr. Littleton." In 1861 another change occurred, the proprietor of the business issuing the following announcement from his Italian retreat: "J. Alfred Novello has the pleasure to inform the public, his friends, and patrons that, from this date, he has admitted Mr. Henry Littleton (for many years his assistant) to a partnership in his music-selling and printing establishments. The business, which has so long enjoyed the advantage of Mr. Henry Littleton's services, will be carried on under the denomination of Novello and Co., with the old anxiety to supply the best music at the most moderate prices. It will be the study of the new firm to equal and to exceed (if possible) the attention and promptitude with which they have at all times endeavoured to execute the orders of their musical patrons." Five years later took place a third change, Mr. Novello then retiring from connection with the house, and leaving his whilom "collector" in sole possession. The "Short History" thus records the fact: "In 1866 Mr. Henry Littleton, who had been in the business since 1841, and had seen it through its infant days, when there was scarcely enough work to employ more than a few hands all through the year, and by his assiduity and patient attention had helped to build it up stone by stone, became its sole proprietor. Alfred Novello had long since ceased to take an active personal part in the conduct of the affairs of the firm. He now completely severed his connection with it. He was certain that the principles upon which the house was founded fifty-five years before would, in the hands of his worthy successor, be faithfully maintained and perseveringly pursued." Whether Mr. Novello had good reason for the certainty just pointed out, every reader of these words knows full well. From the date of Mr. Littleton's proprietorship, the operations of the firm, while ever carried on upon the old principles, expanded by leaps and bounds, taking their course in a variety of new channels—concert-giving, for example—and being characterised by what superficial observers may have thought reckless audacity, though, in point of fact, it was shrewdly calculated boldness. "After the fathers shall come up the children," and it is only fair to say that in the later developments of the house of Novello, Mr. Littleton was ably seconded by his elder son, the present head of the firm, under whose guidance we may look for a still further illustration of the law of progress, so magnificently demonstrated by his lamented father. Going on to the next conspicuous feature in Mr. Littleton's personal history (and, alas! towards the end) we find him, in 1887, celebrating the jubilee of his entrance into the music-trade—fifty years from the day when he encountered that luck-bringing boy in St. Paul's Churchyard. The occasion was observed as a high festival by the firm, whose servants of all grades, gathered at the Freemasons' Tavern, presented their chief with an affectionate address, and a testimonial of their esteem and regard. It was then known that Mr. Littleton had resolved to follow the example of his former employer, Mr. Novello, and retire to spend his remaining days in richly deserved ease. Those days were few, but significant as showing what this hard and indefatigable worker took to be ease. He had shifted the burden of responsibility to younger shoulders, and no longer heard from Berners Street the trumpet-call of duty. But did he fold his hands in idleness? No; that would not have been like Henry Littleton. Berners Street knew him well in the short period of "rest." His familiar figure could be seen many a day in its old haunts, and his well-tryed business qualities were always at the service of his sons and successors. Our friend died, therefore, as he lived, in harness, and was found at his post as a volunteer when the word reached him: "The Master hath come and calleth for thee."

With regard to Mr. Littleton's personal characteristics, much can be inferred in noting the detailed facts of his career. One hardly needs business experience to reason correctly from Henry Littleton's success to the qualities which made it possible. His rise to the highest place was very far from being mere chance or luck, because employers are not in the habit of deciding by throw of dice, or by "cutting" cards, upon the man among their people whom they shall promote. Self interest makes them exceedingly cautious and profoundly impartial, wherefore we know that the late head of Novello and Co. must have been a splendid servant:—

You shall mark

Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For nought but provender; and, when he's old, cashier'd;
Whip me such honest knaves; others there are
Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves;
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords,
Do well thrive by them, and, when they have lined their coats,
Do themselves homage.

Henry Littleton could not continue the quotation and say, "And such a one do I profess myself." He belonged to neither of the classes so happily sketched by Shakespeare's unerring pen, but rather to that other class whose motto is—

Master, go on, and I will follow thee
To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty.

We may depend upon it that in all respects of punctuality, obedience, devotion, fidelity, and the conscientiousness which works when the master is far away just as though he were looking on, the subject of these remarks left nothing to desire. The virtues just named were a part of his nature and of his life, otherwise they would not have stood the test of twenty-five years, nor would they, when the obligation of service to another ceased, have been just as conspicuous in the discharge of the duties imposed upon the head of a great establishment, which always must be, in some sort, the master of its proprietor.

Among the personal characteristics which all who associated with Mr. Littleton in even a slight degree could note were some of a very pronounced kind. As a man of business he formed his own conclusions on any question brought before him, firmly believed in them, and expressed them with a plain directness such as persons unaccustomed to his habits may sometimes have misunderstood.

But he was not a man of business in the hard, unsympathetic sense of the term. Few in his position ever allowed sentiment to influence them in an equal degree, or were so capable of making sacrifices for an idea. For proof I need only refer to the kindness he showed to young composers, in several cases going so far as to bear the expense of their education at home and abroad. Throughout all his manifold dealings he was never consciously unjust, and certainly on more than one occasion, perhaps on many, he has been known to set a higher value upon manuscripts than the author himself, and to pay up to his own estimate. A now prominent cathedral organist tells how, when comparatively an obscure man, he showed the Berners Street chief a work and named a certain price, only to have it doubled on the spot by the other party to the contract. Then there is the case of a cathedral organist, now dead, who, at the close of an important transaction with Mr. Littleton, found himself in a position so much better than was expected that he remarked, "When I get home, they will think I have robbed some one." Instances of this kind evince not only a sense of justice, but also a feeling of generosity, the buyer giving the advantage of his own knowledge of the market to the seller, and operating against himself. The man who can act thus may not truthfully be called "hard." Indeed, the typical commercial mind would, with the utmost promptitude and most perfect conviction, set him down as "soft." Henry Littleton was neither the one nor the other, but simply carried into the larger transactions of his later years the absolute uprightness which made him invaluable to his employer when he exercised a delegated authority. Our dead friend had, in deed and in truth, a generous nature. It was not in him to forget the less fortunate companions of his early days when they needed help. Those who served him in a liberal spirit were liberally treated in return. His purse was always open to a genuine appeal in the name of charity, and in his princely house at Sydenham he exercised princely hospitality, never being more happy than when his friends came to partake of it. The reader will hardly require to be told that success did not spoil such a nature. He was the same in affluence as in the time of comparative poverty—kept the same by the inflexible firmness which made him in every sense a strong man. If I may, without abuse of the privilege of entering his domestic circle, speak of him there, simple truth calls for the highest tribute of admiration. He was of the Englishmen who make home truly homely by devoting to it their love and care. I shall not soon forget the last occasion on which an opportunity of conversing with him at length came to me—an occasion when our talk ran upon his lost daughter and her children. All the tenderness of the man's nature revealed itself in that moment, and it was beautiful to look upon his beaming eyes and radiant countenance as he dwelt upon the pretty ways of a favourite grandson. Our friend's removal from the home and family he loved so well was to it and them a calamity unmeasurable, while it made all of us poorer by the loss of one who, in his unostentatious way, set a bright example of many virtues.

The remains of Mr. Littleton were committed to earth in Lee Cemetery on the 16th ult., with every mark of wide-spread and affectionate regard. A crowd of mourning friends filled the church of St. Bartholomew, Sydenham, where the first part of the service was performed by Canon Yeatman, the vicar, and the Rev. Henry White, assisted by a choir made up of gentlemen from St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey, and the Chapels Royal, who had volunteered their help, with the boys of the Abbey, under the direction of Dr. Bridge. Dr. Martin and Dr. Westbrook shared the organist's duties, the music performed including the opening Sentences of Purcell and Croft, Goss's Anthem "If we believe that Jesus died," and a tune, composed for the hymn "Jesus lives," by Mr. Alfred H. Littleton. The long procession of carriages to the cemetery through a downpour of rain, the wailing music of the choir, Dr. Troutbeck's impressive reading of the committal service, and the gathering around the grave of men representing every interest with which Mr. Littleton was connected, were features of the melancholy occasion not soon to be forgotten. When all was over the crowd turned away and left Henry Littleton to his repose in the pretty rural cemetery, believing that death to him was — a passage overhung with clouds

But at its entrance; a few leagues beyond
Opening to kinder skies and milder suns,
And seas pacific as the soul that seeks them.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

(No. XXV.—SCHUMANN (SUPPLEMENTAL).)

SINCE the biographical notice of Robert Schumann appeared in this journal additional material for a proper estimate of that very interesting character has come to hand in the shape of a collection of his early letters*, edited by Madame Schumann. It is impossible to resist the inducement thus offered to a supplemental paper, the more because of the very terms in which the editress invites attention to the book. She says: "My object in publishing the following letters was that those who love and honour Schumann as an artist might also learn to know him as a man. Unfortunately, the world knows more of his peculiarities than of his character, since he was intimate with but very few, though to those dearest to him he opened his heart without reserve. These letters, therefore, form a beautiful memorial, revealing all the treasures of an ideal youthful nature, strong and energetic, and filled with the highest aims and aspirations." Although students of Schumann have long enjoyed the advantage presented by the letters which are so valuable a part of Wasielewski's biography, it would manifestly be gross neglect not to give Madame Schumann's book the closest attention after reading her emphatic fore-word, especially as she declares that "all who have learned to love Schumann's works will be delighted to find the close correspondence between artist and man, and the wonderful way in which his compositions reflect his thoughtful mind and high intellect." We need only add, by way of further introduction, that the period covered by these interesting revelations of character begins when Schumann was eighteen years old and ends when he was thirty. They show the master to us, therefore, when his nature was in its virginal freshness and before large experience of life, with its warping and distorting influences, had materially affected him.

The series opens with a few letters written at Robert's native place, Zwickau, in 1827, one year after the death of Schumann père, and addressed to a former schoolfellow named Flechsig, who had gone up to the University of Leipzig. Looking at the first of these epistles we see the not infrequent spectacle of youth agitated by tumultuous feelings; inflated joys and exaggerated despairs expressing themselves in a torrent of "fine" language. Most of us have recollection of such a period. Young Schumann is in love at eighteen, of course, but we may pass over what he says about his Liddy and his Nanni—like Captain Macheath, he appears to have had two charmers. The course of the tender passion not being smooth, Robert breaks out into lamentations. "My whole life reveals now in the sweet garden of Memory (the garden of Memory at eighteen, poor lad!) where I pluck many a lovely immortelle, which, though faded, I press for ever to my sorrowing heart, and kiss the withered blossoms of a happy life." In another place he exclaims: "Friend, I have no friend; I have no sweetheart; I have nothing now!" We know not what was the matter between him and his Liddy or his Nanni, but here is a nature capable of feeling, aye, and of making a struggle against feeling. Many a young man has abjured women in the intervals of worshipping them, and Robert, for his part, is going to steer for the North under the guidance of Reason, there to cool himself. That being the case, it follows, as a matter of course, that the next letter is full of Liddy and Nanni. He had in the interim gone to Dresden. "My first walk was to the street where N. is supposed to be living. . . . Oh! if you knew how I longed for her, how, under every veil that I saw fluttering, I fancied I should see her features, how I went over and over again all the hours which I dreamed away so joyfully, so happily, in her embraces!" &c. Liddy he did see at Teplitz and "went up a steep mountain alone with her." They reached the top and he looked abroad on the glorious landscape. A black cloud came from the east, and Schumann, pointing to it, said "Such is life," whereupon Liddy looked at him sadly with a tear in her eye. Robert thought she was touched by his very original remark, and plucking a rose, was about to present her with the flower when a flash of lightning darted out of the cloud. The young man pulled the rose to pieces, and wanted to say "Such is life" again, but remarked "Good-bye" instead. "She pressed my hand passionately and the dream was over." Poor Liddy! if she could only have looked upon the comic side of all this, she would have cried with laughter. In another place Schumann describes her as a "narrow-minded soul, a simple maiden from innocent Utopia; she cannot grasp a great idea"—this because Liddy talked about Jean Paul like a true woman.

In March, 1828, Robert left the Grammar School at Zwickau, preparatory to going up to the Leipzig University. In this situation he wrote to Flechsig a long letter containing some admirable sentiments in flowery language. He now says "Every man who lives only in reminiscences is unhappy," and he looks to the future: "Now my better self must take the lead, and show what it is made of. . . . Introduce me, my friend, into active life, and pick me up when I make a mad tumble. That Greek levity, which always regarded life from a happy medium between joy and sorrow, was all very well, and is quite consistent with a period of mulishness; but it must not degenerate and turn into a lawless impetuosity, which only laughs and passes everything merrily by. All things good and beautiful are glowing in my young heart at this moment, and all high ideals and all the Greek gods stand radiant in this Olympus of youth." Schumann quickly followed this letter to Leipzig, travelling by way of Bayreuth, Nuremberg, Augsburg. From Monheim, near Nuremberg, Schumann addressed a letter to his mother, in which he again enunciates pattern sentiments from a filial standpoint: "Dear mother, I have often offended you, I have often misunderstood you when you acted for the best; forgive the faults of an impetuous, passionate youth; he will make amends for them by good and noble deeds and a virtuous life. Parents can claim the whole life of their children! My father has gone to his rest—all the more do I owe to you, dearest mother. To you alone must I repay the debt I owe you for making my life happy, and preparing a bright cloudless future for me. May your son prove himself worthy of this debt, and show that he will return a good mother's affection by always leading a virtuous life." Again writing to his mother, this time from Leipzig, Schumann allows us to see, in an elementary stage, the sensitive, retiring disposition which afterwards, in a certain measure, separated him from the world. Instead of sending home glowing reports from the midst of a new and exciting life, Robert writes: "I just long with my whole heart to be back again in the quiet home where I was born, and passed such happy days with nature. It is hard to find nature here. Everything is ornamented by art. There is no valley, no mountain, no forest, where I can thoroughly lose myself in my own thoughts; no spot where I can be alone, unless it is locked up in my room, with an everlasting noise and uproar going on below." These words are strange from the pen of a lad of nineteen just arrived in a university town, but that they were perfectly genuine all knowledge of the writer in after years goes to show. Schumann's mother appears to have been struck by, and to have commented upon them in her answering epistle, for, in another letter, we clearly find him replying to questions about his "mental state," which he declares to be "neither better nor worse than before." He further sketches himself as a shy, reserved, and distant youth: "Up till now I have had no familiar intercourse with any one student. I fence in the fencing school, am friendly to every one, and hold my own as far as appearances go, but I am extremely cautious not to form an intimate acquaintance. One can hold up one's head with such people without being rude, and it makes them stand off and not treat one as a Fuchs."

Schumann's condition of unrest is constantly apparent in the home letters from Leipzig. Two causes were no doubt at work producing this—his aversion to the legal calling which had been marked out for him, and his longing for the congenial quietness and peace of nature: "Ah, mother! it is in nature that the soul learns best to pray, and to sanctify all those gifts with which we are endowed from above. Nature is like the immense, illimitable veil of the Most High, embroidered with His eternal Name, with which man can wipe away all his tears of sorrow, and which converts every tear into a speechless ecstasy, and disposes the heart to fervent though quiet and inexpressible devotion. Why am I denied every feeling of this kind, here in this disgusting Leipzig? Why can memory alone give me a moment that is sublimer and happier than those I usually enjoy?" The feelings thus expressed grow upon the young man, whom we will not call a misanthrope, because it was not that he disliked his fellow-creatures so much as that he longed to be free from an intolerable situation, part of which everybody around him seemed to be. Writing to his mother after three months' residence in the Saxon city, Schumann said: "I have never felt quite happy or at home in Leipzig, and am often completely worn out by this petty life and all its pitiful people." Then comes a querulous note which jars on the ear: "If I only had some one who really and thoroughly understood me and would do everything to please me for my own sake! With Flechsig I agree very well, but he never cheers me up; if I am sometimes depressed, he ought not to be so too, and might be humane enough to brighten me up." He goes on to depict himself as a kind of hermit Bursch, who walks alone, rarely goes to the tavern, associates with only two fellow-students, and visits only one family, the Caruses.* "Besides them, I do not visit any families. I have got rather a horror of it, and always feel miserable amongst people who do not understand me, and whom I cannot care for." Later on our discontented young man uses stronger language—he must have been a cheerful companion for Flechsig! "On the whole, my life is still . . . monotonous and joyless. It is a blessing for me that I do not live alone or I should easily get misanthropical. It affords me no pleasure to go to public places, and it often perfectly sickens me to see idiotic people." Here the writer gives a pretty broad hint as to the cure for his malaise: "But yet in my own heart I am not quite so joyless, and what my fellow-creatures cannot give me is given me by music. My piano tells me all the deep sentiments which I cannot express."

Schumann spent some part of the autumn of 1828 with his family, returning to "disgusting Leipzig" in October, whence he addressed his mother with a heavy heart, dwelling upon the joys just past: "Oh, for those quiet autumn evenings at home which filled our souls with delight! Oh, for those gilded heights and blooming valleys! Not Leipzig, with all its theatres and concerts, can make up in the slightest degree for such peaceful life in nature among kind friends." The old longing remained, nevertheless Schumann seems to have been braced up by association with those he loved. Describing his journey on foot from Zwickau, he speaks of eating his breakfast by the wayside with a joyful heart, and finding the homely viands better than all the luxuries of the Leipzig hotels. He even says that his soul was full of peace. Leipzig, when he got to it, had improved. The young man felt thoroughly at home there for the first time, and then he made a good resolution: "I will hope, and try to make myself comfortable, for even the love of one's home and the scenes of one's childhood may become a weakness if they prevent one from being contented with the present, and only make one moan over the past. And I cannot and will not be weak-minded." "Brave words, Robert!" the mother might have said, reading the letter in the old arm-chair by the bow window; but we wonder how she received, from the son who had so much bemoaned his lot, the following piece of advice: "Be more cheerful, and do not throw away the pleasures of life bestowed upon you from above without enjoying and appreciating them." Surely the "dear little mother" laughed out the pithy injunction, "Physician, heal thyself!"

The change from Leipzig to Heidelberg in May, 1829, had an excellent effect on Schumann's spirits. We see that clearly enough in his first letter home, which not only contains an assurance that he is "anything but sad," but is brightened by flashes of a humour that has not hitherto appeared. The brief sketches of his travelling companions are delightful. There is the Prussian, "who launched forth ex abrupto upon the numerous perfections of his wife at Berlin, and assured me that his whole happiness was bound up in hers. He recited poetry quite unasked, and produced miniatures of his wife." Schumann naïvely adds, "I confess I never came across any one of the kind before, but I liked him." Then there were "a Jew leather-seller from Frankfort, who was of the shop, shoppy; a nice old lady who had seen a number of plays at the Gotha Theatre (we know what she talked about), and two French Jews, who had drunk rather more wine than was good for them, and talked all night about nothing." This letter was followed by one much longer, giving a vivacious description of the writer's journey from Leipzig to Heidelberg, passing through Frankfort, Coblenz, and Mayence. Reading it we rub our eyes. Can this be the depressed and depressing young gentleman whom we knew just now, or is it some rattle-brain, overflowing with animal spirits and playing off upon us a practical joke by assuming Robert Schumann's name? The question is really excusable, but just as really is Robert the writer. Natures like his are subject to these fluctuations. One day they cry to us de profundis, the next they are heard singing in the heavens like larks. Nature's grand scheme of compensation associates capacity for deepest suffering with the power of experiencing highest joy. Schumann was in such good spirits at Frankfort that he actually ventured upon a practical joke: "The very first thing in the morning I had an intense desire to play the piano. So I calmly walked into the first music shop I came to, and told them I was tutor to a young English lord who wanted to buy a piano. I played for three hours, much stared at and applauded, and then told them I would let them know in a day or two whether my lord would buy the instrument or not; but by that time I was in Rudesheim drinking Rudesheimer." Describing his journey to Wiesbaden he touches off his travelling companions, one of whom was "a desperate merchant-speculator with rolling eyes." Probably the good man would have rolled his eyes to some purpose had he seen Robert Schumann on the box handling the "ribbons." "By Jove," writes our hero, "how those horses did go." No, most perspicacious reader, we are not quoting from "Tom Brown at Oxford."

A second letter to the mother from Heidelberg has several points of interest. In the first place, Robert finds himself able to say, "I am very jolly, and at times quite happy." But now, having left Leipzig, he can see some good in it. Life was more varied there than at Heidelberg, and "had its good as well as its bad points to a young man." The next passage is shrewd, and noticeable also for, as far as we can discover, Schumann's first use of the word "Philistine," as applied to persons destitute of what other persons consider to be "sweetness and light." "The student is quite the most important individual in and about Heidelberg, which simply could not exist without him. Of course, the townspeople and the Philistines are cringingly polite. It does not seem to me a good thing for a young man to come into a town where the student reigns supreme. The character of a young fellow is only strongly and properly developed by difficulties, and that perpetual dawdling about with students, and students only, has a most injurious effect on the breadth of his opinions, and consequently on the whole practical side of his life." So our young Solomon makes up his mind that when he has a son, the lad shall go for three years to Leipzig, and only for one to Heidelberg. At Heidelberg they waste time over a table d'hôte. "I consider it perfectly awful to have to sit at table for an hour every day; and, good Lord! what a terrible waste of time it is. Give me a plate of soup and a slice off the joint, which I can devour in six minutes and have done with it." We wonder if the anxious mother took alarm for her son's digestion. A word on the delicate subject of music follows. There was not a really good pianist in the town, and Schumann, known as a fine player, anticipated being somewhat in request. He expresses himself as actually willing to go more into society, and "there are plenty of girls who like being courted and admired." Alas, poor Liddy and Nanni! so soon forgotten; but then, as Schumann would have remarked, in his startlingly original way, "Such is life."

After having conquered some opposition from home, Schumann started on a tour to Switzerland and Italy. At Berne he wrote a pleasant chatty letter to his mother, telling, amongst much else, how he had exchanged glances with a mourning young widow from Havre, and also with "a lovely English girl." (Again two strings to his bow!) He has a word about our country-folk. "Englishmen are swarming up the mountains like a lot of crazy ants. They are quiet, gentle people enough, and goodness only knows why they are treated with such rudeness in Germany, where they have to pay so dearly for their travels." If there were many of these holiday letters, they probably ran much in the same groove, as Madame Schumann has not printed them; the next in the book being dated October 5, at Milan, where our young traveller writes to his sister-in-law, Rosalie, telling a tale of woe—a simple story of wanting cash and having to borrow it from an hotel keeper. On November 6 he is back again at Heidelberg, addressing a letter to his old pianoforte teacher, and future father-in-law, Friedrich Wieck. Here he speaks freely of music, and does so in a most interesting way. One passage is a confession of irregular activity: "I detest theory pure and simple, as you know, as I have been living very quietly, improvising a good deal, but not playing much from notes. I have begun many a Symphony, but finished nothing, and every now and then have managed to edge in a Schubert waltz between Roman law and the Pandects," &c. Speaking of his Italian experiences, he declares that he has learned to love the "Genius of Sound" which in Germany awed him. "For one single evening in my life did I feel as though I were in the presence of the Deity, and allowed for a few moments to gaze reverently upon the unveiled face of the God, and that was at Milan, where I heard Pasta—and Rossini. Do not smile, master, it is the truth." From the same letter we learn that Schumann was early a devotee of Schubert, for whom he did so much in after years. He calls him "my only Schubert," and goes on: "Altogether, I think nobody's compositions are such a psychological puzzle in the course and connection of their ideas as Schubert's, with their apparently logical progressions. Very few composers have succeeded in stamping their individuality upon a mass of tone pictures in the way he has done, and still fewer have written so much for themselves and their own hearts. What a diary is to all those who jot down their passing emotions, his music-paper was to Schubert. To it he confided all his moods, and his intensely musical soul finds expression in notes when ordinary mortals use words—at least, that is my humble opinion." Then he turns to himself once more and exposes the unceasing musical activity of his mind. His symphonies, Schumann declares, would have reached Op. 100 had he written them all down, while "sometimes I am so full of music and so overflowing with melody, that I find it simply impossible to write down anything." All these glimpses of the young man's state are extremely valuable, and enable us to account for much that is peculiar and characteristic in his early works. Four or five days after writing the last-quoted passage, Schumann replied to a question from home regarding his music, and said: "Alas! mother, it is almost quite at an end; I play but rarely now, and very badly. The grand Genius of Sound is gently extinguishing his torch, and all that I have ever done in music seems like a beautiful dream which I can hardly believe has ever existed. And yet, believe me, if ever I could have done any good in the world it would have been in music, and I feel sure that I have got creative power. But earning one's bread is another thing. Studying law has frozen and dried me up to such an extent that no flower of my imagination would ever bloom." About his pianoforte playing he had just previously stated to Wieck that he had neither gone forward nor backward very much, while the general discrepancy between the two letters is very striking. We can only explain it on the assumption that Schumann misrepresented himself to his mother for the sake of her peace of mind, the old lady's greatest wish being to see her son in a lawyer's gown. It is easy to admire the motive; but the young man himself seems to have been uneasy after perpetrating the deed. In the next letter he tries to laugh it away as a joke: "As a birthday gift you shall have my piano-playing, as all that I told you about in my last letter was nothing more nor less than a story—a joke of mine, because I could not think of anything to give you. You are not angry, are you? Smile again on your romancing son." The explanation is particularly lame, and as for the joke, nothing can possibly be less like one.

Just at this time, thanks for the most part to his pianoforte-playing, Schumann figured in Heidelberg as a social hero. He speaks of the fact very complacently; calls himself "universally popular," "much respected and liked," "the Heidelberg favourite," "out somewhere almost every evening," on Thursdays in the midst of a "select set of angelic English-women," and so on. We hardly recognise the grumbling recluse of Leipzig in this drawing and concert-room pet, who found life in the town on the Neckar to be "pleasant, refined, bright, and varied," and wrote home to his mother asking permission to stay six months longer. He asked for something else also. Social prominence is expensive, and our hero got into debt.

The letters written towards the close of Schumann's residence in Heidelberg, discuss with seriousness the writer's future. He presses the subject upon his mother. "A forced, mechanical lawyer, without love for his work, can never become great." "My whole life has been a twenty years' struggle between poetry and prose; or, if you like to call it so, Music and Law." "What sort of prospect would there be in Saxony for such a fellow as myself, who is not of noble birth, has neither money nor interest, and has no affection for legal squabbles and pettiness." "My genius points towards Art, which is, I am inclined to think, the right path." So he goes on, to the great distress of the "little mother," as we know from Wasielewski's book, which contains her letter asking for Wieck's advice. We know, too, that the matter was settled as Schumann would have it. In October, 1830, the young man, free from the terrors of a legal life, went back to Leipzig as Wieck's pupil, and fairly entered upon his musical career. Yet his letters show that he was not happy. Perhaps he thought with remorse of the pain he had caused to parent and guardian by a change of life-purpose, and was himself, it may be, a little frightened. At any rate, he talks of dejection, restlessness, wretchedness, begging his mother not to desert him because he required "great tenderness and forbearance." Again he said: "Altogether I am very stale, dry, and unpleasant, and given to laughing to myself. Of my old fire and enthusiasm barely the ashes remain. . . . You say that, after reading my letter, in which I told you of my old resolve, you found it impossible to pray. Can this possibly be true? I shall cause you but little joy during your life, in any case; but, by Jove, if I were to stick to law, and become a clerk, I should shoot myself for weariness."

MATERIAL OF MUSIC.

VI.

THE metal wind instruments, such as horns, trumpets, trombones, &c., are all made upon the principle of the open tube. They are bent into different shapes for the convenience of carrying them. The notes of each are the series of harmonics arising out of the fundamental tone of the tube. By means of valves conveniently placed so that they may be pressed with the fingers, or by slides, the tubes can be shortened or lengthened, and the primary harmonics are supplemented by the addition of new series obtained from the notes made by the shorter or longer tube.

Most of the instruments of brass employed in the military band are provided with valves, and therefore are capable of producing every semitone in their range. These instruments, which formerly were very imperfect and harsh in tone, are now so greatly improved that most of the objections urged against them no longer exist, and composers write for them instead of for the old horns and trumpets in the mixed orchestra of wood and brass wind and stringed instruments. Many of the improvements were introduced by Adolph Sax, and all instruments constructed upon the principles he suggested are still called after his name, though they do not proceed from his factory.

The pulsatile instruments form the next class. They are the triangle, the cymbals, and the drums. The triangle is a rod of polished iron bent into a three-sided shape, and so takes its name from its form; the cymbals are plates of metal which give out a clashing sound rather than a definite tone. They are employed, like the triangle, to mark the rhythm of a piece of music. There are three sorts of drums in common use—namely, the snare or side-drum, the kettle-drum, and the long or big drum. The snare or side-drum is so called because there are strings or snares of catgut stretched across the lower skin. These interfere with the vibrations of the skin, and cause the rattling sound which is the peculiarity of the instrument. It is called side-drum because it is held at the side of the player.

The kettle-drums are so called because the head or skin is stretched over a hemispherical shell of metal like a kettle. The kettle-drums are employed in pairs, tuned a fourth or a fifth apart. Each drum is capable of producing tones up to a fifth; the two together can compass an octave, overlapping each other in the middle of their scale. Some composers—Weber, for example—employ three drums, Meyerbeer writes for four in his "Roberto il Diavolo," Berlioz has designed effects for several drums, and there is a Concerto by Tausch for six drums, all of different notes.

The long drum or big drum is only used for enforcing the rhythm of certain pieces, and is commonly associated with the cymbals, triangles, and other "kitchen" furniture, as these metal instruments of percussion have been irreverently called.

Bells are sometimes employed for special effects in the orchestra, large ones for solemnity, small ones for lively and sprightly situations, three or four together for chime effects. The "Miserere" scene in Verdi's "Il Trovatore" offers a familiar example of the first; Mozart's "O cara armonia" in the "Magic Flute," and Meyerbeer's "Dinorah" are illustrations of the second kind; and Sullivan's "Golden Legend" of the third. A series of small bells, played by a keyboard which sets a series of hammers in motion to strike the bells, called in German "Glockenspiel," is the instrument employed by Mozart. The tone is pretty, but not always in tune. The partial tones or harmonics so often predominate that the generating tone is lost, and the sounds become what musicians call "fifthy," an effect sometimes heard in Bourdon organ pipes. A complete band is called an orchestra. The place upon or in which they exercise their duties and functions is also called an orchestra. The word is Greek (ὀρχήστρα), and was originally applied to the dancing place immediately below the lowest seats of the semi-circular part, or κοῖλον, where the chorus was situated. The actions of the band on the modern orchestra is controlled by a conductor. This office, in the form with which we are now acquainted, was unknown a century ago. The musician who presided at the harpsichord, and every band had an instrument of this sort, was called the conductor. His duty was to set the pace and to accompany the recitatives. The name of conductor, applied to one who accompanies pieces on the pianoforte at a concert where there is no band, is a survival of the old custom.

The instruments of the band are sometimes supplemented by an organ. Modern organs are sometimes used as substitutes for an orchestra, and the number and variety of the stops is increased with this end in view. In the hands of a skilful player, the organ justly deserves the name of the King of instruments. When it is set in motion by an inexperienced or an unskilful player, it is a nuisance, increased in magnitude in proportion to its size and construction.

As a musical instrument, it has arrogated to itself a title which might with equal propriety be applied to every other machine for making music. Properly speaking, the fiddle is an organ, and so is the drum. The term means an implement, an instrument, a piece of mechanism for any purpose. In this sense a spade, a legal document, a pocket knife, or a newspaper may each be called an organ without any violation of the propriety of the term. In music, however, the organ is that aggregate of mechanism which, when controlled by the hand of skill, is capable of the most exalted and elevating effects.

Like other modern instruments it has only been brought to perfection through a long course of years and the accumulation of experience. The "ugab" of the Hebrews, which is translated by the word "organ," was identical with the syrinx of the Greeks, the Pan's-pipes of modern days. The air reservoir of the bagpipes is the parent of the wind-chest of the organ. The mouth-holes of the pipes were inserted in a box and stopped by slides which prevented the air from the wind-chest passing through those tubes whose sound was not required. These slides are made to move at will by pressure upon a keyboard, and this simple mechanism is the whole principle upon which the organ is constructed. The variety of tones obtained in modern organs is gained by means of pipes of different lengths, material, shapes, and sizes; the drawing out of the stops brings into action the several qualities of ranks of pipes required.

The organ as an instrument was introduced into the church in the fourth century. Julian the Apostate, who died in 363, speaks of an organ in a Greek epigram. Aldhelm, in the eighth century, mentions an organ which had gilt pipes. There was an organ with leaden pipes in the church of St. Corneille, in Compeigne, erected in the same century. At the close of the tenth century an organ was placed in Winchester Cathedral which is said to have had four hundred pipes and thirteen pairs of bellows. The number of the keys in these old organs was limited, thirteen at the outside. Some of them were from five to six inches wide, in others nine keys occupied the space of three-quarters of a yard. The player armed his hands with gloves for protection, and to deaden the sound made by the clatter of his contact while he literally fought the keys. For this reason he was called pulsator organorum. The instrument was called "a payre of organes," that is to say, "a set," as to this day we speak of a pair of steps, a pair of stairs, and so forth. The peculiarity of the mechanism and of the method of playing only permitted of the production of melody. The organs were to a certain extent portable, and were taken from place to place. Portable organs were called "regals," and the name of "portative," sometimes applied to the choir or small organ attached to a great organ, shows the survival of the ancient name.

The invention of pedals or foot-keys is attributed to Bernard, a monk, about the year 1490. It is not unlikely, however, that the ancient manuals were played sometimes by the feet—they were wide enough to allow this to be done. When it was found possible to set the machinery of the organ at work by the pressure of keys of less width than formerly, the old manuals may have been utilised as pedals. The keys of the organs in the Monastery of Banberg, in the church of the Barefooted friars at Nuremberg, in the Cathedral at Erfurt, and in that of St. Blasius in Braunschweig, were only so much wider than those of the present day that an octave occupied the room now taken up by nine notes. All these organs were built or improved in the fifteenth century at the time when the invention of pedals is claimed for the monk Bernard. Much more might be advanced on the subject of the organ, in particular of the contrivances by which the pressure of wind was regulated to accommodate the large or small pipes, of the couplers, of the swell, and of many other matters of more or less interest, but the theme is too extensive to be dealt with now, more especially as there is much to be said concerning other instruments of music, each and all of which might be called organs on account of their construction as machines for making music.

The American organs, harmoniums, seraphines, and other like contrivances are of comparatively modern date, though the principles upon which they are constructed are old in use.

Their prototype is the "Cheng" or Chinese organ, which consists of a series of tubes having free reeds. This is held in the hand and blown by the mouth. The idea of applying the principle to organ pipes was first attempted by Kratzerstein, a Russian organ builder. The construction of an independent free reed instrument, acted upon by a keyboard, as a portable substitute for the organ, was tried at first without success. The earliest "seraphines," as they were called, had cane or wooden reeds. When the metal vibrating tongue was substituted, the progress of the invention became rapid, and it was applied in various ways to a number of music-making machines, from the musical pear to the American organ. The concertina, the accordion, the melodian, the lantum, and a number of other contrivances more or less useful, are all made upon the plan of the improved American organ, or Vocalion, which are the highest forms of development to which the use of the free reed has attained. The harmonium, as it is the general custom to call the machine, has superseded the old bands of performers in village churches in England, and its cheapness and portability has recommended it as a substitute for the organ. There are many worthy folks who imagine that the tone is similar to that of the organ, but they are the easily pleased.

Those who, whatever its tone, find it a help in leading the Psalmody, and desire to introduce it into their places of worship, but who have conscientious scruples about the use of anything in the shape or form of a "kist o' whistles" may freely take to the harmonium, inasmuch as the sounds are not produced from "whistles" at all. There are many who have so ardent a hatred of the sound that they would willingly form an inquisition, whose object should be to give to the fire these things in all their varieties, chiefly on the moral ground of retaliation, because they are instruments of torture.

The most perfect and pleasing of all the musical instruments at the disposal of those who would make household melody is the pianoforte. It is true that even this may be made the means of trying the nerves and sensibilities of the hearer, especially if he is a teacher or an examiner in music. But a good pianoforte is a good friend, and a sweet and loving companion. You may at times be offended with it, you may be rude and promptly shut it up; but it is never offended, and will pour forth its sweetest enchantments at your bidding, will help you to beguile the tedious hour, and will send you away reluctant, but calmed, soothed, refreshed, and made better.

In the existing types of the various forms through which the instrument has passed in its progress towards perfection, there is an element of fascination in the tone which is scarcely possessed in so strong a degree by any other instrument.

Those who have heard the dulcimer, the spinet, and the harpsichord will be able to endorse this statement.

The dulcimer, the earliest form of the modern pianoforte, was known in Nineveh, in Egypt, and among the ancient Hebrews. The art of eliciting musical sounds by percussion is as widely known as the art of eating and drinking. Some of the most savage nations who do not know how to make wires of metal, or even strings of gut or fibrous plants, know how to form graduated pieces of sonorous wood or stone so as to reproduce the tones of the musical scales in which they take great delight.

The Chinese have their dulcimers called King, the Japanese the Taki-goto, the Persians their Santir, the Turks their Canun, and other nations have examples of like instruments. In England it was once so common that every farmhouse of pretension possessed one. Sometimes, as in Devonshire, the dulcimer was made upon the inside of a door which served as a large resonance box and kept the instrument from harm when not in use. These were called Humbles, as much from their droning sound produced by the unchecked vibrations as from the primitive nature of its construction.

Many of the old English dulcimers were made with bridges in the centre, which exactly divides the string. The performer strikes on each side of the bridge and so augments the resonance. The old name for the dulcimer was psaltery or sawtry, it was also called citole, cistole, or cistella. The Italians had two sorts, the salterio and the timpanon. The former was played with plectra attached to the fingers, the latter was struck with hammers.

It is remarkable that in the application of a keyboard to the dulcimer, as in the invention of the virginals, preference should have been given to the effect of the plectra instead of the hammer, and that all the ingenuity of the ancient mechanicians should have been spent in contriving a substitute for the nails of the player upon the harp, or the horn plectra with which the player armed his fingers. These multiplied plectra, as in the first keyed instruments, were mounted on small pieces of wood called "jacks," these were set in motion by rods of wood called virgæ, and from these the name of the instrument was obtained. The "spinet" gained its title from the quills or thorns with which the jacks were armed. It was also called the couched harp. The harpsichord was also named from its resemblance to the harp; the spinet was smaller than the harpsichord. The latter instrument was furnished sometimes with two rows of keys, and some were provided with a Venetian shutter to open and close at the will of the player, and so to give the effect of an increase of tone.

Attempts to effect improvements in the instrument, which resulted in the production of the pianoforte, seem to have been made in many countries simultaneously, and Italy, France, and Germany claim the honour of having been the first in the field. The Italians have definitely settled the matter in their own minds, and held a festival in Florence in 1876 in honour of Bartolomeo Cristofale, or Cristoforo, a native of Padua, who is said to have invented the pianoforte in 1718. The Germans say that it was invented by Schroeter in 1717, and the French declare that the credit belongs to Marius, who produced his "Clavecins à Maillets" in 1716. These claims, though earlier in date, were made long after the invention had become known, and its simplicity of action so much admired. The best authority on the subject is Mr. Hopkins, and his writings may be consulted with advantage.

Silbermann erected the first pianoforte manufactory. Zumpe, one of Silbermann's workmen, established himself in England in 1760, and made square pianos. The pianoforte was regarded as a novelty for many years, for in 1767 it was announced at the Haymarket Theatre that Miss Brickler would sing a favourite air from "Judith" (an oratorio by Dr. Arne), accompanied by Mr. Dibdin "on a new instrument called the pianoforte."

The musicians of the time did not take kindly to the "new instrument"; they still preferred the older harpsichord. Some not only ignored it, but condemned it. The French organist, Ballastre, when he heard the new pianoforte just purchased for the Tuileries, said: "You may do your best, but this new-fangled thing will never dethrone the majestic harpsichord." Where is the majesty of the harpsichord now?

Mozart seems to have taken kindly to the "new-fangled things," especially those made by Stern. Charles Philip Emanuel Bach, the son of the great Sebastian, did much to popularise the pianoforte. J. Christian Bach was the first who gave regular concerts with the instrument in London, and the pianoforte gradually superseded the harpsichord. The popularity of the instrument is due to the ingenious efforts of John Broadwood, a young Scotchman, who was in the employ of Burkhard Shudi, a harpsichord maker. He and his fellow workman, Stodard, another Scotchman, used the grand action invented by the latter, and brought the pianoforte to a degree of perfection which commended it greatly to the musical public.

Successive improvements have been effected by many makers. Clementi, Collard, Steinway, Bechstein, Erard, Kirkman, John Brinsmead, with others, have done much not only to popularise, but to bring as near perfection as possible then, one of the most noble of all the materials of music.

FANNY MENDELSSOHN.

THE influence that women have exercised on the development of music in all ages is too well known to admit of discussion or dispute. But it has been primarily and mainly as executants that they have left their impress upon the art, and their claims to equality with the other sex on the score of creative power are nowhere so vulnerable as in the domain of music. The plea so often urged in their defence—that they have not yet had a fair chance—is less applicable here than in other spheres of intellectual activity. "Give us a couple of hundred years"—such is the gist of an article we lately read on the "Alleged inferiority of women"—"and if by that time the quality of the intellectual and artistic work produced by women suffers in comparison with that achieved by men, then we will admit there is presumptive evidence of our inferiority." To this we would reply that, confining our attention within the compass of one well defined department—that of music—women have enjoyed from the earliest times at least equal opportunities with men for attaining and displaying a mastery of their subject. The cultivation and practice of the musical faculty has at no time been deemed derogatory to women or necessarily calculated to impair their essentially feminine qualities. From the earliest ages and in all countries they have been inseparably associated with the artistic interpretation of music. The Syracusan women in Theocritus's famous idyl, who went to the Palace of Ptolemy Philadelphus to hear the Hymn to Adonis sung by a famous performer, are loud in their praises of this old-world prima donna. "Certainly women are wonderful things," says Gorgo, at the close of the hymn. "That lucky woman, to know all that! and luckier still to have such a splendid voice!" The divinity placed in closest relationship with music by the ancient Egyptians was a goddess, and the best authorities are agreed in crediting that race with a highly developed appreciation for harmony. Female performers took a prominent part in Egyptian music in the earliest ages. Under the later dynasties they seem to have usurped almost the entire exercise of the art. If we turn to the neighbouring nation of the Israelites, we find that amongst them also women were prominent as musicians. Indeed, it is worthy of remark that the first lyrical outburst after the Exodus was Miriam's song of triumph. The character of ancient Hebrew music is a matter of speculation, but we may rest assured that the noblest part of the Hebrew minstrelsy remains, or, to adopt the view of Mr. Rowbotham, that when music and poetry—and such poetry!—are blended so thoroughly as they were with the Hebrews, the music necessarily suffers from the union. If it were possible to penetrate to the heart of the buried past, the truth might disprove the contentions of those who are ungallant enough to believe in the inferiority of the female brain, and it might be found that women took as prominent a part in the composition of music as they undoubtedly did in its execution. Anyhow, we think we have made it tolerably clear that they had "a fair chance" from the days of Cheops down to those of Theocritus. But, after all, who cares for such archæological speculations? Whether music is the one art which owes nothing to antiquity, as the majority hold, or whether, as Mr. Rowbotham endeavours to prove, the origines of all the forms of modern music are to be found in those of the ancient Greeks, the fact remains that music, as we know and understand it, dates from about the year 1600 A.D. Dismissing, therefore, the Sirens and Muses, Isis-Hathor, and the Syracusan prima donna, Sappho with her six-stringed lyre, and Lamia with her flute, let us ask what chance women have had for distinguishing themselves as musicians in the last three centuries, and see how they have availed themselves of their opportunities. We think it will be admitted by all except extreme partisans that, setting aside such instruments as entail either greater physical exertion than can safely be undergone by women or are in the nature of things unfit for a sex which has in general a due regard for appearances, women have had free scope for the exercise of their talents. It is quite a mistake, for example, to suppose that the cultivation of the violin by our sisters is a modern growth. Tartini's well-known letter on the study of that instrument was addressed to a lady amateur. Lord Mount Edgcumbe, visiting Venice in 1734, enjoyed the, to him, "almost incredible sight of an entire orchestra of female performers." Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona. Before Madame Norman-Néruda there were the Milanollos, to go no farther back. And as for the Viennese Lady Orchestra, which we see had its prototype a hundred years ago, dwellers in the Levant, and even in the far East, have long been familiar with similar combinations hailing chiefly from Bohemia, where, as it has been said, everyone is born a fiddler. Under these circumstances the remarkable unanimity which women have exhibited in adhering to the rôle of interpreters, rather than creators, argues a lack of the special gifts which are summed up in the word genius. Otherwise, why should it have been that in the Mozart and Mendelssohn family the creative faculty should have in both cases manifested itself in the boy and not the girl? The training was practically the same in both sets of cases. Nannerl at twelve was esteemed "the first female performer in Europe," as her father writes, with pardonable pride. Mozart's precocious development was no doubt in part responsible for his premature decline, but his sister, who had shared his early triumphs, lived to the age of seventy-eight, and it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the chief cause for this disparity was the possession in the one case and not the other of the divine fire, which in those souls where it burns the brightest, burns often with the most consuming flame. Let it not, however, be thought that because we deny women in the past the gift of musical genius, we would be so rash as to predict that there never will be a great female composer in the future, or that we are so ungenerous as to refuse to admit their capacity to produce first-rate artistic work in other departments. In at least one important branch of literature, that of fiction, women are to be ranked in the very van. In a class list of English novelists alone, it would be hard to find four better "firsts" than those won by Miss Austen, Charlotte Brontë, Mrs Gaskell, and George Eliot.

Our object in the present paper, however, is not so much to lay stress upon the conspicuous absence of women from the list of composers as to offer a few remarks suggested by the perusal of M. Sergy's recently-published volume* on "Fanny Mendelssohn." It is a disappointing book, in so far as it adds nothing to Sebastian Hensel's memoirs of the Mendelssohn family, on which it is admittedly founded. Still, it can be recommended as a conscientious compilation, giving, in condensed form, the story of Fanny Mendelssohn's life, as told by her letters and journals, linked together where necessary by editorial hooks and eyes. Its chief merit to a great many readers will be that it is in French, not German, and a good French paraphrase is infinitely pleasanter reading than the execrable English translations too often perpetrated of the best musical books.

Few families illustrate the law of heredity in regard to talent more remarkably than that of the Mendelssohns.

Of Moses Mendelssohn, the philosopher and friend of Lessing, we need not speak, except to point out as an illustration of the outrageous intolerance even now to be encountered in Germany, that the Anti-Semitic party, headed by the Court chaplain, Stöcker, have seriously proposed that Lessing's plays should be boycotted, on account of his having taken a Jew—Moses Mendelssohn—as the model of his "Nathan the Wise."

Abraham Mendelssohn—who used to protest humorously that whereas in youth he had been known as the son of the great Mendelssohn, in his old age he was similarly distinguished as the father of the great Mendelssohn—was, if not a genius, a singularly level-headed man, who, as his daughter remarked, had all his faculties in the most perfect equilibrium. As the son of his father he was of necessity schooled in tolerance, but he was none the less a bit of an autocrat in the domestic circle. His children were subjected to a patriarchal discipline and a rigorous training which left its mark upon them. Mendelssohn it is well known, was heard to complain that he was over-educated as a child, and his sister, in her way, almost as accomplished and versatile as he was, kept pace with him in many of his studies. But while her father encouraged her to cultivate her musical talent in the most thorough-going fashion, it was always on the understanding that it was to be an accomplishment and a resource, never a means of livelihood. Apart from the fact that his circumstances were sufficiently easy to exempt her from this necessity, he had an old-fashioned prejudice against women appearing in public. The Roman matron's epitaph "Domi mansit, lanam fecit," represented more or less accurately his ideal of womanhood. He had no objection to his daughter being as accomplished as possible, but he counselled her never to forget that a woman's only true vocation was that of the bonne ménagère. At this point it is hard to resist instituting a comparison between the case of Fanny Mendelssohn and the sister of Mozart; the contrasts are as striking as the parallels. Both were older than their brothers, and by nearly the same interval. Both were exceptionally gifted performers and devoted to their brothers. But with these resemblances, wide dissimilarities are observable in their external circumstances and characters. No scruples or prejudices deterred Leopold Mozart from exploiting his daughter as a prodigy. He had no dread of the ill effects of publicity on the female mind. Aristocratic patrons were lavish of snuff-boxes, watches, étuis, swords, silver pens, and the like, but no benevolent humanitarian came forward in those days to redeem child virtuosi from the strain and risk of perpetual concert-giving. Nannerl played constantly in public from the time she was ten. Fanny Mendelssohn never played in public until she was turned thirty, and then only at a Charity Concert. After the epoch of their joint successes as children, Mozart's sister passed almost completely out of his life. There was no estrangement, but the intimate attachment ceased. The new cares and duties of his fevered existence crowded her out. With Mendelssohn, on the other hand, childish affection ripened into a devotion so deep and enduring that when the link was snapped by her death, his own hold upon life, already weakened by overwork, received a shock from which it never recovered. Lastly, the sister of Mozart, after surviving her brother for nearly forty years and spending her extreme old age in neglect and infirmity, was only rescued from want in her last days by subscriptions raised in England; while Fanny Hensel, who at no time in her life had known the pinch of poverty, was struck down in the prime of life and the full exercise of all her brilliant faculties, leaving hosts of friends to deplore her untimely removal.

Her predilection for the pianoforte was foreshadowed from the very hour of her birth. Writing to his mother-in-law to announce that event, Abraham Mendelssohn says that his wife declared that the child's fingers appeared to be expressly made to play Bach's fugues. Under her mother and Zelter's tuition she made rapid progress, though as to details the family journals and letters leave us rather in the dark. There is, however, a most touching anecdote illustrative of her innate goodness. Her maternal grandparents, rigidly orthodox Jews, had become estranged from their son, Bartholdy, after his change of faith. Fanny, who was a great favourite with these old people, had delighted them one day to such an extent by her playing that her grandmother declared she had only to express a wish for them to grant it. Whereupon the child begged that they would forgive Uncle Bartholdy, a request which, it is pleasant to record, actually led to a reconciliation. At the age of thirteen we have an opportunity of gauging her proficiency by the fact, as recorded in the family papers, that she played twenty-four of Bach's preludes by heart.

Nor was her education confined to the practical side of the art, lessons in harmony, counterpoint, and composition also forming part of her studies from an early age. It is evident that if Fanny Mendelssohn did not develop into a great composer, it was not for want of adequate training or executive facility. The episode of her courtship and marriage to Hensel, the painter, proves him to have been as devoted as she was constant; and no more eloquent testimony to her husband's worth can be imagined than that of her brother Felix, who, overwhelmed with grief at the tidings of her death, wrote to Hensel as follows:—"You made my sister as happy as she deserved to be. For that I thank you, and shall continue to thank you as long as I live." The long period of waiting that elapsed before their formal betrothal was not without its alleviations. Fanny visited Switzerland in 1822, and for the first time her keen sense of the beautiful was adequately gratified. The effect of such scenes as those of the St. Gothard Pass was well-nigh painful in its intensity. The loveliness of the Swiss lakes intoxicated her, and the thought of the proximity of Italy, her land of promise, filled her with unutterable emotions. Like the hero of Tolstoi's "Souvenirs," she was in that exalted state of expectation in which one feels on the eve of some strange and extraordinary event. Fanny Mendelssohn was not only a sympathetic, but a keen observer, and her letters abound in graphic touches and felicitous expressions. As an instance of all these qualities, we will take a remark from one of her Italian letters, in which she says, à propos of the features of the Italian landscape: "The palm stands alone, and can afford to do so, each palm forming a group in itself, which has no need of any addition; it is the symbol of the silence and mystery of the marvellous East." The great writer who has lately gone from us would have appreciated a view so much in accord with that expressed in his own famous lines on the contrast between Rome and the "brooding East":—

The East bowed low before the blast
In patient deep disdain:
She let the legions thunder past
And plunged in thought again.

On every page of Fanny Mendelssohn's letters we meet with evidences of the width of her reading, not obtrusively paraded, but manifesting itself naturally and unconsciously. She had a keener sense of the ludicrous than ordinarily falls to the lot of woman-kind, and this sense was immensely tickled by some of the comments of the Berliners at the time of the production of her brother's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, of which, by the way, she most truly remarks that it is the incarnation of Felix. Magnus, a friend of the family, overheard several young swells at a café debating whether it was Tieck or Shakespeare who wrote the plays. This, be it observed, was in the Pre-Donnellian epoch. A Court official condoled with Felix for having wedded his admirable music to such rubbish, and the fashionable world in general professed themselves affronted by the buffoonery of the play.

With all her artistic instincts, Fanny Mendelssohn remained true to the standard of the bonne ménagère erected for her by her father, and her letters show how cheerfully in the illness or absence of her sister she would undertake commissions of all degrees of magnitude, even to those of choosing houses and removing furniture. Nothing pleased her so much as the prospect of having a houseful of people, and her musical receptions were for many years a rendezvous for the cleverest and most attractive people in Berlin.

The most agreeable parts of this volume are those which contain Fanny Mendelssohn's letters from Italy. Her sensitive but genial nature seemed to expand in the warmth of the Southern sunshine: never had she met such sympathetic auditors, or found so much in nature and art to gratify that sense of the beautiful already mentioned; and of all the friendships acquired in her sojourn in Rome, none was closer or productive of happier results than that of Charles Gounod, then an ardent, expansive young man, of whom Fanny Mendelssohn says, "few people know how to enjoy themselves more completely and wildly than he does."

Before we take leave of M. Sergy's book, there is one point which deserves notice. Felix not only had the highest respect for the opinions and criticisms of his sister, but he also evidently highly appreciated many of her compositions. The line he took in dissuading her from publishing her works was the logical outcome of a sentiment which does him credit. In view of her position in society and her domestic duties, he held it unadvisable, as his father did before him, that she should quit the status of an amateur. But the publication of compositions was in his eyes a deliberate descent into the arena belonging by right to none but those who made music their profession and career.

INARTISTIC OPERA.

THE appearance of a new operatic manager always and naturally excites some hope of improvement on the lyric stage, since matters cannot easily be worse. It is just "on the cards" that, coming fresh to the duties of an impresario, he may have some idea of what is right and proper, and proceed to work it out. Old operatic hands are simply useless for purposes of reform. Long accustomed to that which is ridiculous and inartistic, they take it as a matter of course. It would seem, however, that the chances of a freshman doing anything are not very great. Here is Mr. Augustus Harris, for example, permitting the old absurdities to air themselves as much as ever on the stage of Covent Garden, and bring opera into contempt with every amateur who looks upon it as a work of art rather than as a mere form of entertainment for people who have dined. Better things were expected of Mr. Harris. He has clear ideas of dramatic propriety and ample force of will, yet either he cannot perceive that opera is also drama or the influences on the side of bad traditions are too strong for him. Moreover, the public seem quite content with things as they are, and even give their active countenance to the absurdities we would here denounce. Hence there seems to be as much need as ever for preaching a "more excellent way," and for protest against customs which, as long as they endure, will keep opera in a degraded position.

Let us do justice to Mr. Harris for he has gone some distance in the right direction—that is to say, towards dramatic propriety. He mounts his operas with some regard for truth of representation, and has swept the stage of a good deal in the shape of anachronistic litter. We do not now see costumes belonging to various periods in the same scene, nor are works thrown back in point of time for the sake of more picturesque dresses than those of their own proper age. This season both "La Traviata" and "Lucia" have been, as to matters sartorial, brought into the way of truth. So far good, but this is not all. Mr. Harris has given a semblance of real life to his stage pictures, and even succeeded in changing the mechanism of the Italian opera chorus. The machinery in question is ordinarily, as we all know, of a very simple character and capable of few movements—say, three. It makes the chorus fall into line, gives to their arms a pump-handle action, and turns their faces towards each other (with no expression on them) in moments of tense feeling. These operations, with the necessary ones of entrance and exit, are about all. The Harris machinery is more complicated, and actually makes the spectator believe that the figures on the stage are not only alive, but taking a real human interest in what is going on. Perhaps the best proof of this yet given appeared during the recent performance of "Lucia," at that point in the story where the heroine exhibits her madness. Usually the chorus watch her with the fixed vacuity of marionettes, or assume a severely critical air, as might a posse of asylum attendants given to observation of the phenomena connected with lunacy. On the occasion in question their behaviour, for the first time in our experience, really suggested the existence among them of a notion that they were the horrified and pitying friends of the demented bride. This was a great triumph, and after it anything is possible.

Mr. Harris may demand, "What would you have?" and an answer is easy. We would have an opera regarded as a drama with music. Is it so or not? If not, why the dramatic apparatus? If it be a drama, why not represent it under dramatic conditions? What those conditions are the manager of Covent Garden knows better than most people. Would he not laugh consumedly were some one to suggest that in his next Drury Lane play the actors should be allowed to come down to the footlights and make a series of elaborate bows in acknowledgment of their reception, that they should be permitted more bows when the audience applaud well-delivered lines, and even a repetition of them in the case of very emphatic approval; that, having made an effective exit, they should have leave to return and smile and lay hand on heart by way of thanks for expressed pleasure; that bouquets and "floral tributes" of all kinds should be, without let or hindrance, handed to the performers even in the middle of a "situation," and that, as in the case of Lucia the other night, an actress representing madness should, if she thought proper, come alike out of her dementia and her character to make the regulation obeisances and curtsies, afterwards going mad again, and proceeding with the play? Such a suggestion would raise very reasonable doubts in Mr. Harris's mind of his interlocutor's sanity, and justify him in sending for two physicians at once. Yet all these practices may be seen in operation any night, under Mr. Harris's auspices, during the performance of the dramas we call "Don Giovanni," "Rigoletto," "La Traviata," and so on!

It will perhaps be said: "Oh! but an opera is, after all, a succession of musical pieces. Music is its distinguishing feature, and every other is but an accessory." The remark shows an utter misconception of the real nature of opera, in which the place of music is to aid dramatic expression—to heighten its comedy and deepen its tragedy. We will not, however, enter upon discussion of this point. It is enough to ask, assuming that music stands first and foremost among the associated arts of the lyric stage, what is gained by flagrantly violating the laws of drama? Truly, the reply must be "Nothing." Put the case how you will, you cannot get rid of the fact that in every opera there is a play; that on the lyric stage there are all the means and appliances of dramatic representation, and that these are sources of interest and enjoyment. Then why, for the sake of expressing cordial relations between artists and audience, interfere with their proper working? We are not of those who would restrain an audience from applause as the performance goes on, and preserve a dead and chilling silence. That rule seems to us as artificial as the practice now under remark, but surely every demonstration and every custom which affects dramatic truth should be suppressed till the curtain is down. Then the artist can come forward in his own person; then "floral offerings" may be handed in with perfect propriety, and the public may make as much fuss over their favourites as they please without being inartistic.

We hope that the remonstrance we now make and the protest we offer may influence such of our readers as have not yet given the matter a thought. The public are more heedless in this matter than deliberately wrong. They follow a custom without reflection, and continue a bad practice without recognising the mischief that ensues. It is perhaps vain to reason with the artists, whose personal vanity is concerned. They, it is natural to assume, raise no objection against procedure which ministers to their personal gratification and sense of importance, though it do so at the cost of art. But managers belong to a different category. In a sense, servants of the public, managers must have regard to their masters. There is, however, no reason to believe that the public would resent the enforcement of a law prohibiting all and every notice of the audience by an artist while the curtain remains up. On the contrary, it may be taken for granted that the good result of such an edict would at once appear and recommend itself to common sense, as well as to a feeling of artistic propriety. We should then have no more inartistic opera.

"HERE we hope his bones may rest for ever, unless St. Paul's Cathedral is required for City improvements." These were the concluding remarks made by Mr. W. A. Barrett on the occasion of the reinterment of the remains of Dr. Maurice Greene in St. Paul's Cathedral on the 18th ult. There was a memorable gathering of musical celebrities on that day in the Crypt of the Cathedral. All the present holders of the offices and appointments which were held by Dr. Greene were assembled together—Dr. Martin, as Organist of St. Paul's; Mr. C. S. Jekyll, as Organist of the Chapel Royal; Mr. W. G. Cusins, as "Master of the King's Band of Musick"; and Mr. W. H. Cummings, as representing the Royal Society of Musicians, of which Greene was a founder. There were also other members of the Cathedral body gathered round the grave—Dr. Simpson, the Sub-Dean; the Rev. W. Russell, the Succentor; the Rev. W. H. Milman, Senior Cardinal; Messrs. De Lacy, Black, Miles, Kempton, and King, members of the Choir; Dr. J. F. Bridge, the Organist of Westminster Abbey; Dr. Charles Steggall, for the Royal Academy; Sir George Grove, for the Royal College of Music; Mr. Henry Gadsby, for the Guildhall School of Music; Mr. E. H. Turpin, for the College of Organists; besides Messrs. Lewis Thomas, Theodore Distin, A. J. Caldicott, Arthur D. Cole-ridge, W. Duncan Davison, and a few more to bear witness to the interesting occasion. There was no ceremony, so-called, the introduction during the afternoon service of his world-famous Anthem "God is our hope and strength" being all that was needed to distinguish the day; but Mr. Barrett was asked, in the crypt, to give some account of the affair, and he stated "that as the Church of St. Olave, Jewry, was about to be removed, the bodies in the vaults, &c., were to be re-buried in a suburban cemetery, unless the friends claimed them. Acting upon this, Mr. Cummings suggested that, provided none of Dr. Greene's relatives claimed his remains, they might be deposited in St. Paul's Cathedral, where he was for so many years Organist. This was done, through the instrumentality of Dr. Stainer and himself." He further stated that "it was his happiness, assisted by Dr. Simpson, who searched the registers of the parish, to discover the place of burial of the illustrious musician, and also to correct the date of his death, erroneously given by all his previous biographers. Sir John Hawkins states that he died on September 1, 1755; the plate on the coffin, faithfully copied from the inscription on the leaden covering, says, 'Docter (sic) Maurice Greene, died December 1, 1755, in his 60th year.' The books of the Vicars-Choral more than once give December 3 as the date of his death, and as the register states that he was buried in the Ministers' vault in St. Olave's, Jewry, on December 10, aged sixty, this is most likely to be correct. It is not a little singular to note that although his father was rector of the parish, there are no other of his relatives of the same name interred within the vault. It is also remarkable that no known portrait of Greene is extant. Though deformed in body, he was said to be possessed of an amiable mind and courteous manners, and was beloved by all who knew him. He was brought up as a chorister under Jeremiah Clark and Charles King, the latter being only eight years his senior; and he wore a surplice for the first time in 1706, when Queen Anne visited the Cathedral. He was the first who held the appointment of Vicar-Choral in addition to that of Organist of St. Paul's. He was apprenticed for five years to Richard Brind, and became Organist of St. Dunstan's in the West in 1716, and was appointed, over the head of Daniel Purcell, the brother of Henry, Organist of St. Andrew's, Holborn. He relinquished both appointments when, on the death of Brind, he was made Organist of St. Paul's. He became Organist of the Chapel Royal on the death of Dr. Croft in 1727, and in 1730 he was instituted Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, in succession to Dr. Tudway. He accumulated at this time the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor in Music. In 1735 he followed John Eccles as 'Master of the King's Musick.' He published his 'Forty Select Anthems' in 1743. These marked a new epoch in the history of Church music, as his organ playing gave rise to a new style of performance. Greene was one of the first who brought into prominence the solo stops on the organ, and he is therefore counted as a pioneer of the modern school of organ playing. His benevolent propensities prompted him to take an active part in the formation of the Society of Musicians, in conjunction with his friend Michael Christian Festing and C. F. Wiedemann. Greene had many children by his wife, Mary Dillingham, but only one daughter survived him. She was married to the Rev. Michael Festing of Wyke Regis, Dorsetshire, and their descendants are happily still existing." One other curious fact was mentioned by Mr. Barrett as having been discovered only on that very day. He had searched the books of the Grand Lodge, and found that Maurice Greene was registered as a member of a Masonic Lodge meeting at the "Ship Tavern, without Temple Bar," in the year 1725; Charles King, his quondam master, and then fellow worker at St. Paul's, being the Master of the Lodge, and two of the Minor Canons the Wardens. Dr. Greene's remains are laid beside those of Dr. Boyce, his pupil and literary executor. As there is room enough on the stone which marks the spot, it is intended to place upon it the following inscription: "Here also rest the remains of Dr. Maurice Greene, born 1695, Organist of this Cathedral 1718—1755, removed from the Church of St. Olave, Jewry, on the demolition of that Church, on the 18th May, 1888."

FROM Philadelphia we learn that the Senate, by thirty-five votes to ten, has passed the International Copyright Bill, which now goes to the House for its concurrence. The Bill strikes from the existing Copyright Law the words "citizen of the United States, or resident therein," and also the words "and authors may reserve the right to dramatise or translate their own works," and inserts in lieu of the latter sentence the words "authors or their assigns shall have the exclusive right to dramatise and translate any of their works for which copyright shall have been obtained under the laws of the United States." It amends section 4,956 of the Revised Statutes so as to make it read: "No person shall be entitled to copyright unless he shall, before publication in this or any foreign country, deliver at the office of the Librarian of Congress, or deposit in a mail within the United States, addressed to the Librarian of Congress at Washington, in the district of Columbia, a printed copy of the title of the book, or other article, or description of the painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, or model or design for a work of the fine arts for which he desires copyright; nor unless he shall also, not later than the day of publication thereof in this or any foreign country, deliver at the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington, in the district of Columbia, or deposit in a mail within the United States, addressed to the Librarian of Congress at Washington, in the district of Columbia, two copies of such copyright book or dramatic composition, printed from type set within the limits of the United States; or, in the case of engraved works, photographs, or other similar articles, two copies; or, in the case of a painting, drawing, statue, statuary, model or design for works of the fine arts, a photograph of the same. During the existence of such copyright the importation into the United States of any book or other article so copyrighted shall be, and it hereby is, prohibited, except in the cases specified in Section 2,505 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and except in the cases of persons purchasing for use, not for sale, who import not more than two copies at any one time, in each of which cases the written consent of the proprietor of the copyright, signed in the presence of two witnesses, shall be furnished with each importation. All officers of Customs and Postmasters are hereby requested to seize and destroy all such copies of such prohibited articles as shall be entered at the Custom-house, or otherwise brought into the United States or transmitted to the mails of the United States. In the case of books in foreign languages, of which only translations in English are copyrighted, the prohibition of importation shall apply only to the translation of the same, and the importation of the books in the original language shall be permitted. Each volume of books in two or more volumes, when such volumes are published separately, and the first one shall not have been issued before this Act shall take effect, and each number of a periodical is to be considered an independent publication, subject to the form of copyrighting as above; and alterations, revisions, and additions made to the books of foreign authors, heretofore published, of which new editions shall appear subsequently to the taking effect of this Act, are to be held and deemed capable of being copyrighted, unless they form part of a series in course of publication at the time when this Act shall take effect." July 1 is the date on which the Act is to take effect.

THE story of the origin of the Royal Society of Musicians has been told over and over again, and by this time must be familiar to the professors of the art throughout the world. The worthy labours of Dr. Greene, Michael Christian Festing, and C. F. Weidemann have borne great fruit, and the body is in a flourishing and prosperous condition. This is no place to discuss the matter, or the questions might be asked—Is the Society doing all the good of which it is capable? and, Has it so far advanced with the times as to make it equal to modern needs? That it commands the respect and support of many who are interested in music and musicians was to some extent shown by the success of the 150th anniversary, celebrated on the 10th ult. by a banquet at St. James's Hall, at which the Lord Mayor presided. In the course of his remarks, the chairman stated as a fact worthy of note that the Society disbursed upwards of £3,000 annually at a cost of only £300, or ten per cent. on the amount. There are reasons for the Society to be congratulated on this matter of course, but there are many musicians who would gladly welcome any plan which should be made to extend its operations and to make it worthy of its comprehensive title. The days have altered since the foundation of the Society, when the best of musicians gravitated to the metropolis as a centre. There are eminent professors of the art in many provincial towns. Does the Society make any exertion to attract them to itself? Does it encourage the formation of branch societies and so justify its title and its claims to consideration? It has many friends already, it could create more by exhibiting a continuous and widespread activity. The effort made on the occasion of the 150th anniversary was most successful. Donations were announced amounting to about £1,500. This sum included £1,000 given by Mr. Thomas Molineux, making £3,000 in all which that gentleman has now contributed to the funds of the Society. He has trebled the amounts contributed to the Society severally by Handel, Storace, and Begrez, who had previously been its greatest benefactors. Were the objects of the Society more extensively known it is not unlikely that it would arouse the generous impulses of many other "rich men furnished with ability." After the banquet there was a Concert, at which the following artists gave their services: Mdle. Antoinette Trebelli, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Charles Banks, the London Vocal Union (under the direction of Mr. Fred. Walker), Mr. W. Robinson, Mdle. E. Dratz (clavi-harp), Mr. A. Godfrey, Mr. G. H. Betjemann, and Mr. F. Meen. The good-will of artists was shown by the voluntary contribution of their valuable help. Perhaps in time to come the good-will of the Society may be shown in formulating a scheme which should be in every respect worthy of the art and of the artists it is called upon to protect.

THE following letter is interesting not only as illustrating Paganini's habit of dealing in musical instruments, but much more so on account of the opinion pronounced in it upon Berlioz, as a man and as a musician. We here see clearly expressed by the great violinist—in a private and confidential letter, never intended for publication, but written to his friend, the advocate, Luigi Guglielmo Germa, of Genoa—the very high estimation in which he held Berlioz at the time at which he wrote—two years after the date of his generous gift of 20,000 fr. to the composer of the "Symphonie Fantastique." The letter has never, we believe, been printed hitherto:—"Nice, March 2, 1840.—My friend,—I here let you see the answer which I have written to our friend Brun, who, after the advice you gave him, insinuates to me, in his letter of to-day, that we should exchange the violoncelli in order to obtain your Guarnerius."—"Monsieur,"—In reply to your charming letter of February 28, this is the reason for the exchange of violoncelli not having taken place. M. l'avocat, Germi, has written to me that he has shown my violoncello, by Amati or some other classical maker, to a certain M. Gibertini, who has valued it at 400 fr.; he has also valued his [M. Germi's] Guarnerius at 80 Louis [1,600 fr.] for any one who must absolutely sell it. He, therefore, offers his to me at 2,000 fr., though worth much more, and agrees to give for my Amati one-quarter more than the price at which it was valued—in other words, 500 fr. But he has been misled by the valuation of M. Gibertini; for his Guarnerius is worth not less than 3,000 francs, and my own (in my opinion) is worth as much, &c.—Your obedient,—* * * * Berlioz tells me that the advocate at Paris, M. Chaix-d'Est-Ange, who conducted my action, asks for 500 fr., and I, therefore, take this same opportunity of begging you to pay the 500 fr. to M. Vuillaume, the Luthier, to be paid over to the above-named Berlioz for the advocate. You may freely enter into correspondence with this same friend Berlioz, whom you must not confound with the common scum of Chapelmasters; but you should look on him as a transcendent genius, such as rises but once in every third or fourth century; and he is a man of perfect probity and worthy of our confidence. M. Double, the advocate, will probably have enclosed an account with the papers, or maps, or cards, which you will have received. In that case, let me know, but it would be better that you should settle it with himself or with Berlioz. I long to hear that you are pleased with the papers [?], and to have some personal news of yourself—Your friend, PAGANINI." In the greater part of the letter, which is in Italian, except the portion (noted) in French, Paganini addresses his friend in the familiar second person singular.

It has often been said, and with much truth, that persons are very differently affected by listening to music; and in looking round a well-filled concert-room this fact may be strikingly proved by watching the countenances and general demeanour of the auditors during the most striking portions of a composition. The direction of the attention, however, to a calculation of the number of notes played by a pianist in a given time, with the physical movements and amount of transmissions of nerve force to and from the brain necessary to the utterance of these notes is so exceptionally rare that a record of such experience deserves to be preserved. It is true that the authority for these facts is a medical, and not a musical, one; but such statistics are at least interesting from so reliable a source. It appears that Sir James Paget, in his address to the students of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, told them that when he heard Mdlle. Janotha perform a Presto by Mendelssohn, he found that she played 5,595 notes in 4 minutes, 3 seconds; every note involved at least two movements of the finger, and many of them an additional movement laterally, as well as up and down. Movements of the wrists, elbows, and arms were also necessitated, and he thus calculates that there were at least three distinct movements for each note. As there were twenty-four notes per second, and each of these notes involved three movements, there must have been seventy-two movements in a second. Reckoning also the number of "conscious sensations" for every note, Sir James came to the conclusion that there were not less than 200 transmissions of nerve force to and from the brain, outwards and inwards, every second. Of course neither Mdlle. Janotha nor any other pianist will ever attempt to study such calculations as these, which, musically, can have no value. Indeed, the very knowledge of these undoubted facts fills us with surprise, and makes us at once sympathise with the lady who, on hearing a vocal professor whom she had engaged to give her daughter lessons, speak most learnedly upon her larynx, glottis, epiglottis, and thyroid cartilage, said, in real alarm, that she had "no idea Maria had so many things down her throat."

THE performance of Wagner's "Lohengrin" at Trieste, with the insertion of a duet from Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," recalls many instances of similar vandalisms committed by operatic "arrangers" in this country several years ago. In partial justification, however, of such inartistic acts, it must be recollected that in England, save with the rich and aristocratic patrons of the Italian Opera, who considered that sitting throughout an entire lyrical work in the evening was one of the indispensable duties of fashionable life, vocal music was tolerated only provided it did not unduly interfere with the action of the drama. It was usual, therefore, to prepare the public for the introduction of "a little music" by including in the cast of a farce, or even of a comedy, one or two vocalists, the well-known line "Sir Harry, with a song," which appears in every announcement of the performance of "The School for Scandal," still reminding us of this custom. At the "English Opera House," in these days, melodramas and farces were constantly acted; but the patent theatres (then so termed) occasionally gave what were called "Operas," these hybrid pieces being mutilated versions of the libretti and music of the works of popular foreign composers, sometimes acted by inferior singers and sometimes by comedians who, as they could not utter a note themselves, brought a friendly vocalist with them to supply the deficiency, this slight recognition of the character of the work being considered quite sufficient, as it was thoroughly understood that on no account must an opera have "too much singing in it." In these absurd specimens of entertainment, presumed, rightly or wrongly, to be suited to the taste of the time, let us nevertheless remember that the interpolations were in all cases extracted from the music of an opera by the same composer. In Trieste, however, not only have they introduced into Wagner's opera the music of another composer, but that music by a member of the race which Wagner affected to believe had wrought no good to true art.

THOSE who keenly watch the progress of dramatic art in this country must be aware that we have for some time been drifting into the farcical school, in our passage, let us hope, from a too artificial form of dramatic work to one which shall faithfully and naturally reflect the time we live in. But it must be recollected that a "screaming farce"—as it has been termed in modern days—is no less a "screaming farce" because it is in three acts; and as it has been said, with regard to the reception of dull pieces, that people "cannot hiss whilst they yawn," so it may be truly observed that they "cannot criticise whilst they laugh." As reviewers of a large portion of the compositions daily published for "drawing-room" use, we cannot but be conscious that the same principle of disarming too close an analysis of abstract merit is adopted by the writers of the majority of these pieces. So-called "Fantastic," "Diabolical," "Spinning," or "Humming" compositions are crowding upon us, the object being to conceal by eccentricity the paucity of purely artistic inventive power. We have also "characteristic" dances of various countries, the "national" peculiarities of each being so prominent as not to be mistaken by even the most untravelled listener; "melancholy" waltzes, which thoroughly fulfil their title, and even Sonatas, protected, however, from the caustic observations of classical critics by the safe additional title "Quasi-Fantasia," or "di Bravura." Here then, as in dramatic works, there can be little doubt that, in order to escape what they call "antiquated form," composers write pieces which require no form at all, and thus dull the higher sense of the hearer by successfully administering to a lower one. This trick, however, once discovered and exposed, can scarcely be repeated much longer with any hope of profit; and it is the duty, therefore, of all who guide the public taste to gauge truthfully and unreservedly the artistic value of every piece submitted to their judgment.

AN enterprising genius has just discovered a new aid to composition. It is the "orguINETTE," the tunes of which are cut in rolls of paper, and work their way through the machine when the handle is turned. Common and popular songs are the staple of this form of artistic creation. These "vex the poet's soul" by their often vulgar associations. Still, out of the bitter may be made the sweet, and out of the old, the new. By reversing these papers, and beginning with the wrong end, a combination of harmonies and melodies may be produced which will surpass every ugliness in music which has, as yet, been offered for public approval. Composers in search of ideas are earnestly requested to give it a trial.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

HER Majesty the Queen honoured a performance of an English work with her presence. That the choice fell upon Sir Arthur Sullivan's Cantata "The Golden Legend" is not surprising on any ground, nor is there any reason to feel dissatisfaction with the selection. The knowledge that the receipt of unfavourable news respecting the Kaiser would prevent Her Majesty from attending the Albert Hall on the 8th ult. slightly affected the attendance, but the scene, nevertheless, was exceedingly brilliant when the large assemblage rose to greet the Sovereign. Regarding the performance there is very little to be said. Madame Albani, Madame Patey, and Mr. Henschel resumed parts in which they had previously won distinction, and Mr. Watkin Mills for this special occasion accepted the subordinate part of the Forester. Mr. Charles Banks did his best as Prince Henry. The aristocratic coldness of the audience did not hinder Mr. Barnby's choir from rendering justice to their duties.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

So far as Mr. Harris's season of Italian opera has yet gone it calls for few remarks. A succession of familiar works—"Lucrezia Borgia," "Rigoletto," "Faust," "Don Giovanni," "La Traviata," "Le Nozze di Figaro," "Carmen," &c.—has been given, and a number of artists have appeared, most of them making their bow in a familiar manner to an accustomed audience. It would, of course, be utterly superfluous to descant upon the operas named above. As subjects of comment they were worn out long ago, while with regard to the performers, no amateur needs to be told the merits or defects of Madame Fursch-Madi, Madame Nordica, Messrs. Ravelli, Del Puente, D'Andrade, Ciampi, and others equally well known. It is more important to notice the few who have made a first appearance since the season began last Monday fortnight. Miss MacIntyre, a young lady belonging to "society," essayed the part of Micæla in "Carmen," with some success. She has a pleasant, though not powerful voice, and possesses many of the qualities essential to a good singer. Fortunate in the sympathetic and quite suitable character of Bizet's music, she undeniably obtained a favourable verdict from the vocalist's point of view. As yet Miss MacIntyre cannot act, and it must be considered fortunate that her promised appearance in the dramatic part of Donna Elvira did not take place. That is not one for a novice whom, as yet, the glare of the footlights frightens. Miss MacIntyre's place in "Don Giovanni" was filled, at three hours' notice, by Madame Rolla, an American soprano formerly in the troupe of Mr. Mapleson. Madame Rolla is a serviceable artist, who knows her business, and whom an audience is always likely to accept, wherefore, Mr. Harris might do much worse than take her on the strength of the company. Another débutante—Madame Melba—comes to us direct from Brussels, but is Australian by birth and formerly sang in London under the name of Armstrong. She made her first appearance as Lucia, and achieved a considerable success, due partly to physical advantages as an actress, partly to vocal talent which has been highly cultivated. We cannot speak decidedly about Madame Melba's pretensions after seeing her only in such a part as that of Donizetti's very conventional heroine, but there can be no doubt that she possesses qualifications above the average. Her singing, though marred by a little hardness of voice, and a tendency to false intonation in moments of excitement, may, at any rate, be so described, and a considerable future for the artist is clearly "on the cards." Mr. Harris's only débutant up to the present has been Mr. de Reims, a tenor who appeared in "Carmen." We understand that much was expected from this gentleman, but he failed to make a mark and has done little since.

Turning to the ensemble at Covent Garden, we may say that it suffers from an orchestra which might be better on occasions when it is under Mr. Mancinelli's direction. Mr. Randegger gets more out of the band than his colleague, but even with him possibilities of improvement are obvious. Mr. Harris deserves to be congratulated upon a numerous and excellent chorus, to the aid of which, on special occasions, a supplemental body of voices numbering 150 is called in. We should also mention with entire approval certain changes in the mise-en scène—all in the direction of richer effect or of greater correctness.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THIS Society gave the fourth Concert of the season on the 3rd ult., and devoted it almost entirely to Edvard Grieg, who was present in the threefold capacity of composer, conductor, and pianist. The Norwegian master had nothing to do with two very interesting features in the programme—namely, Bizet's Suite "Jeux d'Enfants"—an orchestral adaptation of certain pieces originally written for the pianoforte—and Mozart's Symphony in C, sometimes known as the "Linz" from a supposition, open to some doubt, that it is the work composed in the town of that name during Mozart's halt there in 1783, on his way from Salzburg to Vienna. "Linz" or not, it is a very charming example of the master when in mood to follow Haydn, and was heard on the occasion to which we now refer with great interest and enjoyment. The Bizet pieces also commanded applause. They are very simple; and almost as artless as the children who inspired them; but therein lies their fascination. These two works apart, Grieg dominated the evening. Unfortunately, as a composer, he had nothing new to show, and was satisfied to represent himself through the Pianoforte Concerto in A minor, the two Elegiac melodies for orchestra, introduced by Mr. Henschel at his Symphony Concerts, and a couple of songs delightfully sung by Miss Carlotta Elliot. All these the Philharmonic audience must have known, in common with amateurs generally; and the chief interest of the Concert lay, therefore, in Grieg as a pianist and conductor. The Norwegian shone in both capacities. He cannot be called a pianoforte virtuoso, but in the execution of his Concerto he exhibited qualities far higher and more precious than those necessary for mechanical display. Nothing could be more neat, clear, and intelligent than his rendering of the solo. In it the artist predominated over the mere executant, and the audience were held closely observant by what seemed to be, in Grieg's hands, a new work. The success gained was immense, while its causes were the most legitimate conceivable. Grieg, as a conductor, gave equal satisfaction. The little pieces styled "Elegiac Melodies" acquired a significance under his direction such as had not been suspected previously, and the performance—a triumph of delicacy and refinement—left absolutely nothing to desire. Of the applause showered upon the Norwegian musician it would be vain to speak in attempt at description. Grieg, though personally a stranger, seemed intimately known to the audience, and appeared to have all their sympathy. This was no doubt due to the charm of the songs and pianoforte pieces which long since made his name a household word. It is now to be hoped that the greatest musical representative of "old Norway" will come amongst us every year.

The fifth Concert took place on the 17th ult., when the Society's Conductor, Mr. Cowen, took leave before departing for Australia to preside over the music at the Melbourne Exhibition. Mr. Cowen was cordially cheered by a crowded audience, whose best wishes for his success and safe return could not well be mistaken. The chief features in the programme were Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and a new orchestral work, entitled "Three Mythological Pieces," from the pen of Mr. Silas. The Pieces are respectively named after Venus, Vulcan, and Pan, and purport to be a musical expression of the ideas generally associated with those classical personages. We hear Vulcan at his forge, for example, making the arms of heroes and diverting his mind by thoughts of the goddess with whom he spent an indifferent matrimonial time. Without being specially remarkable, Mr. Silas's music is very pleasing and well written. The themes are genuine melodies, and their treatment is that of a composer never lacking in skill and resource. Madame Sophie Menter made her rentrée at this Concert and played Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in A. She desired, we believe, to open with Beethoven's in E flat, but, as that had been appropriated by Mr. Hollins for the sixth Concert, Madame Menter substituted Liszt's work, not greatly to the satisfaction, perhaps, of many among the audience. Her performance exhibited all the features with which amateurs are familiar, and was a remarkable display of executive power. Madame Fursch-Madi supplied the vocal music and the Concert ended with the Overture to "Oberon."

THE BACH CHOIR.

It will be remembered that the Society bearing this name came into being twelve years ago for the production for the first time in England of J. S. Bach's great Mass in B minor, a work which for length, elaboration, and difficulty is only paralleled by Beethoven's Mass in D. Though, of course, the event created the highest amount of interest in strictly musical circles, the Mass proved as caviare to the general public. Still, the Bach Choir has not allowed it to drop, and it would seem that the time is coming when it will be more widely appreciated, for the audience at the ninth performance on the 12th ult. at St. James's Hall was much larger than on any former occasion. This was the first rendering under the bâton of Dr. Villiers Stanford, and as it was known that the constitution of the choir underwent a great change when Mr. Otto Goldschmidt resigned the conductorship, apprehensions might not unreasonably have been entertained that the new-comers would fail at once to gain the necessary familiarity with the very arduous choruses. As a matter of fact, some falling off in vigour and unanimity of attack was noticeable, but, on the whole, the performance left little to desire. Miss Anna Williams and Miss Damian rendered full justice to the soprano and contralto solos; Mr. Ben Davies acquitted himself better than could have been expected, considering that a course of comic opera is scarcely a good preparation for Bach's music; and Mr. Watkin Mills was truly admirable in the bass airs.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

DR. A. C. MACKENZIE's address to the students, on the 5th ult., was a declaration of his interpretation of his views concerning the duties and responsibilities of the office. His discourse was well written and earnestly delivered, and will be remembered for a long time for the wise and thoughtful references to many matters concerning the work already done and yet to be accomplished at the Academy, and for the earnest and honest advice to those who come to labour and to learn. It was one of those addresses which impress with greater power, and produce more vivid effect upon the minds of the hearers because it was more or less unexpected. Dr. Mackenzie's friends knew of his ability as a thoughtful and conscientious man, all those who were present on this occasion share their opinions. He began by saying:—

"Pleasant memories come crowding upon me now that I am about to speak to you for the first time as Principal of this Institution, in which I received the chief part of my own training. It requires no great stretch of imagination to look back some twenty-five years and recall my days of student life here; and the picture is happily presented to my mind all the more easily by the fact that I now see, among the faces of my colleagues, many which make the recollections clear and vivid. I do not, therefore, come among you as a stranger; on the contrary, I but renew that intimate connection with the Academy which was during a short period interrupted, but never entirely severed. It is, comparatively speaking, an easy task which lies before me when I undertake the supervision of your studies, because a large, I may say the largest, portion of my life has been spent as a practical teacher; and the marked and onerous position in which I am placed is one with whose duties I am not altogether unfamiliar, and with which I am perfectly in sympathy and in harmony. In fact, you will, I earnestly hope, always consider that, as a former student, I am able and most willing to enter, cordially and sympathetically, into the spirit which should, and I am sure does, govern your student-life here; that I shall give you such advice as my experience enables me to suggest and take a personal interest in your work and yourselves. Of the advice thus offered, I would gladly see you avail yourselves in times of doubt and difficulty; for, apart from the sense of duty, of which I hope I have no small share, this will be to me the pleasantest of tasks, indeed, a labour of love."

He paid a feeling tribute to the memory of his predecessor, Sir George Macfarren, when he said:—

"In his memory he leaves us a valuable legacy, and even in death he reads us a lesson; I could not place before you a better and more striking example of that power of will before which difficulties disappear, nor can I find a better or a more forcible instance of that strength of character which is the foundation, the very basis of success in every art, or other calling, than we find in Sir George Macfarren. When we remember that an affliction, which might have paralysed the energies and discouraged the hopes of most men, came upon him stealthily and by slow degrees, and that consequently his method of work—I might say his whole course of life—had to be gradually shaped and adapted to its stern demands, we may well wonder at the strength of the iron will which enabled him to pursue his career successfully to the end, without hesitation, interruption, and—what is still more worthy of our admiration—without one audible murmur of complaint. . . . The composer of works for the stage in Macfarren's early days was, to a great extent, dependent upon the financial success of the theatre for which he wrote; consequently, much good work of that period never saw the light of the foot-lamps. I fancy that, in a great measure, the same may be said of the present hour; but at least three grand operas of Macfarren's have never yet been produced. His was one of those powerful intellects which take delight in dividing their attention among art, literature, and science; and although music was the special study of his life, and occupied his thoughts incessantly, he still found time to keep pace with the progress of all subjects which engross the attention of the thinkers of our day. This is worthy your most attentive consideration. The musician who is only a musician, however excellent, will surely find that he has but little chance of attaining prominence in his profession if he neglects to take careful and intelligent note of all that is going on around him. If he be a creative musician it is an absolute necessity, but whether he be or not matters very little, because I take it that your generally dull and uninformed man must be contented to be classified among the good workmen—he need never expect to claim more than that title. We find here the cause of Macfarren's prominence among his brother musicians during his long and active career. The successes of his early days, so far from spoiling him, only served to increase his inborn desire for the accumulation of knowledge of every kind—a desire which seems to have grown more strong as he ripened into manhood. The end of the late Principal showed the greatness of his character; for he died as he had lived, in the midst of his work, full of honours, in the knowledge that he was leaving to his successors the best legacy in the record of his own life."

Here the memory of the personal friendship for a brother student and distinguished professor gone to his rest so far overcame the Principal, that he asked the assistance of Mr. Henry C. Lunn, who read the reference to Walter Bache. Among the remarks the following were most salient:—

"It is sad to be obliged to speak once more of the past when I fain would think of the future; but there is another still more recent gap in our ranks. We mourn the loss of one with whom I have stood in close friendship for twenty years, whose career began at the same time, and ran parallel with my own, and with whom I had many sympathies in common. There are some among you now who have special reason to grieve for the untimely death of our good friend Walter Bache. Those who knew him as their master will feel that I am justified in citing him as an example of the ideal teacher. With him the giving of a lesson was a serious matter: he looked upon it almost, if I may say so, as a sacred rite, a religious function. His unswerving devotion to the master to whom he owed so much became stronger year by year, and I can recall scenes between Liszt and him which could prove that the affection which they bore one another was almost unique. The recollections Walter Bache leaves in our minds are happy and genial. In him there was something more than a mere touch of the true knight, "without fear and without reproach"; and a fine and sensitive artist, as well as a most noble man, was lost to us when Walter Bache passed unexpectedly away from our midst. It is, however, our duty to pass beyond the present, and turn our thoughts to that one thing which concerns us all—masters and pupils alike—the future of this Academy."

Dr. Mackenzie resumed his paper, and said:—

"It was the habit of your late principal to address you from time to time on general and special subjects in connection with your musical training. I intend to follow his example, so far as my most modest abilities in this line will permit me to do. What are technically called 'second studies' are actually of very great importance. That musician is but poorly equipped who sets out on his career in the character of a 'one-sided specialist.' The vocalist's taste and feeling must be improved by intimate knowledge of the instrumental works of the great masters; and, again, your instrumentalist is but half prepared for his work if he have not a knowledge of the glorious catalogue of compositions of which the human voice is the chief interpreter. The most prominent musicians of our day are just those whose interest in music is universal, and extends to her every branch: those who sympathise with and appreciate all that is good in every class of musical literature. I would specially warn you against the cultivation of one particular school of composition, to the exclusion of others which undoubtedly have a just claim upon your attention. The days of the conductor who limits his influence to assisting the growth of one particular school of music are, I hope, numbered, and the musician whose narrow-mindedness causes him to persist in running in one groove must not hope to gain notice or win the esteem of his fellows. To the progress of the student such a narrowness of procedure is indeed highly detrimental. And now let me say a word or two with reference to your position as students in this Academy. The benefits you derive by virtue of your studying your future profession collectively cannot be over-estimated, and it is in your own power to make these advantages doubly valuable by cultivating that unanimity of aim, that love of Alma Mater for which this place has always been celebrated. You may form friendships, artistic and social, which shall last throughout your lifetime—you have the opportunity of forming an opinion of the talents and judging of the work done by your fellow students at the concerts and fortnightly meetings. Each of you separately may assist the progress of others by sharing your knowledge of musical and general subjects."

He further stated: "Some of you may be placed in positions as organists in churches, and many more may, at least, come into close connection with those who exercise an influence over church music. This particular style of composition is, perhaps, the only one which we can, with distinct right and pride, claim as our own, and as emanating directly from our English soil; and I think it our duty to help to provide for its perpetuation, or at least to give the future organist a full and proper knowledge of its great importance. For this purpose I propose systematically and regularly to turn the attention of our choir to the works of the English church writers. I think I may safely expect that we shall overcome the difficulties of one specimen every fortnight, selecting afterwards the most promising performance for our public Concert programmes. The organist in England has a great responsibility upon him. It is through him that in smaller towns and villages the taste for music is formed. As regards opera, we may be able to help the neglected cause of our English Opera by giving some further attention to the already organised operatic class. Whether that class will fulfil its obligations, and answer the purpose for which it was originally started, depends very much upon the vocalists here. There are, no doubt, many of you who would willingly study the more important parts in opera; but can I be quite so sure that as many will be content, at first, to join in the 'harmless, necessary' chorus? Those students who have seats in our orchestra have to consider their duties to themselves and us. To the future soloist an orchestral training is of the greatest value—it sharpens the ear, quickens the sense for rhythm, assists the agility of finger and eye. The musician who reads quickly at first sight has many advantages over your slower readers, and the orchestra affords the very best chance of acquiring this gift. While I am not likely to forget to take you through the orchestral works of the great masters in music, I mean to put before you some examples of modern work with which I wish you to become familiar, choosing such pieces as I may consider suited to your comprehensions in your stage of musical advancement, and within your capabilities as executants. There are some works by Raff, Brahms, and Dvorák, which will answer my purpose at present; and future choice will be governed entirely by the growth of your ability to master the practical difficulties as well as to understand the intellectual qualities of those compositions with which you, sooner or later, must form an intimate acquaintance. I wish to give all students here an ample opportunity of studying the scores of the masters, ancient and modern. For this purpose a further extension of the R.A.M. library will have to be seriously considered. A library is a thing of never-ending growth, and its formation is a matter of time. I do not wish to limit the munificence of intending donors to musical works alone. Biography, historical works, treatises on special branches are at all times necessary to the student of our art."

Among other words of advice and encouragement to the students he said—

"He hoped by unceasing application to your general studies, and the development of your particular gifts, some of you will enable me to single you out as exceptional specimens of that musical talent, the possession of which some nations are disposed to deny to us at the present day. In spite of the many disquieting and irritating statements to that effect, I should be sorry indeed to think that we are in the future to take any but a high position among the so-called musical nations. Our early musical history speaks strongly and loudly in our favour, and you must one and all remember that some day it may be within your power to add a resonant note to the full score which is to represent the music of our country. To this end you are here, for this purpose we work together."

He then referred to the testimony of Charles Darwin in favour of the study of music as a consolation and compensation to other studies, and in conclusion he said:—

"I would earnestly ask you, one and all, to carry away with you the following precepts, designated as his golden rules, by one who certainly had the best right to be heard on such a subject—one to whose life-work every one of us has been at some time or other indebted alike for instruction and enjoyment—Charles Dickens. He says: 'I never could have done what I have done without the habits of punctuality, order, and diligence, without the determination to concentrate myself on one object at a time which I then formed. Heaven knows I write this in no spirit of self-laudation. . . . My meaning simply is that whatever I have tried to do in life, I have tried to do well; that whatever I have devoted myself to, I have devoted myself to completely, and that in great aims and in small I have always been thoroughly in earnest. I have never believed it possible that any natural or improved ability can claim immunity from the companionship of the steady, plain, hardworking qualities, and hope to gain its end. There is no such thing as such fulfilment on this earth. Some happy talent, some fortunate opportunity may form the two sides of the ladder on which some men mount, but the rounds of that ladder must be made of stuff to stand wear and tear; and there is no substitute for thorough-going, ardent, and sincere earnestness.' Can there be any stronger incentive to exertion? Here we have the earnest, practical man of science acknowledging the usefulness and even the necessity of the solace that music can give to the spirit; and, on the other hand, the great master of imagination energetically declaring the necessity of bringing to the endeavour for success, in an imaginative art, the practical, persevering qualities of this working-day world!"

MR. THEODORE WERNER'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

No one will be disposed to deny Mr. Theodore Werner the credit due to pluck and self-confidence, as allied with an extensive supply of ambitious spirit. This young Dutch violinist is not now paying his first visit to London, but hitherto his claims had not been brought prominently before the public, and doubtless Mr. Werner felt as much when he went to the extent of engaging Mr. Manns and most of the Crystal Palace Saturday orchestra for a series of three Concerts at St. James's Hall. The proceeding was a trifle unusual, not to say venturesome; but if it did not compel the world to listen, it would at any rate elicit the opinions of the critics, and thereby, perhaps, pave the way for greater results. Determined, consequently, to make the most of his opportunity, Mr. Werner announced altogether no fewer than six violin Concertos, by leading composers for his instrument, and played one in its entirety and portions of two of the others at his first Concert, which took place at St. James's Hall on Monday evening, April 30. Unfortunately we cannot record on Mr. Werner's behalf anything beyond the level of a succès d'estime. The manner in which he rendered the Beethoven Concerto showed that he had profited assiduously by his studies under Dr. Joachim, but only so far as concerned technique. The spirit of the great work, the warmth and fire, the dignity and tenderness which it demands from the executant were not present in Mr. Werner's reading. His tone, too, was thin, and the general performance left behind a very unsatisfactory impression, despite Mr. Manns's zealous endeavours to throw life into it. In the Adagio and Finale from the Concerto by Vieuxtemps the Concert-giver did somewhat better, here fairly deserving the applause bestowed upon him by his numerous auditors. On the other hand, his final effort, the first movement from Paganini's Concerto, No. 1, was again an uninteresting display of mechanical facility and nothing more. The whole of the accompaniments were admirably executed by Mr. Manns's orchestra, which was also heard in Cherubini's "Anacréon" Overture, the Entr'acte and Ballet Air in G, from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music, and the Introduction to Act III. of "Lohengrin." At his second Concert, on the 15th ult., Mr. Werner played Spohr's Concerto in D minor (Op. 55, No. 2) and Wieniawski's Concerto in the same key (Op. 22, No. 2) displaying therein the same qualities as before, with very similar effect. His third solo, Ernst's Fantasia on Hungarian Airs, showed off his talents to far greater advantage.

MR. CHARLES HALLÉ'S CONCERTS.

ANOTHER series of these admirable entertainments, aptly designated the "Pops" of the summer season, commenced on Friday afternoon, the 11th ult. As in former years Mr. Hallé is associated with three members of the Monday Popular Concerts' string quartet—namely, Madame Norman-Néruda, Herr L. Ries, and Herr Straus, Herr Franz Néruda retaining his place as the violoncellist. Special interest was given to the opening programme by the production of a new Quintet in A, for pianoforte and strings, by Dvorák (Op. 81). Whether this is really a recent composition or another of those early efforts penned by the composer in his days of poverty and neglect, we have no authority for saying, nor is there any internal evidence either one way or another. The work is full of Dvorák's most strongly marked characteristics, and though somewhat unequal is worthy of him in every respect. The least satisfactory movement, at any rate on a first hearing, is the "Dumka" or elegy, in which the ideas are treated at inconsiderate length. On the other hand, the Scherzo or "Furiant" is a capital example of genuine Bohemian music, and the first and last movements are very spirited and effective. The rest of the programme need not be referred to at length. It included Beethoven's Sonata in F sharp (Op. 78), Bach's Violin Sonata in E, and Brahms's Quintet in F minor, for pianoforte and strings (Op. 34).

Another important work of the Slavonic school was brought forward at the second Concert on the 18th ult. This was Tchaikowsky's Trio in A minor (Op. 50). A full description of this work was published in the Musical Review in 1883. It is dedicated "à la mémoire d'un grand artiste," and the first movement is marked Pezzo elegiaco. This determines its character, which is sad and regretful, with a strong infusion of national wildness and ruggedness of character. This movement occupies eighteen minutes in performance, and the next, a theme with variations, is almost as long. But so cleverly has the Russian composer treated his material that scarcely any sense of weariness is felt. The Finale is remarkably spirited and energetic, though scarcely cheerful, and the return of the principal subject of the first movement just before the close confirms the elegiac character of the work. We regard this Trio as one of the most effective produced for a long time, and concert-givers have been very unwise to neglect it. The impression it produced on the audience was unmistakable, the applause being more than usually enthusiastic. Continuing his task of playing Beethoven's last eight sonatas during the present series of Concerts, Mr. Hallé interpreted the one in E flat, Op. 81, "Les Adieux," &c., on this occasion. The remaining works in the programme were Brahms's Sonata in G (Op. 78) and Schumann's "Phantasiestücke" (Op. 88), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello.

The third Concert, on the 25th ult., only needs brief reference, as the programme did not contain any novelties. The Beethoven Sonata was the one in E minor (Op. 90), in the last movement of which Mr. Hallé is always at his best. Dvorák's Trio in F minor (Op. 65) is one of his ripest works, and needs close acquaintance in order to appreciate its manifold beauties. Brahms's Trio in C minor (Op. 101) is, on the other hand, singularly terse and clear in outline, and can be followed with ease. Schubert's Fantasia in C (Op. 159), for pianoforte and violin, and a fine Sonata in D minor, for violoncello, by Marcello, completed the selection.

First system of the musical score. It features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "rise, sweet, a - rise! a - wake, then, my fair - est; a - rise, sweet, a - rise, sweet, a - rise! a - wake, then, my fair - est; a - rise, sweet, a - rise, sweet, a - rise! then, a -". The music includes dynamic markings p (piano) and cres. (crescendo).

Second system of the musical score. It continues the vocal and piano parts. The lyrics are: "rise! a - wake, then, my fair - est; a - rise, sweet, a - rise! rise! a - wake, then, my fair - est; a - rise, sweet, a - rise! wake, then, my fair - est; a - rise! a - rise! sweet, a - rise!". The music includes dynamic markings f (forte) and rit. (ritardando).

Third system of the musical score. It features the vocal and piano parts. The lyrics are: "Fresh, fresh is the morn, in its first sum - mer hours, And bril - liant the Fresh, fresh is the morn, in its first sum - mer hours, And bril - liant the Fresh, fresh is the morn, in its first sum - mer hours, And bril - liant the Fresh, fresh is the morn, in its first sum - mer hours, And bril - liant the". The music includes dynamic markings p (piano) and a tempo. (ad libitum).

This system concludes the piece with repeated vocal phrases. It features dynamic markings like cres. (crescendo) and f (forte). The piano accompaniment ends with sustained chords.

First system of the musical score. It features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "rise, sweet, a - rise!" and "a - rise!". The piano part has a melody in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand. Dynamics include mf (mezzo-forte).

Second system of the musical score. It features four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "The but - ter - fly flut - ters its wings in the light, The lark soars up". The piano part continues with a melody in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand. Dynamics include f (forte).

Third system of the musical score. It features four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "wild - ly with hea - ven - ward flight, But thou art my sun - shine, thy". The piano part continues with a melody in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand. Dynamics include p (piano) and cres. (crescendo).

SEÑOR SARASATE'S CONCERTS.

Two years having elapsed since Señor Sarasate was last with us, it was not surprising to find a strong desire on the part of the public to renew his acquaintance, the attendance at the first of his Orchestral Concerts, on Saturday, the 5th ult., being larger than on any similar occasion in previous years. There is no occasion whatever to regret the extreme popularity of the Spanish violinist. As an executant he is, in his own special line, absolutely without a rival; and though some of the music he plays has no merit beyond the means it affords for the display of manipulative skill, on the other hand, Señor Sarasate has unquestionably strong artistic instincts, as evinced by his performance of the best works written for his instrument. This season he made his réentrée in Beethoven's Concerto, by common consent the greatest test of a violinist's capacity. In Raff's effective Suite he was unexceptionable, the pretty Minuet and the impetuous Finale exhibiting the exquisite quality of his tone and the ease with which he can vanquish executive difficulties. Musicians can regard these Concerts with approval, as, although the audiences may not come for the sake of symphonic works, they are compelled to listen to them, and may by this means acquire a taste for music of the highest class. On the present occasion Mr. Cousins's competent orchestra rendered Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony and the Overture to "Oberon" in a fairly satisfactory manner.

The fact of its being Whitsun Eve only diminished the audience to a slight extent at the second Concert, on the 19th ult. Señor Sarasate's first solo was Dr. Mackenzie's Violin Concerto which, it may be remembered, was composed expressly for him, and first performed at the Birmingham Festival three years ago. Since then he has performed the work in various portions of Europe and everywhere with success. The composer did not forget that he was writing for a Spanish violinist, and the national colouring, very faint in the opening movement and the beautiful Largo in A, becomes prominent in the spirited Finale. The Concerto was performed in a way it would be difficult to surpass, and its reception was exceedingly cordial, the composer being called to the platform and heartily cheered. Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole, which came next, is a somewhat bizarre work, but it contains a good deal of clever and effective writing and it suits Señor Sarasate to a nicety. In place of a regular Symphony, Liszt's beautiful Poème Symphonique "Les Préludes" occupied the foremost position in the programme.

The crowd at the third Concert, on the 26th ult., was greater than ever, probably from the fact that Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto was in the programme. This work is a special cheval de bataille of the Spanish violinist. The sweetness and tenderness he infuses into the Andante could not be surpassed, and his brilliant execution in the Finale is very exciting, though Mendelssohn never intended the movement to be taken at such a furious pace. A Concerto in B minor, No. 3, by M. Saint-Saëns, also created a great effect. It is an attractive and melodious work, the middle movement, a Barcarole, being extremely charming. At the close of this a passage, written for the highest harmonics, enabled the player to exhibit virtuosity of a wonderful order. His extraordinary Fantaisie on Airs from "Carmen" completed the list of violin solos. A somewhat tame and perfunctory rendering of Beethoven's C. minor Symphony commenced the Concert, and an Overture entitled "Beatrice," by Emilie Bernard, closed it. Of the last-named work we must defer an opinion until it is allotted a more favourable position in the programme.

THE RICHTER CONCERTS.

THE interest which has always surrounded the Richter Concerts in past seasons has not slackened, but, on the contrary, has, in a large measure, augmented, and the patronage given to the present series is even more encouraging than might have been expected. It was thought by some that the attraction of the music of Wagner, which formed, as it were, the chief basis of the programmes, had lost some of its force, notwithstanding the unapproachable readings which are always secured under Herr Richter's bâton. A large and enthusiastic audience assembled on the 7th ult. in St. James's Hall, when the first of the current series of Concerts was given. The great Viennese conductor was most heartily welcomed on his appearance, and under his direction superb renderings of Beethoven's Symphony in C minor; Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 4, in D minor; Berlioz's Overture "Le Carnaval Romain," and the "Kaiser-Marsch" were given; while Pagner's Address from the "Meistersinger" and Hagen's Monologue from the "Götterdämmerung" were both sung by Mr. Henschel with much effect. At the second Concert, on the 14th ult., the Closing Scene from the "Götterdämmerung" was presented with the assistance of Miss Pauline Cramer, who sang the most exacting vocal part with all due power. A repetition performance of Stanford's "Irish" Symphony was also a feature at this Concert, the programme of which included Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, the Introduction and the Closing Scene from "Tristan und Isolde," and the "Walkyries Ride." The third Concert, on the 28th ult., took place too late for notice in our present issue.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

ENTERTAINMENTS of this kind have been numerous during the past month, though we have not as yet to chronicle any performances of a very sensational character. These will come later on with the advent of Mdlle. Sophie Menter and Dr. Hans von Bülow. To be in order, chronologically speaking, we must speak briefly of the Recital given by Madame Frickenhaus at the Princes' Hall, on April 28. The qualities which distinguish the playing of our talented countrywoman are happily too familiar to need detailed reference. Suffice it to say that as regards sound technique, conscientious endeavour to merge her own individuality in that of the composer she is interpreting, and perfect refinement of style, Madame Frickenhaus presents a model for students. Her programme on this occasion was very diversified, comprising items by no fewer than thirteen composers, while the only important work was Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata. Among the less familiar pieces were a Bourrée by Edwin Shute, a "Zadumka" by Noskowski, an Etude by Nicodé, and a Barcarole by Oliver King.

Preliminary announcements concerning Mdlle. Juliette Folville led us to anticipate another juvenile phenomenon. The young lady is a Belgian by birth, and was said to possess remarkable ability as a pianist, a violinist, and a composer. On her first appearance on the platform of the Princes' Hall, on the 3rd ult., however, it was seen that although she is not of mature years, she is no longer a child. The first part of her programme, consisting of pianoforte music, was rather peculiar, fragments of Sonatas by Beethoven and Chopin being mingled with trifles by Godard, M. Lack, and Mdlle. Folville herself. Obviously there was no real test of artistic excellence in such a mélange, and as a matter of fact the young pianist only proved that she has well-trained fingers. Her compositions are feeble student's efforts demanding no serious criticism. In the second part Miss Folville appeared as a violinist, and materially advanced herself in the estimation of the audience. Her rendering of Mendelssohn's Concerto, with an excellent pianoforte accompaniment by Mr. Ganz, was not only neat and exact, but noteworthy for good tone and style. On the whole, the young performer justified her appearance, though she has yet a good deal to learn.

The annual Recital given by Mr. Oscar Beringer is always an interesting event, and that of the 13th ult. at St. James's Hall was so in a special sense to musicians. In the supplementary volume of Beethoven's works recently published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, is a Trio in G, for pianoforte, flute, and bassoon, supposed to have been written in 1786, when the composer was sixteen years old. As every note penned by Beethoven should be performed, at any rate, experimentally, Mr. Beringer must be thanked for bringing forward this juvenile effort of the greatest of all composers. Unfortunately we must couple commendation with condemnation, for without any assigned reason he allotted the wind instrument parts to violin and violoncello, and besides introduced a number of modifications in the final movement, an air with variations. If the work was worth doing at all it was worth doing as Beethoven left it. The loss of effect was considerable and produced a feeling of irritation among those who knew the facts, who however were very few, because there was no intimation in the programme of the changes made. The music is simple and tuneful, and shows that the youthful composer must have been familiar with Haydn. Mr. Beringer's solos included Schumann's Sonata in G minor (Op. 22), and pieces by Chopin, Mackenzie, Rubinstein, and Liszt, the last-named composer's "Rhapsodie Elegiaque" being given in memory of Walter Bache. There is no occasion to say that Mr. Beringer rendered justice to his selections, his qualities as an executant being well known to musicians.

Miss Florence Menk-Meyer, a young pianist and composer hailing from Melbourne, made her début in this country at Princes' Hall, on the 7th ult. We fear, however, that she cannot have been greatly encouraged by the reception then accorded her. To state the fact plainly, Miss Menk-Meyer was not adequately equipped to measure her strength with the army of talented Recital-givers who at this period of the year make London a "happy hunting-ground." She is gifted by nature with a charming presence and doubtless considerable musical ability; she has attained some facility in her command over the keyboard, and has written several pretty little drawing-room morceaux. As yet, however, her powers lack discipline. She stands manifestly in need of further study under the guidance of some experienced teacher. Sound, clear enlightenment upon the works of the classical masters will be essential before Miss Menk-Meyer can again venture on a public rendering of the "Waldstein" Sonata or the Polonaises of Chopin. The meaning of such things is at present beyond her ken. Meanwhile, the young pianist will be well advised to devote less attention to the transcriptions and arrangements of Liszt and more to the preludes and fugues of Bach.

Mr. Aguilar's Recital, on the 14th ult., at St. James's Hall, consisted entirely, as on former occasions, of his own compositions. Whether by these means he will ever succeed in rendering them popular remains to be proved. The examples presented at this Recital included two Sonatas, in A minor and E, and a number of genre pieces of the class formerly known as salon music. Of the Sonatas that in E is by far the most meritorious, and we should think is a later work than the other. Some of the smaller compositions are extremely pleasing, notably two named "Cheristana" and "Soon told." Mr. Aguilar has the gift of refined melody and writes with elegance, though his style is not that of the most advanced school. As a player his technique is admirable.

It may be safely said that no Pianoforte Recital occurring last month afforded purer edification or keener enjoyment than that given at St. James's Hall, on the 16th, by Miss Clothilde Kleeberg. The merits of this artist are so well known that, the Recital in question being the only one given by her this season, the room should have been crowded to the last seat, instead of which the numbers present were comparatively meagre. The young artist has never been in better form nor has more amply justified the high position she has attained among contemporary pianists of her sex. Her principal effort was a rendering of Beethoven's Sonatas in E minor (Op. 90) and in A major (Op. 101), bracketed together in the midst of a long and diversified selection of short works by dead and living masters. Miss Kleeberg played the Sonatas with the classical purity of style and dignity of feeling which she has accustomed us to expect, eliciting therein the demonstrative approval of her auditors. Her crisp, elastic touch and irreproachable technique were advantageously displayed in Handel's Chaconne and Variations and Mendelssohn's Caprice in A minor; while the same qualities, allied with a deeper touch of sentiment, gave delightful effect to Schubert's Moment Musical in A flat, and Schumann's Romance in F sharp. We have not space to detail the remaining items of the programme, but may mention as among the less familiar a Ménuet by Paderewski, a "Sérénade d'Arlequin" by Francis Thomé, a Valse by Tschaiakowsky, and last, but not least, a graceful morceau by Sir George Macfarren, entitled "Welcome."

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

MR. ERNEST KIVER's annual Concert at the Princes' Hall, on the 4th ult., was chiefly interesting on account of the items by Grieg, who is at present one of the "lions" of the musical season. These comprised a new Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 45), and a Ballade, in the form of variations upon a Norwegian melody, for pianoforte (Op. 24). The latter work is somewhat laboured, though clever, and cannot be numbered among the Scandinavian composer's best utterances. The Sonata, on the other hand, is a very piquant and characteristic work, the Finale being especially charming. The Concert-giver is an exceedingly promising young pianist, several pieces by Schumann, Chopin, Liszt, and other composers being rendered with spirit and good taste. He was assisted by Mr. A. Burnett, Mr. Prosper Burnett, and Madame Wilson-Osman.

During a lengthened stay in our midst Miss Ida Henry has contrived to win for herself the reputation of an able pianist and excellent teacher. Her work lies among a fashionable clientèle, and her annual Concert never fails to be attended by a crowded assemblage—such, for instance, as was present in Princes' Hall on the evening of the 9th ult. Miss Henry was heard alone in a number of well-known compositions, including Mendelssohn's Fantasia (Op. 28), the first part of Schumann's "Humoreske," Liszt's "Chant Polonais," No. 1, and a Chopin selection. To these she did admirable justice, earning in each the warmest signs of appreciation. A more noteworthy item, however, was Bach's Clavier Concerto in D major, with quartet accompaniment, said to be now given for the first time in London. Whether this was actually the fact or not, credit is due to Miss Ida Henry for bringing forward the unfamiliar work. It is interesting throughout, and bears a strongly-marked impress of the great Sebastian's individuality. The Concert-giver was at the solo instrument, and the accompanying quartet comprised Messrs. Straus, Henkel, Channell, and Hambleton. The first and last-named executants were severally heard in violin and violoncello solos; while Gade's Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 21), brilliantly performed by Miss Henry and Mr. Straus, wound up a capital Concert. Miss Carlotta Elliot sang songs by Massenet, Lassen, Fischhoff, and Ch. Lidgey, accompanied by Mr. Ernest Ford.

A series of Concerts of this class was commenced by Messrs. J. Ludwig and W. E. Whitehouse, at the Princes' Hall, on the 22nd ult., the Concert-givers being assisted by Messrs. Collins and Gibson to complete the String Quartet. The examples of this form of composition were Schubert's in G (Op. 161) and Schumann's in A (Op. 41, No. 3). A very satisfactory ensemble was secured, and Schubert's superb work, which is not heard so frequently as its merits deserve, was especially appreciated. Grieg's beautiful Sonata in A minor, for pianoforte and violoncello, was another enjoyable item. Madame Haas was the pianist and Miss Bertha Moore the vocalist, her tasteful rendering of songs by Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, and Grieg eliciting well deserved applause.

OTTO HEGNER.

THIS gifted child has lately been exhibiting his marvellous talent to country audiences, and has only appeared twice in London since our last notice. The first of these occasions, however, at St. James's Hall, on April 30, had special interest, as he had the co-operation of an orchestra for the performance of a Concerto. The work chosen was Beethoven's (No. 1, in C), with which Josef Hofmann astonished a Philharmonic audience last summer. Comparisons were therefore instituted between the "readings" of the two precocious children, and we do not think Hegner suffered by them. While his mastery of the executive difficulties of the work was as remarkable as that of Hofmann, his playing had more dash and aplomb. He attacked every passage as if he knew that his fingers were certain to do what was required of them, and his confidence was justifiable, for not once, so far as the ear could detect, did he miss a note. Specially noteworthy was his brilliant rendering of Beethoven's own cadenzas, and also the expression and feeling he threw into the beautiful slow movement. Later in the programme he performed Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor (Op. 22) and pieces by Chopin, but these were literally mere child's play compared with the Concerto. An excellent orchestra, under Mr. F. H. Cowen, gave a commendable rendering of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony.

In the programme of Hegner's Recital, on the 17th ult., the first and most important item was Weber's Concert-stück. This is a work which imperatively demands an adult for its proper execution. To substitute single notes for the rapid octave passages in the Finale is to destroy the effects intended by the composer, but this is what the boy pianist had to do, and other episodes had been carefully "edited" in order to bring them within his executive means. Add to this that the orchestral accompaniments were played on a second piano by Herr Willibald Richter, and it will be seen that the performance was one with which art had very little to do. Nevertheless it was an astonishing display of prematurely developed powers—perhaps more astonishing than anything previously accomplished by the lad. The rest of the programme was made up of compositions given at previous Recitals.

MR. ZAVERTAL'S CONCERT.

THOSE who have recently heard the wind and string band of the Royal Artillery will have recognised the high pitch of excellence to which it has been raised under its present Conductor, Mr. L. Zavertal. With laudable ambition Mr. Zavertal composed a Symphony for his instrumental force, and it was performed at Woolwich early in April last. Here it was so warmly received and generally commended that arrangements were made for an instrumental Concert at the Princes' Hall, of which the Symphony should be the principal feature. The event took place on April 30, when a large and appreciative audience assembled. The Symphony is unquestionably a clever and effective work. Though in the minor key of D, it is almost Haydnian in its brightness and vivacity, while as regards its orchestration it is essentially modern. The opening movement, replete with dignity, starts with a theme which at once arrests the attention, and the ingenuity which is exercised throughout keeps the interest fully alive without in any way lessening or breaking the tension from the first to the last. The Andante is a gem of melody, beautifully scored; the Scherzo is bright and joyous, and the final movement is admirably designed, and forms a fit conclusion to an attractive composition. The large force of wind instruments at Mr. Zavertal's command has enabled him to introduce a number of picturesque effects peculiarly suited to a military band. We hope his Symphony will have several successors. There was nothing else in the Concert to call for notice.

HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE above Society provided an exceptionally interesting programme for the last Concert of the season on the 7th ult. It comprised Schumann's Cantata "Paradise and the Peri," and a selection of vocal pieces from Bizet's "Carmen," which combination worthily sufficed to draw an overflowing audience. We congratulate the Highbury amateurs on having taken a leaf out of their Hackney friends' book, and given their attention to Schumann's beautiful work, which was heard earlier in the season at Shoreditch Town Hall, under the direction of Mr. Ebenezer Prout. We congratulate them, moreover, on a performance not unworthy to rank with that of the older body. Mr. G. H. Betjemann, the able Conductor of the Society, and his intelligent choristers had evidently devoted unremitting pains to the study and preparation of the Cantata, while the band, if at times too loud, was thoroughly up to its work. Mdle. Trebelli sang the music of the Peri with characteristic charm and sentiment; that of the Angel had an artistic exponent in Miss Eleanor Rees; Mr. Henry Piercy delivered the tenor solos with his accustomed beauty of voice and refinement of style; while in the remaining solo and concerted numbers excellent assistance was rendered by Miss Jessie Hotine, Miss Thornthwaite, Miss Monk, Miss Barnard, Mrs. Bradshaw McKay, Messrs. Puttick, Smithett, and Robert Grice.

The audience was plainly delighted with the Cantata and its rendering, but bestowed the loudest applause of the evening upon the "Carmen" selection. The Boys' chorus was encored, and Mdle. Trebelli and Mr. Piercy elicited quite an ovation by their admirable interpretation of the duet for Micaela and José. Mr. Betjemann conducted throughout with noteworthy skill and success. The works in contemplation for this Society's next season are Rossini's "Mosé in Egitto," Berlioz's "Faust," and Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

ON the 7th ult. the Rev. J. H. Mee, M.A., B.Mus., read a paper on "Points of interest in connection with the English School of the sixteenth century." He said that the English school had never yet received the attention to which it was entitled, for most people, he thought, in speaking of it refer to the brilliant galaxy of madrigalian writers of the closing years of Queen Elizabeth's reign, and conclude, naturally perhaps, but erroneously, that it sprung all at once full grown into existence, like Minerva from the head of Jove. Some colour is given to this opinion by the fact that the compositions of the earlier writers have for the most part been lost; but enough remains to prove that the English school had a long and honourable career before the reign of "good Queen Bess," and that the great composers of her reign mark the culminating point of a protracted development carried on through a long series of composers and theorists. He had rendered into modern notation what he believed to be the earliest specimen of English harmony in existence—viz., a musical setting in two parts of the last two lines of a hymn to St. Augustine. This was written, according to the judgment of experts, in a Benedictine monastery in Cornwall during the eleventh century. It was now in the Bodleian Library. Rude and awkward as its harmony seemed to us, it represented, he thought, a distinctly higher stage of development than contemporary harmony on the Continent, as the parts moved with considerable independence, and often in contrary motion. Mr. Mee also presented a three-part Sequence of the fourteenth century, exhibiting a specimen of faux-bourdon, and said it showed that we were on a level at least with our continental neighbours in this respect, and were subject to influences of the same kind and in the same direction. The researches of his friend, Mr. Birkbeck, of Magdalen College, Oxford, had shown that modifications of the ancient melodies for the sake of writing parts against them so as more easily to avoid the tritone, were never authorised in this country, though common enough abroad. In France they sharpened the F; in Italy they flattened the B; while in Northern Germany they introduced additional notes to soften the effect. But in England no such changes seem to have been allowed, and the ancient melodies appear unchanged from the eleventh to the sixteenth century. A good example of this appears in the melody of "Lauda Sion," which was altered as follows:—

PART OF THE MELODY OF "LAUDA SION."

(A.) Original Form, preserved in the last printed English Gradual (1532).

In hym - nis et can - ti - cis.

(B.) Italian Version.

In hym - nis et can - ti - cis.

(C.) French Version.

In hym - nis et can - ti - cis.

(D.) Flemish and North German Version.

In hym - nis et can - ti - cis.

After quoting "Sumer is i-cumen in" and various other compositions of the early part of the thirteenth century in confirmation of his views, he summarised the conclusions at which he had arrived. They were five in number:—

1. That what may be called contrapuntal diaphony was practised in England at a very early date.

2. That the harmonisation of church melodies by means of faux-bourdon was used in England much in the same way as on the Continent.

3. That the preservation of the ancient plain-song in an unaltered form suggested the predominance of a strict school of theorists in this country.

4. That the earliest specimen of an elaborate composition extant is English.

5. That the practice of writing parts in score was in vogue here before it was employed elsewhere.

The early part of the sixteenth century presented to our view a curious phenomenon in the number of learned musicians in full activity, notwithstanding the civil turmoil of the Wars of the Roses during the preceding century. But a striking parallel was to be found in Germany after the Thirty Years' War, at the close of which the country was full of learned musicians and able organists. But while the names of these musicians survived their music was lost, and we were compelled to look to the growth of the faculty of music at the Universities, and the organisation of our collegiate choirs to throw some light on the musical activity of the time. It was a striking proof of the prominence of an English school of composition that the faculty of music came into existence during the latter half of the fifteenth century, while the organisation of our choirs seemed to prove that the art of singing had been regularly practised, and had attained to a great condition of efficiency. In this way opportunities of the best sort were provided in every part of the country for the making of experiments in composition, and for that constant correction of the eye by the ear which is an essential condition of musical progress. Mr. Mee observed that he believed that the composition of madrigals in this country might be traced back much earlier than was usually supposed, and that it was possible to place its rise before the publication of Nicholas Yonge's "Musica Transalpina" in 1588. That this collection gave a powerful stimulus to this kind of composition was certain, but that was by no means tantamount to saying that the English writers learned the madrigalian style from Italy. In conclusion, Mr. Mee referred to Helmholtz's demonstration of the fact that the same chord varies greatly in smoothness according to the position of its notes. That great scientist showed that that expression which modern music endeavours to attain by various discords was obtained in the school of Palestrina by the much more delicate shading of various transpositions of consonant chords. He analysed Palestrina's "Stabat Mater," and after showing that it conformed to the principles he had laid down, remarked, "We can only conclude that his fine ear led him to this practice."

"Here," said Mr. Mee, "it seems to me, we can obtain a scientific test, which will determine whether the compositions of our old English musicians are so crude and harsh as they have been declared to be. I accordingly selected two of the best-known of their works, Richard Edwards's madrigal, 'In going to my naked bedde,' and John Redford's Anthem, 'Rejoice in the Lord,' and analysed their harmonies by the aid of Helmholtz's tables of consonant chords. The results showed that they stood the test as triumphantly as the compositions of Palestrina himself. In Edwards's tranquil madrigal seventy per cent. of the chords are in the 'more perfect' position, and the 'less perfect' or more dissonant positions occur where the author wishes to express the crying of the restless child and the weary 'rocking and reeling' of the mother. In Redford's Anthem, the opening passage gains much of its force and vigour from the use of chords in the 'less perfect' positions. Of the tetrachords used in this portion of the composition between forty and forty-five per cent. are in the more dissonant positions, they are used, in fact, much as a modern writer might use dominant discords. But when we come to the passage set to the words 'And the peace of God which passeth all understanding,' we find only one four-part chord in an unfavourable position during the first introduction of the words. Such correspondence of practice cannot, I think, be mere undesigned coincidence; but if it be not, we are brought to the conclusion that not only was the English school of composers fully conversant with the best methods of effect in vocal harmony, but also that these methods were part of their ordinary praxis at a time when Palestrina's music could hardly have been known in England, and, indeed, in the case of Redford, before Palestrina had published a single note."

Mr. T. L. Southgate joined in the discussion which followed Mr. Mee's paper, and made some valuable and interesting remarks.

OBITUARY.

MUCH regret will be occasioned by the announcement of the death at Glasgow, on the 12th ult., of Mr. ROBERT DONALDSON, music-seller. Mr. Donaldson suffered a severe blow in the death of his wife, which took place about four weeks ago, but he was in his usual health up till the previous night, when he suddenly became unwell, and, gradually sinking, died about daybreak. He was fifty-four years of age. For a considerable period he acted as honorary organist and choir-master in Queen's Park Established Church, and while in that position he produced many important musical compositions for the first time in Scotland. Among these were "The Seven Last Words of the Saviour on the Cross," by Haydn; "The Stabat Mater," by Baron Astorga; and "The Prodigal Son," by Sir Arthur Sullivan. Mr. Donaldson was a man of wide reading, and he had a keen appreciation of the best books, whether in poetry, art, or general literature. He was a genial humorist and a delightful companion. In musical, artistic, and literary circles, where he was largely and deservedly popular, his death will occasion a blank which will not be easily filled.

MR. L. M. THORNTON, author of "The Postman's Knock" and other songs, died in Bath workhouse on the 8th ult.

MR. OLUF SVENDSEN, the distinguished flute player, and for a number of years one of the leading representatives of his art, died, on the 16th ult., in London. He was born in Christiania on April 9, 1832, and received his first lessons in music from his father. At the early age of fourteen he was engaged as first flautist of the Christiania Theatre. In 1853 he entered the Conservatoire of Brussels, and came to London two years later at the invitation of the famous conductor, Julien. He became a member of the orchestras of the Crystal Palace, Her Majesty's Theatre, the Philharmonic and Richter Concerts, and in 1861 was appointed first flute in the Queen's private band. He was also one of the professors at the Royal Academy of Music, and was a solo player of great merit. His funeral took place at Highgate Cemetery (new ground) on Saturday, the 19th ult. The musical profession was represented by the following gentlemen:—Dr. A. C. Mackenzie (Principal of the Royal Academy of Music), and the following well known flautists: Messrs. A. P. Vivian, R. Samson, A. Jensen, H. W. Hollis, C. Buziau, W. B. Boddington, H. Chapman, Jun., and H. G. Lebon, with several professors of other instruments.

On the 8th ult., at the ripe age of seventy-three years and eleven months, after a service of sixty-three years as a chorister, was laid to rest, under the shadow of the Cathedral he loved so well, and where he had sung for so many years, all that was mortal of the late GEORGE GRAY, Vicar-Choral of St. Patrick's Cathedral. He was born at Eton, in June, 1815, and in due time became a chorister of Eton College Chapel. After losing his childish treble he was appointed a singing man at Ely Cathedral, and in 1840 came over to Ireland to Armagh Cathedral. Six years later he returned to England, and was appointed to the choir of Westminster Abbey, and to the Chapel Royal, St. James's. Returning again to Ireland in June, 1861, he was made a member of the Corporation of Vicars-Choral of St. Patrick's Cathedral, and afterwards a member of the Choir of Trinity College Chapel. Mr. Gray's name will be long remembered as the founder of the Choir Benevolent Fund in London in 1851. Afterwards he undertook the management as honorary secretary, and successfully conducted many church festivals in connection with the fund, notably in Westminster Abbey. His extreme kindness of disposition and endless fund of anecdote endeared him to a large circle of friends, especially in the north of Ireland. The Choir Benevolent Fund, London, contributed a beautiful "In Memoriam" floral emblem at the funeral.

MOST of the blanks in the Festival scheme have been filled up in the course of the past month, and though one more disappointment has yet to be recorded, in the withdrawal of Mr. Goring Thomas's promised work, owing to the composer's inability to complete it in time, the programme as a whole has been considerably strengthened, alike as regards works and executants. In addition to the three Symphonies previously announced—Mozart's "Jupiter," Beethoven's C minor, and Haydn's No. 6 of the Salomon set—we are to have a Pianoforte Concerto of Schumann, for which the services of Miss Fanny Davies have been enlisted, Brahms's "Academische" Overture, written in 1880, Weber's Hymn "In seiner Ordnung," a Suite and Concert Overture ("In Autumn") by Grieg, a Psalm by Robert Franz, Liszt's third Rhapsodie, and the "Meistersinger" Vorspiel of Wagner. The choral rehearsals of Dr. Bridge's "Callirhoe," as well as of Handel's "Saul" and Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" are now completed, and the choir is engaged upon Berlioz's "Messe des Morts." Herr Richter has paid several visits to Birmingham and is well pleased with the progress made.

One of the events of the musical season, which occurred too late for notice last month, was the Pianoforte Recital of Miss Fanny Davies, which attracted a large and enthusiastic audience to the Masonic Hall on April 27. Since her previous appearance in her native town, Miss Davies had been reaping fresh laurels and extending her experience on the Continent and elsewhere, and her playing exhibited an ease as well as finish and maturity of style sometimes wanting in her earlier displays. Her selection comprised, among other noteworthy items, Beethoven's Sonata in D major (Op. 10, No. 3), Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Op. 35, No. 1), Schumann's Carnival, a Romance in E flat minor of Madame Schumann, Brahms's Rhapsodie in G minor (Op. 79, No. 2), and Chopin's Valse in A flat (Op. 34, No. 1).

The Edgbaston Amateur Musical Union wound up their season with an Orchestral Concert at the Edgbaston Assembly Rooms on the 14th ult., when the principal items of the programme were Gade's Third Symphony in A minor, Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, Onslow's Overture to "Le Colporteur," Reinecke's Entr'acte from "King Manfred," and Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March. The band, under Mr. F. W. Cooke's direction, shows steady progress, though it is scarcely strong enough yet to do justice to a symphony or concerto without professional assistance. It was heard to most advantage in the Onslow Overture and the Mendelssohn March. Mrs. Richardson gave an admirable rendering of the pianoforte part in Mozart's Concerto, and Miss Florence Donaldson, a young local violinist, fairly roused the enthusiasm of the audience by the grace and finish of her performance in Vieuxtemps's "Rêverie" and De Bériot's "Scène de ballet." Mr. Percy Taunton, the solo vocalist of the evening, was most successful in Tito Mattei's "La Patria."

The Birmingham Amateur Operatic Society, whose services are in frequent request for charitable purposes, gave two performances of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Iolanthe" at the Edgbaston Assembly Rooms, on the 16th and 17th ult., in aid of the Queen's Hospital Improvement Fund. The operetta was capitally rendered and mounted, the honours of the performance falling to the Iolanthe of Mrs. F. Pearson, the Phyllis of Mrs. Cortes Perera, and the Fairy Queen of Miss Stavart, who undertook the part at very short notice, owing to the indisposition of the lady originally cast for the part. Mr. Percy Taunton was fairly effective as Strephon; Mr. S. Royle Shore, jun., made a diverting Lord Chancellor, and the Mount Ararat of Mr. G. A. Brewerton left little to be desired. The chorus was hardly so efficient as on some previous occasions, but the band was in some respects better. This opera was repeated on the 31st ult. in aid of another charity.

The Edgbaston Amateur Musical Union and the Moseley Choral Society united their efforts to good purpose on April 26, at a Concert given in the Midland Institute on behalf of the local Deaf and Dumb Institution. The programme comprised Rossini's "Stabat Mater," De Bériot's seventh Violin Concerto, in which Miss Donaldson was the soloist; Mozart's "Zauberflöte" Overture, Wagner's "Tannhäuser" March and Chorus, and a miscellaneous vocal selection.

At the fourth ordinary meeting of the Musical Guild, on the 7th ult., Mr. John Heywood in the chair, the customary Concert, in which Mr. and Madame Oscar Pollack among other artists took part, was preceded by a thoughtful and interesting paper by Mr. Charles Lunn, containing "Some suggestions for the basis of a Mental Text-book: Expression for teachers, singers, and players displayed in the form of Question and Answer," which gave rise to an animated discussion.

Mr. Gaul's "Holy City" was performed under the direction of Mr. T. G. Locker in the Lecture Hall, Graham Street, on the 3rd ult., the band and chorus numbering over 100 performers. The choral singing generally was very praiseworthy, but the band accompaniments were somewhat halting. In the vocal department the honours fell to Miss Middleton.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ON April 28, too late for insertion in last month's report, Señor Sarasate, with Herr Schönberger as pianist, gave an afternoon Recital in the Music Hall to a large and appreciative audience. Raff's Suite with the "Moto perpetuo," a Violin Concerto (Wieniawski, Op. 22), Rondo Capriccioso (Saint-Saëns), "Faust" Fantasia (Sarasate), and a set of Variations on a Spanish theme "La Moulinière" (Sarasate) were given with great artistic skill. In these Señor Sarasate was accompanied by Herr Schönberger, excepting the two last-named, which were accompanied by Herr Goldschmidt. Herr Schönberger's solos were an Etude of his own, Chopin's Valse in A flat (Op. 42), Godowski's "Moto perpetuo," and, as an encore, two numbers of a set of German Dances (unpublished, the MS. in the possession of Professor Seiss, of Frankfurt). These dances were written by Beethoven for a small orchestra, and Herr Schönberger has arranged them for pianoforte. Some amusing guesses were made by the audience as to the name of the composer of the German dances.

A large and representative company of the professional and amateur musical talent of Edinburgh gathered, under the auspices of the Edinburgh Society of Musicians, in the Waterloo Hotel, on the evening of the 9th ult., in honour of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, who, by invitation of this Society, paid a visit to his native city. Over a friendly supper he received the warmest congratulations on his appointment to the distinguished post of Principal of the Royal Academy of Music and the honour paid him by the city of Glasgow in connection with its Exhibition. The Society had, at the same time, the pleasure of entertaining Mr. Barrett, of London. His kindly, warm-hearted speeches, and those of Dr. Mackenzie for the further success of this Society will not easily be forgotten. Dr. Pryde, of this city, was also a guest of the Society on this occasion. Apologies were read for the absence of Mr. Seligmann, President of the Glasgow Society of Musicians, Sir George Grove, and Mr. Alfred Littleton. Mr. George Lichtenstein occupied the chair and discharged his duties in a most genial and able manner.

The fifth annual Concert was given in the Masonic Hall, on the evening of the 18th ult., by the pupils of Herr Otto Schweizer, assisted by a ladies' choir under the direction of Mr. Arthur Edmunds. The more important numbers of the programme were Beethoven's Sonata (F major, Op. 10, No. 2), Mendelssohn's Variations Sérieuses, Chopin's Fantaisie in F major (Op. 49), "Erl-King" (Schubert-Liszt), and "Barcarole" (Schweizer, Op. 22). These two last-named were played by Miss Charlotte Gibson, and Chopin's "Polonaise" (A flat, Op. 53) by Mr. Theodor Hoek. These two pupils also played, as a pianoforte duet, Bülow's arrangement of the "Tannhäuser"

Overture. The vocal numbers were trios: Barnett's "The Bee," Schweizer's "Sympathy," and "Mid the Lilies," and Mrs. Arthur Edmunds sang a Serenade by Blumenthal, and, as an encore, Balfe's "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls." Mr. Franklin Peterson accompanied.

The Edinburgh Harmonists (the oldest Glee Society of our city) held their closing meeting on the evening of the 19th ult. Glee and solos by Bishop, Cooke, Hutton, A. C. Mackenzie, Hutton, and Reeve were sung with great taste and admirable precision. Mr. R. S. Riddell is Conductor of this Society.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE tenth annual Concert by the Glasgow Academy Choir—boys' voices—took place in the Queen's Rooms on the 4th ult., in presence of a large and fashionable audience. The programme comprised, chiefly, a Cantata for treble voices "The silver bells," the composition of Mr. Allan Macbeth, along with a number of anthems, part-songs, madrigals, glees, &c. Besides the youthful academicians there were also a number of former pupils of the school now grown to manhood, who took the tenor and bass parts. The Concert began with Barnby's Anthem "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works." After a choral trio by Mendelssohn, one of Pinsuti's four-part songs and a song or two were also given. Mr. Macbeth's Cantata pleased very much by reason of its tunefulness and elegance. Masters Miller, Irvine, and McNair distinguished themselves in the solos of the work. Henry Smart's beautiful trio "The bird at sea" and Macfarren's clever and humorous setting of the nursery rhyme "Sing a song of sixpence," were also sung with evident enjoyment by the young people. Altogether the performance was highly creditable to the Conductor, Mr. John Maclaren. The pianoforte accompaniments were played by Mrs. Maclaren, supplemented at the harmonium by Mr. C. H. Woolnoth, an old Academy boy. The proceeds of the Concert were given to the Royal Infirmary.

The Glasgow International Exhibition was opened on the 8th ult. by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Ode "The New Covenant," written by Mr. Robert Buchanan and set to music by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, demands chief attention in connection with this event. If there are differences of opinion as to the merit of the poetry there is certainly but one opinion as to the musical setting of the Ode, and that is that it is masterly and appropriate. The skilful use made of the old Genevan melody "The Old Hundredth" in part, and latterly in whole, is particularly admired. The performance of the Ode, under the bâton of the composer, was in every way satisfactory. The choir had evidently taken great pains to show themselves at their best in a work which evidently satisfied their expectations and awakened their strongest sympathies. Every shade of expression was duly observed, and all felt the influence of the presence of the composer on this occasion. One interesting fact was noticed and treasured up as a favourable omen for the success of the undertaking for which the Ode was supplied. When it commenced the sky was overclouded, but when the words which relate to "this golden weather" were being sung, a burst of sunshine illumined the hall with an effect that was both startling and comforting. At the conclusion, when the melody of the Old Hundredth Psalm tune struck upon the ear and the chorus burst forth into a joyous song of thanksgiving, the whole audience, including the Prince and Princess, seemed to be moved by one impulse, and rose to their feet, and stood reverently until the final notes were sounded. This was the most convincing proof that the composer had so far designed his music in perfect accord with the sentiment which appealed most forcibly to the feelings of his countrymen, and all who took part in the inauguration of a great national event. The character of the words and of the music are well fitted for many solemn gatherings in which an ascription of praise would be welcome. It is not a mere pièce de circonstance, but is well calculated to supplement the repertoires of choral societies when a short and effective work is required. It is scored for a military band and organ, and the combination of tone so produced is both novel and effective. It is said that the composer intends scoring it for the ordinary orchestra, so that it may be available for other occasions than that for which it was originally written.

The other choral selections given on the day were "Hail, bright abode," from "Tannhäuser," "Twine ye the garlands" from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," and the Hallelujah Chorus from "The Messiah."

The musical arrangements in connection with the Exhibition are of the usual character, military band music prevailing. Daily organ recitals and fortnightly choral concerts are part of the musical recreation provided. The Glasgow Choral Union give two concerts, at one of which Dr. Mackenzie's Ode, "The New Covenant," will be repeated. The Entertainments Committee, indeed, have here missed their opportunity of bringing together the best choral talent in the country to add to the attractions of the Exhibition, and, following a somewhat parsimonious policy, have accepted the services of choirs and societies reputable enough in their own position, but not at all equal to the needs of the undertaking.

On the night of the 7th ult. the Glasgow Society of Musicians entertained Dr. A. C. Mackenzie and Sir George Grove to supper. Mr. W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac., Oxon., and Mr. Zavertal, Royal Artillery Band, were among the other guests. About one hundred and forty gentlemen were present. Both Dr. Mackenzie and Sir George Grove replied to the toasts proposed in their honour, and Mr. Barrett, who was specially requested to submit to the assembly the toast of "Prosperity to the Glasgow Society of Musicians," commended the work they had done in cementing the good feeling which should exist among all workers in the beloved art, and while expressing a regret that they had no kindred society in the metropolis, he also hoped that the Glasgow Society would gain in power and influence so that on all occasions of a great undertaking such as that of the opening and continuance of an Exhibition in which the arts had place, that the municipality might be roused to the advisability of consulting some of the many eminent professors of the art of music with regard to the musical arrangements.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE visits of Señor Sarasate command attentive and appreciative audiences, and his latest appearance, on the 12th ult., in the small concert-room of St. George's Hall, was no exception. The great violinist was accompanied by Herr Schönberger, who distinctly justified the high anticipations which had been formed as to his ability. He gave three pianoforte selections, the most notable of which was Godowski's "Moto perpetuo," a composition demanding the utmost skill and delicacy of treatment.

Señor Sarasate played a difficult and yet exceedingly interesting Suite by Raff, a Concerto by Wieniawski, selections of Moszkowski and Saint-Saëns, and a dashing solo of his own, entitled "La Moulinière."

We have had another week of English Opera, a sort of addendum to the usual Christmas season, which was so successful. Mr. Carl Rosa has again reason to be grateful for the welcome accorded to this additional, if brief, visit. Meyerbeer's "Robert the Devil" has been well received, the excellence of the artists, and the superb manner in which the opera is mounted satisfying all requirements. "Carmen" and the "Marriage of Figaro" have also attracted large audiences, due in the main to Madame Marie Roze, who has made such a special study of the rôles of the wayward Gipsy and Cherubino. There was a tinge of sentiment, too, in these performances, as they were announced as the last appearances in Liverpool of Madame Roze in English Opera, but we look forward to welcoming this favourite artist on her return from her ensuing tour round the globe.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

AMONG the appendices to our regular musical season we have enjoyed two specially interesting Recitals that deserve record all the more because the enthusiasm testified by the few real lovers of art who took the trouble to attend, and the apathy displayed by the thousands who pretend to be true "amateurs," give a clear view of the lack of a genuine interest in our progress among those who so often boast loudly of our advance. It might have been expected, after the excitement attending young Hofmann's visit to Manchester, that a large crowd would assemble to listen to Otto Hegner when he came among us. I do not pretend to see anything particularly hopeful in the repeated displays of precocious executive skill to which we are now so constantly invited; indeed, I think that wise guardians of juvenile talent should be careful to resist the temptation to prematurely exhibit it, and should very jealously consider the natural and only safe means of so developing it as ultimately to secure its riper fruit and usefulness.

But it is not possible, without serious reflection, to witness the influence which fashion exercises over all our doings; and how completely our concert-goers depend upon what they consider the orthodox introduction to their notice of aught assuming to deserve their lofty appreciation. A boy of ten comes here judiciously certified, and is received, not only with the kindly warmth which his real talent and natural sprightliness of demeanour deserve, but with an almost hysterical gush. A slightly older and far more promising lad closely follows, and, for want of the necessary flourish of trumpets, plays to a room not half full of people. Otto Hegner's chief charm is not that, with a little hand scarcely capable of spanning an octave, he grapples with passages that are really difficult for experienced pianists, but that he plays a Beethoven Sonata (like the Op. 22 in B flat) with evident entering into its varied meaning, and a Bach Fugue with clear perception of the true devotion of its contrapuntal intricacies to a high artistic purpose. Messrs. Forsyth, undeterred by the loss attending their first attempt, announce the re-appearance here of young Hegner early in this month.

On Thursday, the 7th ult., two young pianists, Miss Fanny Davies and Miss Mathilde Wurm, and a still younger violinist, Miss Geraldine Morgan, invited music loving folk to assemble at the Concert Hall, so suitable for recitals of classical works such as they delight in. Of the talent of the young trio I need not write. Miss Fanny Davies is already well known in London and in many other places as a young English player of highest promise and of very high present attainment. Her ability was variously and triumphantly displayed in Brahms's C minor Trio (Op. 101) and in various solos, as well as when modestly subordinated to the support of Miss Liza Lehmann in her finished rendering of songs by Schubert, Schumann, and Brahms. Miss Wurm exhibited a remarkable lightness and clearness of touch in Mendelssohn's Variations in D, for violoncello and pianoforte, and in Rubinstein's "Staccato Etude" (No. 2 of Op. 23) a truly extraordinary elasticity of wrist. Miss Geraldine Morgan's violin playing justifies the highest hopes for her future. She produces a resonant, full, rich tone; her bowing is graceful and exceedingly bold and free; and her intonation unerring, except, perhaps, in such octave passages as require a very extended grasp. The three concert-givers are admirably associated, and with the co-operation of Signor Piatti and Miss Lehmann they offered a very delightful programme that ought, in any city claiming musical intelligence, and especially in a room where such music should ever have been zealously and perseveringly cultivated, to have attracted a crowded audience.

On the 11th ult., at the Congregational Church, Chorlton Road, Spohr's "Last Judgment" was performed, under the direction of Mr. E. C. K. Walter; the Organist being Mr. J. Crompton. After which Dr. J. F. Bridge, of Westminster Abbey, gave an Organ Recital, including Handel's Concerto (No. 2 in B flat), with an original fugal cadenza, and pieces by Lulli, Lemaire, Delbrück, Silas, Prout, Smart, and Gounod.

MUSIC IN THE WEST.

We are now at the close of the winter's campaign, and are only waiting for the grand services to be given in the Cathedral on the 8th and 9th inst., on the completion of the Western Towers, to say farewell to public musical gatherings for some months. On looking back we see ground for much encouragement and also for regret. Briefly, we feel that while Bristol advances in a most satisfactory way as regards vocal music, she goes back conspicuously in instrumental music—that is to say, as regards public performances—for we have reason to think that the private study of instrumental music is far more solid than formerly, and that this steadily improves. But in the entire collapse of the Monday Popular Concerts we have a most depressing evidence of the indifference to high-class orchestral music in this city. The Concerts have failed simply through want of support, and, therefore, being no longer able to boast an orchestra capable of adequately rendering all classes of works, both ancient and modern, Bristol has undoubtedly taken a most unhappy retrograde step, and has voluntarily quitted the honourable position in musical matters which she had reached. Whether this error will be retrieved next season remains to be proved.

In conclusion, we cannot pass over the immense impulse given to vocal music by the practices of Mr. Riseley's choir in preparation for the special Cathedral services. These have been held twice a week since Christmas, and the performances of "Israel in Egypt" and "Elijah" will doubtless far surpass anything yet heard in Bristol. The band and choir will number 700. The principals engaged include Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Messrs. Lloyd and Santley, and the Conductor will be Mr. Riseley.

We have no news to report from Plymouth or Salisbury, but the Exeter Orchestral Society's Concert was given at the Public Rooms, Exeter, on the 12th ult., and, taken as a whole, it was very successful. The band was fairly complete, horns only being lacking, and of the whole forty-two members all but two were residents of the city. The programme was well selected and mostly well played. Special mention may be made of Boccherini's Larghetto and Minuet from the Fifth String Quartet, the Adagio and Allegro from Mozart's Symphony in D, and two "Scènes Pittoresques" by Massenet. The wind, however, was at times somewhat obtrusive, and the Andante from Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony lacked delicacy and finish. Miss Mary McClean was the vocalist, and sang Gounod's "Worker" and Hatton's "Day and Night," the latter song being encored. The Conductor, Mr. R. B. Moore, may be congratulated on the good work the Society is doing; and the fact of there being regular weekly rehearsals of orchestral music cannot fail to act as an encouragement to the study of orchestral instruments among the amateurs of the district.

The Festival Society, Cheltenham, under the conductorship of Mr. J. A. Matthews, its founder, has closed the season most successfully with an extra Concert, given on the Queen's birthday, in aid of the Railway Servants' Orphanage, Derby. The programme consisted of Sir W. S. Bennett's "May Queen" and a miscellaneous selection, which included Mr. C. Harford Lloyd's pastoral, "The Rosy Dawn," which was composed for the Festival in October. Weber's Overture "Jubel" and Berlioz's "Danse of the Sylphs" ("Faust") was also played in excellent style by the band. The band and chorus formed a striking feature, and did well throughout the Concert. The soloists were Miss Julia Jones, Mr. James Gawthrop, Mr. R. Grice; Misses Laura Davis, Gertrude Bendall, Fanny Stephens, and Mr. W. J. Brown; the four latter are pupils of Mr. J. A. Matthews, and sang with good effect in their selections and received recalls. The Concert was well attended and closes a brilliant season which commenced with the Musical Festival in October last. Mr. Matthews and his Society may be congratulated on the energy displayed in cultivating music in the queen of watering places on such broad lines. In addition to the Concerts given, a series of lectures on musical subjects have been delivered. The last two, on "Music and Morals" and "Music, the art of the age," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis, M.A., of St. James's, Marylebone, were largely attended, and proved interesting and amusing.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE only very important musical event of the past month has been the performance of Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys," which was produced at the Opéra Comique, on the 7th ult., and the most sanguine expectations of its author, and of its author's friends and admirers, have been fully realised. The performance was a genuine success from beginning to end, a success confirmed by the full houses on the consecutive nights, and by the ever-increasing "booking ahead," so that it is now very difficult to secure a stall for five or six performances. "Le Roi d'Ys" is the first attempt of Lalo in the operatic field, and this work has been waiting for nearly thirty years its opportunity of being placed upon the stage; a fact which shows that even in France native talent is not so well supported as it is generally believed.

The poem, by M. Edouard Blau, is based upon a legend of Brittany. King Karnac, the redoubtable foe of the people of Ys, falls in love with Margaret, one of the two daughters of the King of Ys, and he promises to put an end for ever to the wars if the fair one consents to become his wife. On the day of the nuptials, Margaret being apprised of the return of Mylio, the only man she loved, and had long lamented for dead, refuses to plight her troth to Karnac, who, indignant, before the astonished and frightened people, throws the glove of defiance to the King of Ys. A great battle ensues, but Karnac and his troops are defeated and annihilated by Mylio, who loved by, but not loving, Margaret, is going to marry her sister Rozenn. Margaret, almost mad, wanders over the battle-field, and approaching the despondent Karnac asks his help to revenge at once his defeat and her slight. She knows how to open the dykes that protect Ys from being flooded by the ocean: Karnac's powerful arm must open them. The horrible deed is performed, the town is submerged. Mylio meeting Karnac fights with him and kills him; the King of Ys, Mylio, Rozenn, Margaret, and all the fugitives from the doomed city strive to reach the top of a hill, but the waters are incessantly rising. Margaret cries, "This water shall never stop until it has reached its prey," and before Mylio and Rozenn can take hold of her she jumps into the angry waves. At this moment Saint Corentin, the patron Saint of Bretagne, appears on the surface of the water, and with his extended arms keeps back the ocean for evermore. M. Blau, out of this legend, made a libretto in three acts, new, effective, and with several fragments of true poetry. M. Lalo (who has almost entirely re-written his opera for the present occasion) has treated it in a purely national style, which, we think, accounts much for the success it has scored in Paris. Nothing could be more French than the style chosen by the composer, and though not one conventional form is to be found all the score through, yet there is not the faintest leaning towards Wagnerism, a thing the more noteworthy in this case as Lalo knows all Wagner's works. While avoiding imitations and reminiscences of the great German reformer, reminiscences and imitations of the leading French operatic composers are equally resisted. There is nothing that can put us in mind of Berlioz, of Auber, Gounod, Saint-Saëns, or Godard. Massenet only might be said to appear here and there. In these days when nationality in music bids fair to become the basis of the new schools and the first requisite we look for in a modern composition, M. Lalo's "Roi d'Ys" cannot fail to be exceedingly interesting to every French or foreign public, because, though simpler in treatment and by far more unpretending, yet the motive of his work is the same as that of Dvorák, Grieg, and Brahms—that is, the study of the musical peculiarities and tendencies of a nation, and the using of them in the most appropriate form in the treatment of musical subjects. The performance has been commendable under every aspect, and the principal rôles were safe in the hands of Mesdames Deschamps and Simmonet, and Messrs. Talazac, Bouvet, and Cobalet. M. Danbé conducted with remarkable skill.

Though not yet heard in public we may mention two new sacred works by Charles Gounod, just published by the firm of Hartmann and Co. They are a Quatrième Messe Solennelle and a Te Deum, both written for and to be performed at the Cathedral of Rheims on the occasion of the Beatification of the "Bienheureux J. B. de la Salle, fondateur des Ecoles de la Doctrine Chrétienne." Everything that comes from the pen of Gounod cannot be but a welcome addition to the repertory of good music, and these new works are no exception to the rule. The Mass is written à la Palestrina, in four-part harmony, with organ accompaniment, and is entirely built upon a theme of the seventh tone or intonation of the Catholic Liturgy. The Te Deum is also written in four-part harmony, but here the four voices alternate with a smaller choir, or solos ad libitum, and the accompanying organ is in two numbers relieved by the addition of six harps, an addition that comes in most happily in the fragment preceding the last fugue in the seventh tone.

At the end of April, too late for notice in the last number, there was an excellent and most successful performance of Gounod's "Mors et Vita." To this we must record a remarkable Concert, given by M. Delaborde on Pleyel's Piano-Pedallier; a Recital given by Brigga, the fashionable violoncellist; and the annual Concert of M. Bretnier.

"CALLIRHOË," a legend of Calydon, which forms the subject of Dr. Bridge's Cantata for the Birmingham Festival, is one of the few dramatic stories of Greek mythology which has been overlooked by modern English libretto writers. It has not, however, escaped the notice of foreign authors, for it has been treated as a tragedy opera in five acts with a prologue, by Le Roy, furnished with music by Destouches, and produced at the Academy of Music, in Paris, December 27, 1712. When the work was revived in 1773, the music was touched up by Dauvergne. Sacchini also composed music for an opera with this title, which was placed upon the stage at Stuttgart in 1770; another Italian composer, Felice Alessandri, employed the subject for an opera for Milan, in 1778. It is therefore over a century since the theme has received musical attention, and Dr. Bridge's work may be said to possess all the charm of novelty. The story is mainly taken from the descriptive account of Greece by Pausanias (born, c. 170 A.D.), and has been adapted for musical treatment by Mr. Barclay Squire. Callirhoë, the heroine, was a maiden with whom Coresos—the high priest of the Greek Temple of Dionysus at Calydon—had fallen in love, but who did not return his affection. To quote the words of the Greek writer, "the more his passion grew for her, the more her dislike increased of him." At last, when she had rejected with scorn his proffered gifts and vows of love, the enraged suitor invoked on her the vengeance of the god whose priest he was. His prayer before the image of the shrine was swiftly answered, and the people of Calydon were suddenly visited with a strange and awful plague of madness. In their despair they sought the oracle of Dodona, where the voice of the god issued forth from the dense oak forest, on the boughs of which were suspended the golden bowls presented by the worshippers. The reply of the oracle was that in order to stop the plague Coresos must sacrifice Callirhoë or some one who would consent to die in her place. On the day appointed for the sacrifice Callirhoë presented herself in the temple, a victim to appease the wrath of the god; but Coresos, unable to slay the woman he loved, plunged the knife into his own breast, and thus by dying for Callirhoë fulfilled the command of the oracle and stayed the plague. When Callirhoë saw her lover thus die for her, remorse, shame, and sorrow turned her hatred to love, and unable to live without him she turned the knife against herself and fell lifeless by his side. Appeased by the double sacrifice, the god caused to spring forth from beneath the altar a beautiful stream, on the waves of which Coresos and Callirhoë appear as river-gods surrounded by Nereids and Tritons, united in endless love. The work—important in its character—is divided into three parts, with solos for soprano (Callirhoë), tenor (Coresos), and contralto (Priestess of Dodona), and occupies a little over an hour in performance. The music is beautiful and full of dramatic vigour, and without anticipating any critical remarks which may be made hereafter, it will be enough to say that while it is modern in style, it is thoroughly English, and stands as Dr. Bridge's best work at present.

THE programme for the "Selection day" at the Handel Festival (Wednesday, the 27th inst.) is most attractive. More than half the items it contains will be performed for the first time on such an occasion, the new selections being chosen from "Esther," "Samson," "Belshazzar," "Almira," "Alexander Balus," "Ottone," "Deidamia," and "The Triumph of Time and Truth." The last-named work, based upon an Italian Oratorio "Il Trionfo del Tempo e della Verità," was composed in Rome in 1703, considerably transformed in 1738, finally converted into an English Oratorio in 1757, and is considered to be Handel's last effort in composition. Mr. Manns has arranged his items as far as possible in chronological order, and in looking for novelties has searched among Handel's less known works with much success. The Nightingale Chorus and the Violin Sonata in A (to be played by 216 performers), which made so great a hit last Festival, are to be re-introduced by special request. The following is the complete programme for the "Selection Day":—

"God save the Queen."
Coronation Anthem Zadok the Priest.
(In commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Queen's Coronation.)

PART I.

Concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 7, in B flat.

Invocation "Jehovah crowned"	Esther.
Chorus—"He comes"
Overture	Samson.
Air—"Total eclipse"
Chorus—"Oh, first-created beam"
Air—"Thy glorious deeds"
Air—"Let the bright seraphim"
Chorus—"Ye Tutelar gods"	Belshazzar.
Air—"Call forth Thy pow'rs"	Judas.
Air—"So shall the lute and harp"
Trio and Chorus—"See the conquering hero comes"	Joshua.

Recitative—"She's gone, and truth descending from the sky"	The Triumph of Time and Truth.
Air—"Guardian angels, oh! protect me"
Chorus—"Allelujah!"

The band will be augmented for the occasion, and the effect of the orchestral selections will be thereby greatly enhanced. Mr. Manns intends to reproduce some of Handel's scoring in "The Messiah" as shown in the autograph score.

THE Annual Distribution of Prizes and Certificates to the Students of the Hampstead Conservatoire of Music and School of Art, by Mr. E. Brodie-Hoare, M.P., took place at the Hampstead Vestry Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 8th ult. The musical performances by the students were of a high order. The pianoforte department was represented by Mr. Arthur Gibson, Miss Ada Scratchley, Miss Alice Carr, and Mr. R. Rowe. Miss Scratchley played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C sharp minor with great neatness and accuracy, and Miss Alice Carr gave a selection from Schumann's "Carnaval" in a manner that called forth the warm approval of the audience, and reflected the utmost credit on their master, the Principal. The two gentlemen played the pianoforte part of Reissiger's Quintet (Op. 191, Andante and Tarantelle), and the Adagio and Allegro moderato from the same composer's Quintet in E flat respectively. The other parts were very ably sustained by Miss Alice Knapp and Miss May Knapp (violins), assisted by two of the Professors, Messrs. J. Earnshaw (viola) and J. Boatwright (violoncello). Miss Daisy Williams, Miss Mildred Harwood, and Miss Tombleson contributed songs, Miss Harwood being especially successful. This young lady sang "With verdure clad" and "Pack clouds away" (Macfarren) very artistically. She is a pupil of Mr. J. T. Hutchinson. Two of Mr. Charles Fry's elocution pupils gave recitations, Miss Mary Greig ("The Skylark") and Miss Alice Mayman ("The Story of the Faithful Soul"). The latter was recalled, and may fairly be congratulated upon a successful début. Mr. Brodie-Hoare, in presenting the prizes, expressed the pleasure he felt in being present, and Sir James D. Linton, P.R.I., Visiting Director of the School of Art, moved a vote of thanks to the hon. gentleman, which was carried by acclamation. The Principal (Mr. George F. Geaussen) said that they were looking forward to the new building now in course of erection, and were determined to do all in their power to provide a thoroughly sound musical education to those young people who were entrusted to their care.

THE Chester Triennial Musical Festival will take place on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the 25th, 26th, and 27th of next month. In the Cathedral, on Wednesday morning, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will open the Festival. On Thursday Mr. Oliver King's setting of the 137th Psalm and Symphonic Cantata, for soli, chorus, and orchestra, composed expressly for the Festival, will be heard for the first time in public, together with Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, and Verdi's Requiem. On Friday morning Schubert's Symphony in B minor, Beethoven's "Engedi," and Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" are to be given; and, on Friday evening, Gounod's "The Redemption" will end the music in the Cathedral. In the Music Hall, on Wednesday evening, Sullivan's "The Golden Legend," and, on Thursday evening, a Miscellaneous Concert, form the attractions. Madame Nordica, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Damian, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Grice, Mr. W. Nicholl, Mr. W. H. Brereton, and Mr. Santley are the vocalists. The band and chorus of 300 performers has for leader Herr Straus; the organist is Mr. J. T. Hughes; and the Conductor, Dr. Joseph C. Bridge, M.A. The Rev. C. H. Hylton Stewart, M.A., Precentor of the Cathedral, is the Honorary Secretary. The Festival will be inaugurated by Special Services on Sunday, July 22. At Evensong the "Hymn of Praise" (Mendelssohn) will be sung, and the greater part of the Cathedral will be reserved for the working classes only, who will be admitted free.

WITH respect to the début of Madame Patti in Buenos Ayres, the Standard of Buenos Ayres of April 6 says:—"The greatest theatrical performance ever witnessed in the Plate came off on Wednesday night in the Politeama with the début of Madame Adelina Patti in Rossini's immortal "Barber of Seville." The rank, wealth, and fashion of this city, which has the reputation of having more millionaires than any other of the same size and population, were gathered to welcome the gifted and beautiful diva, and never have we seen a local theatre more crowded and more resplendent. Every box and seat in the vast theatre was occupied, and the audience must have out-numbered 2,500 persons. With regard to the rendering of the "Barber," everything and everybody were overlooked except Rosina and Almaviva." In a leading article in the same paper of April 7 it is said:—"The great event of the fortnight has been the arrival of Madame Adelina Patti and her début at the Politeama, the largest theatre in this city. Her enterprising impresarios, Messrs. Ciacchi and Grau, are reaping a golden harvest; and it is calculated that the talented diva's voice represents the capital of an average Argentine Railway Company. She is paid £1,000 a night and fifty per cent. of the profits above 10,000 dollars receipts. An idea of the returns of a Buenos Ayres theatre may be gathered from the fact that the night Patti's début took place the impresarios netted in entrance tickets alone twenty thousand dollars (£4,000), a figure that may interest theatrical managers in all parts of the world."

The last Concert of the season was given by the professors and students of the Stamford Hill Academy of Music, on the 15th ult., in the Assembly Rooms, Stoke Newington, to a crowded audience. The ladies forming a choir, which completely filled the orchestra, were under the bâton of Dr. Pringuer, and the accompaniments were principally undertaken by Mr. Fountain Meen; whilst on the programme also appeared the names of the Principal of the Academy, Madame Ashton; Herr Adolphe Brouil, Miss Lily Adam, and Miss Alice Ashton, and of students, Madame Kate Coldrey, Miss Lottie Smallman, Miss Ida Durrant, Miss Louise Auther, and Miss Phillips. The first part of the programme was almost entirely occupied by the late Henry Smart's Cantata, "King René's Daughter," the performance of which excited considerable interest. The other portion of the first part consisted of two very pleasing part-songs by Miss Nunn and Miss Wrightson (students), a pianoforte solo by Miss Lily Adam, a humorous hunting song by Mr. A. Lang Smith, a song by Miss Zita Jimenez, with violin obbligato by Miss Daisy Ashton, and a recitation by Mr. Dacres Smith. In the second part were performed two violin solos by Miss Philps, a pianoforte quartet by Mr. Fountain Meen and pupils, two violoncello solos by Herr Brousil, and "In the chimney corner," by Madame Ashton (encored). Carulli's part-song "Good Night" concluded the Concert.

A CONCERT was given at the Birkbeck Institution on Saturday evening, the 26th ult., in aid of the widow and children of the late Mr. William Fitzhenry. The vocalists were Misses Mary Beare, Ethel Winn; Mesdames Marian McKenzie, Florence Winn; Messrs. Edwin Bryant, Arthur Thompson, Sidney Barnby, H. L. Fulkerson, G. W. Forington, Stanley Smith, and Thurley Beale; a very good selection of songs, duets, and glees was rendered by the above-mentioned artists. The March from Gounod's "Reine de Saba" and Sullivan's Bourrée "Merchant of Venice" were well performed by an efficient orchestra under the direction of Mr. Berthold Tours. Kalliwoda's violin duet, Introduction and Rondo, was played by Messrs. Gatehouse and Greebe, who, in response to an encore, played Ersfeldt's "Schlummerlied." Mr. J. Kift gave Corney Grain's humorous song "Our Daughters," with much effect, and Mr. Stedman's choir of girls and boys, in costume, sang Crowe's vocal Waltz "The Gipsies." The programme was varied by two recitations, "The Coachman's Story," by Mr. Rendle, and "A tragedy in five acts," by Mr. Charles Fry. We must not omit to mention that Mr. J. E. West and Mr. Alfred Izard were at the pianoforte, the latter especially displaying exceptional taste in his accompaniments. It is gratifying to state that a substantial sum was realised by the Concert.

A CONCERT was given in the Vestry Hall, Hampstead, on Tuesday evening, the 1st ult., by the Primrose Hill Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. George Calkin, on behalf of the funds of the Boys' Home, Regent's Park Road. The first part of the programme was devoted to a performance of Gaul's "Holy City," the solo vocalists being Miss Mary Willis, Mrs. Lindley White, Miss Annie Calkin, Miss Thompson, and Messrs. Lance and Arthur Calkin, all of whom contributed to the success of the Cantata. The singing of the choir, under the bâton of their Conductor, Mr. George Calkin, was characterised by great precision and prompt attention to the marks of expression, Mr. George Gear, who presided at the pianoforte, deserving notice for his careful rendering of the accompaniments. The instrumentalists in the second part of the Concert, which was miscellaneous, were Mrs. Francis Ralph (pianoforte) and Mr. Edward Howell (violoncello), whose efforts were duly appreciated by an enthusiastic audience. The same vocalists as in the first part again delighted the audience by their respective solos, Miss Mary Willis obtaining an encore for her artistic singing of Pacini's Aria "Oh! con lui mi fa rapita" (Saffo). The Concert was brought to a close with the Madrigal "Sing a joyous roundelay" (J. Barnby).

AN exhibition of Mr. Edison's new phonograph, especially in the reproduction of singing and the sounds of musical instruments, was given, on the 11th ult., at the inventor's laboratory. The Daily News' correspondent says that experiments were made with the pianoforte, violin, cornet, and clarinet, separately and together. For recording the music of the pianoforte, a funnel of cardboard 5-ft. long and 2-ft. in diameter at the bell was placed with the bell above the strings of the pianoforte, and the small end at the mouthpiece of the phonograph. The version of some chords and a polka was clear, distinct, and musical. Even the vibration of the strings when the chord was struck was perfectly audible, and the result loud enough and musical enough to give pleasure to a sensitive ear. With the funnel for magnifying the sound placed on the machine, the music sounded as the music of a pianoforte might coming through a thick partition. Every note could be heard, but much of the musical effect was lost. The phonograph's reproduction of music was invariably a trifle sharper in pitch than the original. Of the different instruments tried, the cornet gave back the loudest and clearest tones, easily distinguished twenty or thirty feet from the diaphragm.

ON the 11th ult. a Concert was given at Princes' Hall in aid of the fund which is being established for the benefit of Mr. Constantine. This veteran and highly respected musician, who is over seventy years of age and stricken down with paralysis, was for more than forty years the untiring assistant of the late John Hullah as one of the pioneers of "Music for the Million." His long illness has exhausted his small savings. The list of artists who took part in the Concert included Mesdames Rose Hersee, Agnes Larkcom, Mackenzie, and Patey; Messrs. W. H. Cummings, Iver McKay, Pyatt, George Grossmith, and other vocalists; Mdlle. Eugénie Dratz (clavi-harp), Miss Chaplin (violin), Mr. Radcliff (flute), and other instrumentalists; also Mr. Beerbohm Tree, M. Marius, and Mr. Charles Fry as reciters, the last-named making a great success with "A tragedy in five acts," for which he accepted an encore. The proceeds of the Concert were not so large as it was hoped that they would be, but subscriptions, however small, may still be sent to the "Constantine Fund" at the London and County Bank, Covent Garden, or to the Hon. Sec., Mr. A. R. Rogers, Crichton Club, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

DR. STAINER played his last service as Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral on the morning of the 4th ult., and was the recipient of a testimonial presented by the Vicars and assistant Vicars-Choral of the Cathedral, consisting of a beautiful album containing the portraits of all the members of the choir, with their signatures, together with a pair of beautiful ormolu and enamel candlesticks, an inkstand, and a mirror with an elegant frame, all to match. The special Sunday evening choir had previously, on April 20, given him a brass clock, a pair of candelabra, and an inkstand, subscribed for by past and present members of the choir, and presented in their name by Mr. Henry Hamer, the Honorary Secretary. Dr. Martin, who has been appointed Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral in the place of Dr. Stainer, was born at Lambourne, in Berkshire, in 1844. He took the degree of Mus. Bac., Oxon., in 1868, and was created Mus. Doc. in 1884. He is a member of the College of Organists, and has for some years past been Sub-Organist and Choirmaster at St. Paul's. His compositions, apart from a few songs and part-songs, are almost exclusively set to sacred words.

MR. ALFRED MOUL has been appointed the representative for the British Empire for all the important copyright interests vested in the French Society of Authors, Composers, and Music Publishers (Société des Auteurs, Compositeurs, et Editeurs de Musique) and the International Literary and Artistic Association (L'Association Littéraire et Artistique Internationale). This representation is the outcome for practical purposes of the International Copyright Convention recently entered into at Berne, which came into operation in December last. Under the auspices of the above-named French societies, reciprocal representations have been established at Berlin, and the other capitals of the several countries which have joined the Copyright Convention, inclusive of Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland, and Spain. The prevention of unauthorised performances, the detection of literary and artistic piracies, and the defence generally of all forms of copyright to which the Convention extends new and very important protection, and the charge of any commercial interests in copyright which may be referred to them, will be comprised within the business of the Society.

THE Blackheath Choral Society gave an excellent Concert on April 27, when Mendelssohn's "Athalie" formed the principal feature in the programme. The solo parts were sung by Miss Bertha Moore, Miss Marguerite Serruys, and Miss Clara Myers, the first-named lady singing the music with exceptional power and dramatic effect. The choruses were efficiently sung, and the orchestral accompaniments were most admirably played by the Royal Artillery Band, the whole being under the able and skilful direction of Mr. Zavertal. Considerable effect was made by Mr. Charles Fry in reciting the illustrative verses, the reader being rewarded with hearty applause after the long accompanied recitation. The second part of the Concert was miscellaneous, and comprised songs by the artists named and two part-songs by the choir, the orchestra playing with effect Haydn's Farewell Symphony and Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor, the pianoforte part being taken by Mr. H. R. A. Robinson.

On the 14th ult. the annual Conversazione of the members of the Committee, the advanced section of the London Sunday School Choir, and the orchestral band, was held at the Abbey Street Schools, Bethnal Green Road, which were tastefully decorated for the occasion. A valuable collection of MSS. scores, &c., kindly lent by Messrs. Novello were displayed to view, and excited much interest. Messrs. Ebenezer Prout, Thomas Wingham, Frederick Evans, Luther Hinton, and other friends also exhibiting autographs, pictures, curios, &c., and the Hackney Microscopical and Natural History Society kindly attended and exhibited their valuable instruments. In the adjoining rooms Recitals were given by Mr. H. Dacres Smith and Mr. W. G. Churcher, and Concerts by the Welsh Vocal Union and other professional friends, the large audience much appreciating their kind services. The arrangements, undertaken by Mr. David Davies, the Choir Organist, were excellent, and reflect great credit upon him.

On Coronation Day, the 28th inst., a special Festival Service will be held in Westminster Abbey in aid of the funds of the Westminster Hospital. The music for the Responses and Special Psalms is to be that which was arranged and composed by Dr. Bridge for the Jubilee Service last year, followed by Gibbons's "Hosanna," Berlioz's Te Deum, and Handel's Coronation Anthem, "Zadok the Priest." The Abbey Choir will be augmented for the occasion by members of the Bach Choir and Royal College of Music Choir, and a contingent from the Cambridge University Musical Society. The orchestra will be supplied chiefly from the Royal College of Music. The Te Deum will be conducted by Prof. Villiers Stanford, Dr. Bridge playing the important organ part in this work, and conducting the rest of the Service. A small portion of the collection will be set aside as a contribution towards the erection of the statue of Orlando Gibbons at Cambridge.

THE London Church Choir Association held its fifteenth annual Festival in St. Paul's Cathedral, on Thursday, April 26. About 800 members attended, and the effect of this vast body of voices in the Processional Hymn, in Tallis's Responses, and in the Special Psalms (which were sung to fine chants by Dr. G. C. Martin) was extremely imposing. On former occasions special music has been composed for the festival, but there was no novelty in the present service. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were by Mr. Eaton Fanning, the Anthem "Lord, thou art God," by Dr. Stainer, and at the close Beethoven's Hallelujah Chorus from "The Mount of Olives" was sung. In these there was occasional unsteadiness in spite of Dr. Martin's careful conducting, due no doubt to the impossibility of obtaining general rehearsals. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Marlborough.

THE Hampstead Choral Society gave a Concert at the Vestry Hall, Hampstead, on April 30, when Mendelssohn's "Athalie" and Hoffmann's "Melusina" were performed. The solo parts in the former work were effectively rendered by Mrs. George Gill, Miss Edith Mansbergh, and Miss Nettie Barker, and in the latter by Miss Rider, Miss Watts, Mr. T. J. Grylls, and Mr. George Gill. The choruses were sung with much spirit under the vigorous direction of Mr. W. Coenen, who also played a Rhapsodie by Liszt between the two works. The verses in "Athalie" were admirably recited by Miss E. M. Churchill, who displayed dramatic power and excellent enunciation. The pianoforte and harmonium accompaniments were played by Miss Alice Edmunds, Miss Amy Gill, and Mr. G. Boddington Smith; Mr. T. E. Mann and Mr. J. Smith giving efficient aid in the horn parts in "Melusina."

MR. HARRY E. WARNER, Organist of the Parish Church, Kew, gave a most successful Pupils' Concert at the College Hall, Richmond, on the 16th ult. A good programme had been prepared, containing many items of interest, and great credit is due for the manner in which they were rendered. Mendelssohn's "Presto," from the G minor Concerto, was performed by Miss Thurston, accompanied on a second pianoforte by Miss Scott, and Mr. Warner on the organ. Beethoven's Sonata in F (Op. 10) was given with much spirit by Miss Guyon. Miss Wild gave a refined rendering of Schubert's "Impromptu" in A flat (Op. 90). Miss Cullum, Mrs. Walter Tudor, and Miss Wise were responsible for the vocal selections, while the Pupils' string band (led by Mr. Louis Robbins) gave a capital performance of several pieces of a light and pleasing nature.

DR. WM. SPARK, the well-known Leeds Organist, is about to publish—with numerous portraits—his "Musical Memories, Past and Present," including notices of Costa, Meyerbeer, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Benedict, Sebastian Wesley, Bishop, Sterndale Bennett, Sir John Goss, Wallace, Balfe, Thalberg, George Linley, Grisi and Mario, Titiens and Giuglini, the Macfarrens, Smart, Patti, E.J. Hopkins, Hatton, &c., together with other articles on various musical subjects; a Musical Tour in North Germany, a Week's Music in London, Scraps, Anecdotes, &c. The greater number of the notes were written for, and published in, the Yorkshire Weekly Post. Dr. Spark has added much other matter to give the book additional interest to the reader, and there is no doubt that it will be both interesting and valuable.

At a meeting of the United Richard Wagner Society (London Branch) at Trinity College, on the 2nd ult., Mr. Louis N. Parker read an interesting paper on the popularisation of Wagner's method, especially in the provinces. Speaking of the musical barrenness in third-rate country towns, he advocated the formation of amateur operatic societies for the performance of the older operas of Gluck, Mozart, &c., and so on by slow degrees to the works of the Bayreuth Master. An animated discussion followed in which Mr. F. Praeger, Mr. Armbruster, Mr. H. F. Frost and others took part, and the general feeling seemed to be that the prejudice still existing against the theatre, especially in provincial centres, would prevent the realisation of Mr. Parker's ideas.

THE sixth annual Concert of the orchestral band in connection with the South London Institute of Music, Camberwell New Road, was held on Wednesday evening, the 2nd ult. Miss Minnie Morley sang "Quando a te lieta" ("Faust") and the "Lost Chord" (with orchestral accompaniment); Mr. T. E. Gatehouse performed Andantino and Rondo from De Bériot's Second Concerto for violin and orchestra; Mr. Venables' Choir sang "Song of the Vikings," "Hark! 'tis the horn of the hunter," "Kate Dalrymple," "God and King," &c.; the orchestra performed Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony in A, incidental music to the "Merchant of Venice," Ballet music from "La Reine de Saba" (Gounod), and Overture "Masaniello" (Auber). Mr. Leonard C. Venables conducted.

IN connection with the Finsbury Choral Association it is proposed to establish an Institute of Music. To inaugurate the commencement of this undertaking a grand Bazaar will be held in Holloway Hall, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the 5th, 6th, and 7th inst. The first day the Bazaar will be opened by the Lord Chancellor, on the second by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, and on the third by S. D. Waddy, Esq., M.P. The proceeds will be applied to aid the Finsbury Choral Association, which has the sanction and support of all the professional men of the district. A Concert will be given on each of the three evenings, which will be supported by many well known artists, both vocal and instrumental.

ON Thursday, April 28, the members of the St. John's Choral Society, Lewisham, gave their third and last Subscription Concert in the Church Room, under the direction of Mr. F. A. Bridge. The work performed was Cowen's Dramatic Oratorio "Ruth," the soloists being Miss Simson, Miss F. Wilson, Miss L. Pyne, Mr. E. Harris, Mr. Duckworth, and Mr. Kenneth Britton, all members of the Society. The hall was, as usual, crowded, and the Concert most successful. Mr. Frederic Leeds was the accompanist. At the previous Concerts given by the Society this season, the programmes consisted of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," and a miscellaneous selection.

THE choir of Brockley Presbyterian Church gave a Concert of Sacred Music on the 1st ult. They were assisted on this occasion by some members of the St. John's, Forest Hill Presbyterian Church Choir, and others. The programme included excerpts from the works of Haydn, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Leslie, Cowen, Pinsuti, Stainer, Sterndale Bennett, &c., performed by Misses Hart and Woodward, Mrs. Cockell, Mrs. Daniell, Mrs. Pellatt; Mr. Cockell, Mr. W. A. Howard, and Mr. C. M. Ohren. The choruses were well sung, under the direction of Mr. W. Cowper Pellatt (the Precentor), and Miss Edith E. Edwards (Organist of the Church) gave a solo and played the accompaniments upon the organ.

THE choir of the East Hill Baptist Chapel, Wandsworth, gave its annual Concert of sacred music on the 10th ult. to a large and appreciative audience. Selections from "Judas Maccabæus," "St. Paul," "Messiah," and "Elijah"; also anthems by Sydenham, Mee Pattison, Elvey, and Sullivan were sung in a highly creditable manner by the choir, which numbered sixty voices. The soloists were Miss Winifred Parker, Miss Maude Hayter, Miss Collin, Mr. W. Newton, Mr. C. Bond, and Mr. Edward Bowles. Mrs. Beattie West presided at the pianoforte, Mr. J. B. Howlett at the harmonium, and Mr. John Ullrich, Choirmaster of the chapel, conducted.

MR. G. SHINN'S Oratorio the "Captives of Babylon" was given by the choir on April 30, to a large and appreciative audience in the Brixton Methodist Free Church, Raiton Road. The choir was conducted by Mr. W. Robinson. The soloists were Miss M. Snell, Mrs. Cable, and Messrs. Sice and Poole; and in addition to the organ, played by Mr. J. M. Cable, the accompaniments included a pianoforte and a band of nearly sixty performers. The same work was given on the 17th ult. at Sutherland Congregational Chapel, Walworth Road. The soloists were Miss Langridge, Mrs. Keesey, Mr. H. Hicks, Mr. C. Hardy. There was a large chorus, accompanied by St. Paul's (Walworth) orchestral band. Mr. W. J. Varney, Organist of St. Stephen's, Walworth, presided at the organ, and Mr. J. H. Ellson conducted.

ON Tuesday, the 15th ult., a Concert of Sacred Music was given at Willoughby Road Wesleyan Chapel, Hornsey. The first part consisted of the Cantata "A Daughter of Moab" (Andrew), in which the principal vocalists were Madame Barter, Mrs. and Master Bradford, Mrs. Alleyn, Mrs. M. Cross, and Messrs. G. Jarrett, Alleyn, and Scutt. The second part consisted of various solos by Miss J. Young, Miss E. Wolfenden, Master H. Woodrow, Mr. H. Frome, and Mr. R. Wolfenden. Miss Kilner and Mr. W. R. Parker were the accompanists, and Mr. J. R. Kilner (the chapel Organist) conducted.

MR. ERNEST BIRCH gave an interesting Vocal Recital at Sir Morell Mackenzie's house in Harley Street on the 8th ult. He gained a great success in Purcell's "Mad Tom" and a fine operatic aria of Handel's. Madame Clara Samuelli received an ovation for a new song by Ernest Birch, entitled "The Parting Hour." A new duet too, by the same composer, was well sung by Madame Clara Samuelli and Miss Damian. Mr. James Fernandez recited, and Miss Geraldine Morgan (pupil of Joachim) played some solos on the violin with much charm. Miss Bessie Waugh and Mr. H. C. Deacon accompanied.

A CONCERT was given on the 1st ult., at St. Mark's Vestry Room, Battersea Rise, by the St. Mark's Choral Society, when Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was performed in a highly creditable manner, under the conductorship of Mr. H. Bray. The soloists were Madame Isabel George, Miss Emilie Whitehead, and Mr. Reginald Groome. In the second part of the programme some part-songs were sung by the choir; songs were given by the vocalists named, and violin solos by Signor Luigi Méo. Miss Grace Smith presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. E. P. Atkins was the Organist.

MR. F. LOUIS SCHNEIDER'S orchestral and vocal evening Concert, given at the Athenæum, Shepherd's Bush, on Saturday, April 28, was very successful. The vocalists were Miss Grace Henley, Miss Frances Hipwell, Mr. Conrad King, and Signor Villa. The Ealing Orchestral Society, under their Conductor, Mr. F. Louis Schneider, contributed several items of interest, and solos were played by Mr. G. Dinelli (violinello), Mr. Lancaster (piccolo), and Mr. H. G. G. Wilkins (cornet). The accompanists were Messrs. G. Dinelli and F. Louis Schneider.

MR. REGINALD GROOME gave his annual Grand Evening Concert at the Athenæum, Camden Road, N.W., on the 17th ult. He was assisted by the following well-known performers: Miss Clara Leighton, Miss Mary Owen, Miss Mary Morgan, Mr. Edward Branscombe, Mr. Arthur Thomas, Mr. Ernest Birch, Mr. Stanley Smith, and Mr. Franklin Clive. Solo violin, Miss Kate Chaplin; solo pianoforte, Mr. Edwin Samson; pianoforte, Miss Ada Raven, Mr. Sydney Cooke, and Mr. F. A. W. Docker. Mr. Groome made a decided success in two beautiful songs by Dvorák.

WE are requested to state that Mr. Walter Bache's library of music has been arranged with a view to placing it at the disposal of the public, conductors, and others, who may wish to make use of it. It includes about forty scores of Liszt's original orchestral works, besides some of his orchestral arrangements, pianoforte music, and songs; the scores of Beethoven's, Mozart's, and Haydn's Symphonies; some scores of Wagner's, Berlioz's, &c. These works can be had at any time on application to Miss Constance Bache, or through Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co., from whom a catalogue of the music can also be obtained.

THE Sacred Cantata "The Woman of Samaria," by Sir Sterndale Bennett, was given in the place of the Anthem at Evensong on Sunday, April 29, at St. Mary's Church, the Boltons, South Kensington. Both Cantata and Evening Service were accompanied by full orchestra, and Mr. Abdy Williams, Organist and Choirmaster of the Church, conducted. The choir and the newly organised Boltons Musical Society sang the music; and we believe that this is the first occasion on which, on Sundays, this experiment has been tried in the West-end of London.

THE Wycliffe Chapel Choir gave an excellent performance of Haydn's Oratorio the "Creation," in the Chapel, Philpot Street, E., on the 5th ult., under the direction of the Choirmaster, Mr. George Merritt, assisted by Miss Ethel Winn, Mr. J. H. Müllerhausen, and Mr. W. P. Richards, and an excellent orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. F. Wilson Parish. Solo flute, Mr. Frank Jolly; kettledrums, Mr. Cole; pianoforte, Miss Marian Bonallack; and organ, Mr. F. A. Jewson, F.C.O. The choir sang the choruses throughout effectively.

THE North-East London Choral Society gave the second Concert of the present season at the Morley Hall on the 16th ult., when the programme consisted of an excellent rendering of Gade's "Crusaders" and a miscellaneous selection. Soloists: Miss Kate Fusselle, Miss Rose Dafforne, Mr. T. W. Hanson, and Mr. Herbert Budge; violin, Miss Rosabel G. Watson; pianoforte, Mr. Fountain Meen; harmonium, Mr. Louis B. Prout; Conductor, Mr. John E. West. There was a fairly large and appreciative audience, and the Concert was a musical success.

DR. JOSEPH PARRY, of Swansea, has been appointed to the Musical Lectureship in the University College of South Wales, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Clement Templeton. The concerts of chamber music, instituted by Mr. Templeton three years ago, were successfully continued last winter. Six concerts were given, in which Messrs. Gompertz, Ludwig, Peiniger, Ould, and other distinguished artists took part. It is the intention of the College authorities to give an equally interesting series of Concerts next session, beginning in October and ending in March.

THE Regent's Park Choral Society gave its annual Concert on the 7th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. John C. Ward. The programme was miscellaneous, and included "The Revenge" (Dr. C. V. Stanford), Anthem "O where shall wisdom be found?" (Dr. Boyce), a selection from J. S. Bach's comic Cantatas, and part-songs by J. G. Callcott and F. W. Löhr, together with other morceaux, vocal and instrumental, including duets for violin and piano, played by Misses Collins and Addison, and a new song composed by Clementine Ward.

MR. T. B. DOWLING has entered upon his duties as Organist of St. George's Cathedral, Cape Town. He was formerly organist of St. Philip's, Regent Street, and brought credentials of the highest character both as to his professional ability and as to his personal qualities. He succeeds Mr. C. N. Thomas, who for many years enjoyed the highest opinions of the choir and congregation. No better wish can be framed for Mr. Dowling than that he may deserve and hold equal favour.

A CONCERT was given by the Merchant Taylors' School Choral Society on the 8th ult. The principal item in the programme was Edmund Rogers's humorous Cantata "John Gilpin; or, the Ride to Ware," which was very creditably rendered by the choir of the Society. A small string band added greatly to the success of the performance, with Mr. W. E. Stark at the pianoforte and Mr. G. Belcher at the harmonium. Mr. Edmund Rogers conducted.

THE thirteenth annual Concert was given by the Choir of Holy Trinity Church, Islington, at Wellington Hall, on the 18th ult. Romberg's "Toy Symphony," well rendered by the choir boys, formed a prominent item in the programme. Mr. Arthur Parker's violin solo, Mr. Leeffe's flute solo, and the singing of the choir gave great enjoyment to all assembled. Mr. Lawrence Major (Choirmaster) conducted, and Mr. Herbert Pearsall (Organist of Holy Trinity) presided at the pianoforte.

THE Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "St. Paul," on the 9th ult., in St. John's Church, Walworth. Soloists: Miss Ellen Tuer, Mrs. Oram, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Albert Oram; and on the 16th ult. a performance of "The Messiah" in St. Michael's, Binglefield Street, Caledonian Road. Soloists: Mrs. Stanesby, Mrs. Tooth, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. James Blackney. Mr. E. H. Turpin accompanied on the organ at both performances.

AT Wood Green, on the 15th ult., a Concert was given in aid of the Morley Seaside Home, St. Margaret's, near Dover. Miss Adela Duckham gave Sarasate's "Ziguenerweisen" and Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Concerto; the audience demanded and obtained an encore after her first solo, and Miss Duckham gave Moszkowski's "Gipsy Dances." The pianoforte accompaniments to the violin solos were played by Miss Lilly von Kornatzki. Miss Clara Dowle was the vocalist.

ON April 29 an Organ Recital was given by Mr. O. E. F. Cobb, Organist and Choirmaster of St. Stephen's, Canonbury, and at the People's Palace, when a selection from the works of the following composers was given: Bach, Handel, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, E. Silas, Dr. W. Spark, Dr. E. T. Chipp, George Hepworth, Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, and J. E. West. The "Religioso," from Francesco Berger's Suite in G, was also included in the programme.

THE Stock Exchange Amateur Orchestral Society gave its third and last Concert for the present season at St. James's Hall on the 9th ult. Exceedingly creditable performances were given of Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, the Ballet music from "La Gioconda," and the Overtures "Coriolan" and "Mireille." The Conductor, Mr. George Kitchen, deserves much credit for the present highly efficient condition to which he has brought his amateur instrumentalists.

ON Wednesday, the 9th ult., at the Princes' Hall, Madame de Llana gave a Pianoforte Recital. This talented pianist was assisted by Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Bernhardt, violinist. The programme was made up of selections from Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Grieg, Dvorák, Chopin, and Liszt. Greig's interesting Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 45), was rendered by Madame de Llana and Mr. Bernhardt. Mr. Ben Davies's songs were given in excellent style.

A SUCCESSFUL Orchestral Concert was given at the Assembly Rooms, Putney, on Friday, the 4th ult., by the students of the School of Music, the band consisting of about thirty-five performers, ladies and gentlemen, led by Mr. H. Gibson, and conducted by Mr. Frank Barnard, principal of the school. A pianoforte solo was played by Miss S. Green—Presto movement from Sir Sterndale Bennett's Fourth Concerto, with orchestral accompaniment.

ON Thursday, April 26, Mr. von Zastrow gave a Concert of Drawing Room Music at the Glendower Mansions, South Kensington. There was a very distinguished audience, including the Prince of Mantua. The performers were Miss Adela Duckham (solo violinist), Miss Lilly von Kornatzki (solo pianist); vocalists, Mesdames Foresta and Inglis, and Messrs. Templar Saxe and Claude Trevor.

THE Members of the St. Augustine's (Honor Oak) Choral Society gave their concluding Concert for the season on the 1st ult., when very satisfactory performances of Spohr's "God, Thou art great," Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, and Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" were rendered, under the direction of the Society's Conductor, Mr. Seymour Smith.

ON the 11th ult., after the usual weekly rehearsal of the choir, a testimonial, consisting of a purse containing fifteen guineas, was presented to Mr. R. Felix Blackbree, the Organist and Choirmaster of St. James's Church, Knatchbull Road, Camberwell, by the Rev. J. D. Dyke, Rural Dean and Vicar of the Parish, the churchwardens, and gentlemen of the choir.

MISS ROSINA ISIDOR, an English singer, chiefly associated with the Italian operatic stage, gave an evening Concert at St. James's Hall on the 12th ult., and sang several pieces with good effect before a numerous audience. Among the other artists who assisted were Miss Damian, Mr. Harper Kearton, Mr. H. Plunket Greene, Mr. Carl Formes, and Mr. Theodore Werner.

THE South Hackney Presbyterian Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," preceded by a miscellaneous selection, at St. Thomas's Hall, on the 2nd ult., the principals being Madame Clara West, Madame Moore, Mr. J. H. Müllerhausen, &c. Organist, Miss Annie E. Holdom, L.R.A.M.; pianist, Miss Racie Smee, R.A.M.; Conductor, Mr. Peter McAuslane.

A RECITAL was given on the fine organ at St. Michael's, Bowes Park, N., on Monday, the 14th ult., by Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., of Balham Parish Church. An interesting programme was played, an Organ Sonata by Dr. Bridge, and movements by Handel and Rheinberger forming the principal items. The vocalists were Messrs. C. J. Barrett and H. J. Baker.

THE Paddington Choral Union gave an excellent rendering of Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" on Tuesday, the 15th ult. The soloists were Madame Clara West, Miss Rose Dafforne, Mr. J. H. Müllerhausen, and Mr. Daniel Price. Organist, Mr. Horace G. Holmes. Conductor, Mr. J. H. Moon.

THE Duc de Frias, Civil Governor of Madrid, died on the 20th ult. His first wife was Victoire Balfé, the daughter of the composer of the "Bohemian Girl," "The Talisman," and other operas. She died in 1871, leaving three children, the eldest of whom, Bernadino, Count de Haro, now Duc de Frias, was educated at Eton College.

MR. H. W. WESTON, F.C.O., gave a Recital at Balham Parish Church on Whit Sunday, after Evensong, to a large congregation, when the programme included works by Meyerbeer, Handel, Sterndale Bennett, Rheinberger, S. S. Wesley, and a new Meditation in E flat, for the organ, by the performer.

MADAME EDITH DANIEL gave her annual Concert on Monday evening, the 7th ult., at Brixton Hall. Madame Daniel was supported by Miss Agnes Larkcom, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Frederick Bevan, Madame Dunbar Perkins (violin), and Mr. Turle Lee (pianoforte).

THE Handel Society gave a performance of the Oratorio "Samson" at Portman Rooms, Baker Street, on Friday evening, April 27, to the residents of the Homes for Working Girls in London. Over eight hundred young women were present.

MR. AMBROSE AUSTIN's Benefit Concert is to take place on the 13th inst., at St. James's Hall. The number and qualifications of the artists, together with the undoubted claims of the bénéficiaire, will make the Concert memorable in the events of the season.

MR. EDWIN BARNES gave two Organ Recitals, interspersed with vocal music, on the large and improved organ at the School for the Blind, Swiss Cottage, on the evenings of the 12th and 19th ult.

AN Organ Recital was given at Holy Trinity Parish Church, Rotherhithe, on Whit Sunday, by Mr. Ernest R. Foster. A selection from the works of Handel, Beethoven, Bennett, Bach, and the player formed the programme.

MR. NORMAN CUMMINGS, son of the well-known tenor, teacher, and conductor, Mr. W. H. Cummings, has made his début at Leipzig as a pianist with marked success.

MR. G. J. BENNETT has been appointed a Professor of Harmony at the Royal Academy of Music.

FOREIGN NOTES.

On the 7th ult. the Imperial Opera of Vienna celebrated the centenary of the first production there of Mozart's "Don Giovanni." The reception of the immortal masterpiece, one hundred years ago, was a very lukewarm one, the opera being repeated fourteen times during the same year (1788), and not resumed until ten years afterwards. The total number of performances of "Don Giovanni" at the Vienna Hof-Theater up to the present day is 474, the composer having received the paltry sum of 225 florins (about £19) for ceding the right of performance to the Imperial establishment in question.

The most copious and valuable collection of songs of the Minnesinger period, known as the Manesse Manuscript, has just been purchased by the German Government from the Paris National Library for the sum of 500,000 francs. The precious codex has been deposited in the Bibliotheca Palatina of Heidelberg, to which institution it originally belonged.

We hear from Munich that, owing to the state of his health, it is scarcely to be expected that Herr Levi will be able to conduct the forthcoming Bayreuth performances. In his stead Capellmeister Mottl will probably be the conductor of the "Parsifal" representations, and Dr. Hans Richter wield the bâton in those of "Die Meistersinger"—two worthy substitutes, at all events.

A highly successful performance of Goethe's "Faust" (first part), with incidental music by Herr Max Zeuger, has just been given at the Munich Hof-Theater. Goethe's world-drama, so recently illustrated, musically, by Heinrich Zöllner, would seem to afford an ever fruitful source of inspiration to composers, the number of settings, either in its entirety or melo-dramatically, of the work being already considerable.

Anton Rubinstein's Biblical drama "Sulamith" was produced in concert form on the 4th ult., at Berlin, under the direction of Herr Deppe, and met with a most favourable reception. This interesting, richly-coloured, and picturesque work was first produced five years ago at the Hamburg Stadt-Theater, the composer himself conducting, but has since been unaccountably neglected.

Wagner's early operatic work, "Die Feen," is in active course of preparation at the Royal Opera of Munich, where it will shortly be brought out for the first time on any stage. The score is about to be published by Herr Heckel, of Mannheim.

After many years of retirement from the lyrical stage, Madame Amalie Joachim made her appearance again in opera, on the 5th ult., at the Krollische Theater of Berlin, in the title-rôle of Gluck's "Orpheus." The numerous audience which had assembled to witness the rentrée of the gifted artist were not sparing in their applause, and there seems to be every probability that the lady's services will be permanently secured by the operatic establishment referred to.

A Russian Opera Company inaugurated a series of performances, on the 6th ult., at the Berlin Victoria Theatre, with Glinka's "The Life for the Czar," which was very well received. This is the first time of a Russian operatic troupe having visited the German capital.

The well-known Hoch'sche Conservatorium, at Frankfurt, has just transferred its quarters to a fine new building situate in the vicinity of the Eschenheimer Thor in that town. The inauguration took place, amidst appropriate ceremonies, on April 29.

Herr Julius Stockhausen, the eminent German baritone and unrivalled interpreter of his country's most refined lieder, commemorated, on the 26th ult., the fortieth anniversary of his first public appearance in the part of Elijah, at a performance of Mendelssohn's Oratorio, at Basle. In the same month, twenty-five years ago, Stockhausen undertook, for the first time, the rendering, at a Concert given in Vienna, of the entire series of songs known as "Die schöne Müllerin" and "Die Winterreise," by Schubert, with which his name has since become associated, both in Germany and elsewhere. Numerous tokens of regard and admiration were forwarded from all parts of the Fatherland to this veritable "meistersinger," on the interesting anniversary in question.

A new "infant prodigy" has been discovered at Vienna in the person of Leopold Spielmann, aged five, who plays Mozart's and Beethoven's Sonatas from memory, and with a degree of expression, we are told, truly surprising in one so young.

Weber's "Die drei Pintos," as completed by Herr Mahler, has now been most successfully brought out at the Dresden Hof-Theater, the first and third acts more especially eliciting enthusiastic plaudits, while several numbers had to be repeated.

Goldmark's new opera, "Merlin," was very well received on its recent first production at the Royal Theatre of Hanover.

At one of the Concerts recently given at Aix-les-Bains the programme included a capital performance of Sir Herbert Oakeley's festival march "Edinburgh," which was very well received by the audience. A Gavotte and Musette and a Minuet and Trio, &c., by the same composer, have also been performed during the series.

Bach's "Passions Musik" according to St. Matthew, was performed last month at the Paris Conservatoire, by the Concordia Society and the Conservatoire Orchestra, and is said to have produced a profound impression. The sublime work had only been performed in the French capital once before, some fifteen years since, under the direction of the zealous M. Lamoureux.

The popularity with modern French audiences of Hector Berlioz, so greatly neglected by them as he was during his lifetime, remains still unabated. M. Colonne recently conducted the forty-sixth performance at his Concerts of "La Damnation de Faust," when the hall was crowded, and, many having to be refused admittance, the performance was repeated the following week.

Among the interesting exhibits relating to music at the Bologna Exhibition, is to be found a series of important autographs by Spontini, sent by the authorities of Berlin, in which capital the composer of "Cortez" occupied for a number of years the post of Director of the Royal Opera.

The Royal Academy of Florence has added the following gentlemen to its corresponding members—viz., Niels W. Gade, Peter Tschaikowsky, Edvard Grieg, and Arthur Sullivan.

Signor Arrigo Boito, the composer of "Mefistofele," has been decorated with the Order of Merit of Savoy, a distinction which carries along with it the substantial benefit of an annual pension of 1,200 lire.

A fusion having taken place of the great publishing houses of Ricordi and Lucca, at Milan, the two will henceforth form one concern.

Peter Tschaikowsky is engaged upon the composition of a new opera entitled "The Captain's Daughter."

Astorga's famous "Stabat Mater" was recently performed at the Royal College of Music at Palermo, under the direction of Signor G. Miceli. Astorga was born at Palermo in 1681.

The Royal Academy of Music of Stockholm has ordered a medal to be struck in memory of the late Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt.

Messrs. Rieter-Biedermann, of Leipzig, have just published two interesting and hitherto unknown compositions by Louis Spohr. They are both occasional works, one being a Cantata entitled "Der Frühling," for mixed choir, soli, and orchestra, written in commemoration of the golden wedding of the composer's parents; the other, a Cavatina for soprano solo and a mixed choir, intended to celebrate the silver wedding of his daughter. They are said to be written in Spohr's best manner, and well adapted for performance by small choral societies.

A monument is to be raised to Beethoven at Philadelphia, in the shape of a statue of the composer, to be erected in Fairmont Park. Subscriptions have been opened for the purpose for some time past, and there is every probability of a speedy realisation of the scheme.

The town of Chicago is contributing to the cost of the Mozart monument in Vienna. The musicians of the Lake City have given two Concerts for this purpose, the amount obtained being 3,000 dollars.

A monument is being erected, at San Francisco, to Francis Scott Key, the author of the American National Hymn "The Star-spangled Banner."

Franz Goetze, a highly valued teacher of singing, and professor at the Leipzig Conservatoire, has just died at Dessau, at the age of seventy-four. The deceased artist was a pupil of Spohr on the violin, and became first violinist at the Weimar Theatre in 1833, when he found himself the possessor of a magnificent tenor voice, and eventually was able to exchange his place in the orchestra for that of a first tenor at the same theatre. Goetze retired from the stage in 1853, and has since then been engaged in teaching his art.

Ugo Errera, a distinguished amateur composer and pianist, and founder of the Liceo Benedetto Marcello of Venice, died in that town last month, aged forty-six.

The death is announced at Louvain, on April 28, of the Chevalier von Elewyck, Maitre de chapelle of the Church of Saint-Pierre, and a distinguished music-historian, aged sixty-three.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MINOR NOTATION OF THE TONIC SOL-FA SYSTEM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Dr. Pole has earned the thanks of Tonic Sol-faists and movable doh-ists generally for his interesting account of the evolution of the practice of sol-fainging the minor key from Lah. Dr. Pole offers no opinion upon the adaptation of the practice to modern music. I trust he will be induced to go further and investigate the natural causes why sol-faists cling so tenaciously to their Lah minor scale. Certainly it is not because of its venerable age (it is something to hear that Tonic Sol-faists are so conservative), but because it is convenient to-day that the Lah minor scale is adopted. The problem is psychological, not historical. Here is a method of impressing the mind's ear (not a mere nomenclature that conjures up no corresponding conceptions of effect) with musical relations by associating syllables with scale position. Each tone of a scale series has an effect derived entirely from its relations to other tones with which it is compared by an automatic effort of memory. Experience proves that each effect can be associated with a name. The names Doh, Ray, &c., answer this purpose. Thus the syllable "doh" marks the nuance of effect of a tone bounded above by a major third, a major fourth, and a major sixth, and below by a constant minor second, a minor third, &c. But Mr. Taylor would have Doh to stand as well for other different surroundings. The two uses of Doh thus advocated may be shown in the following manner:—

- | | |
|--------------------|-----------------------|
| Lah, major sixth. | (b) La, minor sixth. |
| Fah, major fourth. | Fah, major fourth. |
| Me, major third. | (b) Ma, minor third. |
| Doh. | Doh. |
| Te, minor second. | Te, minor second. |
| Lah, minor third. | (b) Ta, major second. |
| | (b) La, major third. | and so on with every other syllable. Experience shows that you can stand such an upset of interval relations as is found in chromatic music, because it is only temporary; but if the upset is prolonged, as on Mr. Taylor's plan it must often necessarily be, the syllables lose their mnemonic power. Now, in teaching the major scale the numerous relations of Lah, te, doh, ray, me, fah become fixed, and the syllables are, of course, the expression of these relations. The greater part of the minor scale is then, as it were, ready for use. It is true that the function of the tones is altered when Doh ceases to be tonic. This fact, however, exercises singularly little influence over the mnemonic power of the syllables compared with the influence of altered interval surroundings. Really this experience goes to the root of the question. It is also true that the variability of the top tetrachord of the minor key leads to some disturbance of mnemonic effect. The minor key is a difficulty on any system, and must always be so, because of its inherent vagueness and comparative instability. If Mr. Sedley Taylor hopes to alter this by his plan of naming the minor key from Doh, the remedy will be worse than the disease. When all is said regarding the independent existence of the minor key, the fact remains that it is a poise of intervals different from that of the major key, and that this difference is, on the whole, most sympathetically expressed by the Lah notation.

Every experience of practice confirms the naturalness of the Tonic Sol-fa way of Sol-fainging the minor key. By the Lah notation the common modulations from a major key to the supertonic and mediant minor are expressed perspicuously, and sung easily by elementary singers. The alternative Doh notation would present almost insuperable difficulty in this case, because it would have to overcome the knack the ear has of regarding the Ray and Me chords as potential Lah chords. Then as to doctrine. A Tonic Sol-faist can hold any doctrine he likes regarding the dual relation of a minor key to its relative and tonic major keys. If Mr. Taylor merely aspired to alter some of the doctrines as to key and mode that are taught in some Tonic Sol-fa theory books, I should be inclined to go with him. It seems to me, however, that his proposals would create, rather than dispel, confusion. Lastly, it may be worth while to mention, that were the Doh minor scale adopted the Tonic Sol-fa notation lends itself freely to this expression of the minor.—Yours, &c.,

W. G. McNAUGHT.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * * Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur. Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

A WORKING MAN.—The best and cheapest way to learn music and to become an organist is to begin early in life, and to study under the best masters.

COUNTERPOINT.—Marpurg's Fugue in German may be procured through Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., complete with Examples, net 15s. There is no English edition.

K. C. P.—It is not necessary to obtain the consent of the poet before setting his words to music for those who enjoy litigation. It is, however, usually done, in the like manner that it is necessary to pay for an article before removing it from the shop unless credit is long, or that conscience is elastic.

QUEERIST.—The degree is legitimate. We may take an early opportunity of speaking of its value in detail.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ASHFORD, KENT.—The Orchestral Society gave its thirteenth Popular Concert on the 9th ult., when the following programme was carried out most successfully: Haydn's Symphony in G, Overture Le Chevalier Brton, Stephanie Gavotte, Scotch Fantasia "Robert Bruce," Selection from La Belle Hélène, Rondo-Quintet by Beethoven (pianoforte and wind), "Meditation sur un Prélude de Bach" (Gounod), violin, harp, &c.; Andante and Allegro, Quartet in C (Prout), pianoforte and strings; and songs and glees by members of the church choir.

BOSTON SPA, YORKSHIRE.—A very successful Concert was given in the Trustees' Hall on the 18th ult., before a large and fashionable audience. Miss Selina Quick and Miss Frances Harrison both gave several solos and duets, affording the audience much pleasure by their tasteful rendering. Miss Greenwood, Mr. Maury (of Leeds), and Mr. W. P. Turner (of Harrogate) also delighted the audience with their contributions. Efficient help was rendered by the celebrated quartet party from the Leeds Parish Church, consisting of Messrs. A. Armstrong, G. Nunn, J. Thompson, and J. Allan. Mr. D. J. Jennings presided at the pianoforte and accompanied the various songs.

BRIGHTON.—The Brighton Musical Fraternity gave a Smoking Concert (in aid of Mr. John Gledhill) at the Old Ship Hotel on the evening of the 1st ult. Mr. W. Kuhe was the chairman. After an opening speech by the chairman an interesting and attractive selection of pieces was performed by Dr. Sawyer, Messrs. A. King, B. Mus., Douglas Lott, H. Davey, R. Taylor, Norman Roe, J. Crapps, Frank Hedgcock, Leo Stern, C. T. West, Jacques Greebe, Frank d'Alquen, F. Corder, W. Kuhe, and a male voice choir. Grieg's "Land Ho," a chorus for men's voices with a baritone solo, was given for the first time in England; some Bagatelles for harmonium and strings, by Dvorák; and some violin solos by John Gledhill were also included in the programme. The Concert concluded with an Eccentric Finale, especially written for the occasion by Mr. F. Corder, which was performed by the full strength of the company.

BURNLEY.—On April 29 Dr. Naylor's Sacred Cantata The Brazen Serpent was repeated in Holy Trinity Church. The solos were delivered by Master Marriott, Messrs. Jas. Simpson, Arnold, &c. This service was the last of the winter series, under the direction of Mr. R. Watson.

CHICAGO.—A most interesting series of Services was celebrated in the Church of St. Clement during Easter week and the days immediately succeeding. Services of the like pattern of excellence are continued each Sunday throughout the year.

CLACTON-ON-SEA.—On Monday, the 21st ult., a Concert was given in the Assembly Room at the Royal Hotel, consisting of selections from Handel's Messiah. Mr. F. W. Lewellen was the Conductor, and the performance was a great success. The solos were sung by Miss Rose Moss, Miss Florence Kent, Mr. C. A. White, and Mr. W. G. Hazelgrove. The chorus consisted of thirty-five voices, and the Conductor must have taken much trouble to train them to such a state of efficiency. The whole performance was loudly applauded, and all engaged in it must have been gratified to find their services appreciated. Mrs. Just presided at the pianoforte and rendered her portion of the work with excellent taste and expression. Mr. R. Stokoe, Mus. Bac., Cantab., and F.C.O., and Mr. H. Lloyd rendered good service at the organ.

CLEVEDON.—The usual Spring Concert of the Choral Society was given on the 22nd ult., when Gaul's Cantata Joan of Arc and a miscellaneous selection was performed. Mr. Frank Gardner was the leader of the band, and Mr. W. Haydn Cox (of Bristol) conducted.

CONDOVER, SALOP.—On the 16th and 17th ult. this pretty old village held one of its half-yearly Concerts with the usual success. The large and well ventilated schoolroom was crowded, especially on the second day, when the "Blue Ribbonite" was sung by special request.

DARTFORD.—On the 16th ult. the Choral Association gave their last Concert for the season. The soloists were Miss Ada Beck, Miss Aiston, and Mr. Whatley. Mr. C. R. Green conducted.

DISS.—The Choral Society gave its last Concert of the season on April 26. The humorous Cantata John Gilpin, by Mr. Edmund Rogers, formed the first part of the programme. The work was a great success throughout, and evoked much applause. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Marriott, Mrs. Mackey, Mr. Jones (Ely Cathedral), and the Rev. E. J. Alvis (East Winch). The band and chorus did their work exceedingly well. The second part of the programme was of a miscellaneous character, opening with a selection from I Puritani (Bellini), brilliantly played by the band. Miss E. Marriott, Miss Pullen, Mrs. Marriott, Mrs. Mackey, Mr. Jones, Mr. Alvis, Mr. Root (who played a flute solo), and others, by their efforts evoked great applause. The Overture to Guy Rannering (Bishop) by the band, with the violin solo played by Mr. Cook of Ipswich, who led the band, was included in the programme. The National Anthem brought the Concert to a close. Mrs. Hemstock presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Pullen conducted.

DUBLIN.—On April 25, the University Choral Society performed Dvorák's Dramatic Cantata The Spectre's Bride in the New Leinster Hall. As on the occasion of the production of Sullivan's Golden Legend by the same Society, the balcony and galleries of the hall were thrown open to the public, the ground area being reserved for the subscribers. The large and fashionable audience showed the interest taken in the first public performance in Dublin of the remarkable musical setting by the now celebrated Bohemian composer. It is true that the University Choral Society performed this work before, but it was practically in camera, as was for many years the wont of this fortunate Society, which is in the enviable condition of being independent of public support. The Cantata was preceded by Chopin's Funeral March, from his B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto, scored for the band by the Conductor of the Society, Sir Robert Stewart, who with his well-known good taste and musical judgment made of it a most effective orchestral work. Dvorák's fresh and powerful Cantata was received with enthusiasm. The band was increased by the engagement of some extra instrumentalists. The chorus, too, showed an improvement in numbers and tone, especially in the soprano and alto parts, and both chorus and band were most effective throughout the performance. The principal vocalists were Miss Adelaide Mullen, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Edmund Oldham, who took respectively the parts of the Bride, the Spectre, and the Narrator. The work of the Narrator is not easy, and the constant interweaving of his part with the choruses demands an intimate understanding between band, chorus, and Narrator for its effective delivery. Mr. Oldham acquitted himself well of his difficult task, and sang throughout with good declamatory style. Miss Mullen is a most conscientious and capable artist, but she seldom rises to enthusiasm with her work, and consequently seldom inspires it in her audience. On the present occasion she was frequently applauded, and was obliged to repeat the invocation "O Virgin Mother," which is the penultimate number of the work. Mr. H. Beaumont sang the music allotted to the Spectre with good effect. It may not be uninteresting to record the fact that the representatives of the Bride and the Spectre, Miss Mullen and Mr. Beaumont, were joined in wedlock on the following day.

FOLKESTONE.—An Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church, by Alfred Oake, the Organist, on the 23rd ult. The programme included pieces by Dubois, A. Mailly, J. S. Bach, Batiste, Lemmens, Mendelssohn, and Alfred Oake. A duet, Handel's Largo in G, was played by Mr. Dancy and the Organist.

FROME.—An invitation Concert was given in the Mechanics' Hall on the 17th ult., as a prelude to a presentation of an ebony bâton (with silver mountings), a clock, and a tea and coffee service to Mr. Thomas Grant, in grateful recognition of his generous and valuable services in the cause and advancement of music in Frome and its neighbourhood.

GREENHITHE, KENT.—A Concert was given in the Village Hall on the 16th ult., by the Swanscombe and Greenhithe Choral Society. Solos were contributed by Miss H. Austin, Miss E. Austin, Mr. T. W. Page, R.C.M., and Mr. John Buley. The choral portion of the programme consisted of "The Evening Hymn," from Sullivan's Golden Legend; Spohr's "As pants the hart," Rossini's "To Thee, great Lord," Macfarren's "The Hunt's up," Sullivan's "O Hush thee," and Pearson's "Hurrah for Merry England," &c. Mr. F. H. Squires, F.C.O., played some organ solos. The accompanists were Mr. John Hoyte and Mrs. Crowhurst. Mr. T. H. Jarvis conducted.

HADLEIGH.—Two Special Services were held in the church of St. Mary's, on Wednesday, the 16th ult. In the afternoon selections of Sacred music, by Handel, Benedict, Gounod, Costa, &c., were given by Miss Vinnie Beaumont, Miss M. Dakin, Mr. S. Thornborough, Mr. Frank May, Mr. Ellis Roberts (1st violin), Mr. Halfpenny (2nd violin), Mr. W. Whitehouse (violinello), Mr. G. Betjemann (viola), Mr. G. Platt (double-bass), and Mr. J. F. Lewis (organ). In the evening Rossini's Stabat Mater ("Tribulation"), and Mendelssohn's Lobgesang (Hymn of Praise) were performed by the Musical Society. Conductor, Mr. G. A. Hardacre, assisted by the above-named performers.

HANLEY.—On Ascension Day, the 10th ult., at Evensong, in Shelton Parish Church, Gaul's Sacred Cantata The Holy City was performed. The ordinary choir of the church was strengthened for the occasion, a few voices from Mr. Garner's class rendering valuable help. Mrs. Brandon-Jones, Miss Garner, Mr. T. B. Nicolson, and Mr. S. Wilcot were the principal singers. The Cantata was preceded by a shortened service.

HERNE BAY.—The Choral Society, under the direction of its Conductor, Mr. E. A. Crutenden, gave a Concert in the Town Hall on the 15th ult., when Gaul's Cantata Ruth, and Lloyd's Hero and Leander were performed, with the assistance of the following soloists: Mrs. Mason, Madame Evans-Warwick, and Mr. Alfred Moore. The choruses were sung with extreme care and effect. The accompanists were Miss K. Bowes (pianoforte) and Miss Edith Fleet (American organ).

HORSINGTON.—The new organ in the Parish Church was opened on the 3rd ult. by Mr. G. E. Lyle (Organist of Sherborne Abbey), who presided at the organ during the service and gave a Recital afterwards, the pieces played being—Organ Concerto No. 4, Allegro, Andante, Adagio, Allegro (Handel); Andante con variazioni (Pleyel); the "Angels" Serenade (Braga); Prelude and Fugue in F (Bach). The organ was built by Mr. W. G. Vowles, of Bristol.

KETERING.—On the 7th ult. the Choral Society gave a successful performance of Dr. Mackenzie's Rose of Sharon. The principal soloists were Miss Jessie Griffin, Miss Dews, Mr. Holberry Hagyard, and Mr. Sutton Shepley. The orchestra, led by Mr. W. Richardson (of London), gave an excellent account of their share of the work. Mr. H. G. Gotch conducted.

LEEDS.—Dr. Spark gave an interesting Recital on Whit Monday, at the Victoria Hall, of his own compositions, which had a large measure of success. The performance was greatly applauded and highly appreciated. The Recital opened with a Marche Triomphale in D, which was performed at the Crystal Palace three years ago; and was followed by the more popular piece "The Lake," a descriptive piece ably performed by the player. A Concert Fantasia, on well-known Scotch airs, met with a most cordial reception, and brought a very successful entertainment to a close.

LEEDS, NEAR MAIDSTONE.—On the 17th ult. a grand evening Concert was given for the benefit of the Choir of St. Nicholas Church. Songs were given by Miss Ada Beck, Madame Isabel Wyatt, Mr. Oldroyd, and Mr. Holiday.

LEICESTER.—Mr. J. Addison Adcock gave his fourth Popular Concert (second series) in the Temperance Hall on Saturday, April 28. The instrumental selections by the orchestra (120 performers) included Overture "La Sirène" (Auber), Military Quick March "The Royal Guards" (La Thière), and a nautical selection "Life on the Ocean" (Bending). The programme was pleasantly varied by the singing of Miss Alice Massey, Dr. Barton, and the Leicester Vocal Octet.

LEWES.—The last Concert of the season of the Choral Society was given on the 2nd ult. at the St. Anne's Concert Hall. The work selected was Mendelssohn's Elijah. The soloists were Miss Kate Norman, Madame Osborne Williams, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. The last-named gentleman sang the part of the Prophet with great power and impressiveness. Mr. Harper Kearton's rendering of the air "Then shall the righteous," and Miss Kate Norman's "Hear ye, Israel," were much appreciated. The choruses were sung with precision, attack, and body of tone. The Conductor was Mr. Scammell. The accompaniments were played by Mr. P. J. Starnes and Mr. J. Crapps, who presided at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively.

LONDONDERRY.—An Organ Recital was given in the Cathedral on Monday, the 14th ult., by Mr. D. C. Jones, Mus. Bac., F.C.O. His programme was selected from the works of Bach, Batiste, Guilman, Rheinberger, Spohr, and Beethoven. Mr. Hemingway, of the Cathedral, was the vocalist.

NEATH.—Mendelssohn's Elijah was performed by the Harmonic Society on the 3rd ult. in St. David's Church. The chorus numbered some hundred voices, well balanced and well trained, and they did their work in a most satisfactory manner. The Society has been in existence some fifteen years and has given a long list of oratorio and choral works. The present effort was probably the most exacting and most successful. The choir was supported by a small orchestra and the organ of the church. The solos were sung by Miss Jenny Eddison, Miss H. M. Jones, Mr. Hopkin Morgan, and Mr. B. H. Grove. The Conductor was Mr. J. L. Matthews, and Mrs. R. P. Morgan presided at the organ.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Miss Hildeyard Werner and her pupils' annual Concert took place on the 18th ult. The Northumberland Hall was filled to overflowing. The pianoforte pieces played by the pupils comprised Handel's Allegro in F (from the second Suite), Weber's L'Invitation à la Valse, Chopin's Valse in A flat (Op. 34), Liszt's "Am Meer," Moszkowski's Spanish Dances, Scharwenka's Polish Dances, &c. The young violinist, Miss Amy Anderson, played with notable success compositions by Leonard, Raff, and Paganini. A special feature of the evening was the appearance of Miss Werner's String Band (the Mignon Orchestra), the only lady orchestra in Newcastle, now entering upon the second season since its formation. Miss Annie Mason, late student of the Leipzig Conservatoire, sang with refinement and expression "Robert, toi qui j'aime," from Robert le Diable, and Mackenzie's pretty song "Edenland," Miss Emily Johnstone gave a brilliant and dramatic rendering of the air "Mon cœur ne pas changer," from Gounod's Opera La Mireille, and the Flower Song from Faust. Miss Werner acted throughout as Conductor and accompanist. During the interval in the programme a great number of prizes were distributed by the Rev. Marsden Gibson to the pupils who had made the greatest progress. Among the most youthful prize-winners were, in the violin class, Miss Maggie Smith, aged eight, and Master Cyril Millican, aged five.

NEW YORK.—At the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church a second Organ Recital was given on the 8th ult. by Mr. John Hyatt Brewer, assisted by Miss Marie Van and a body of twelve male voices, the Boylston Glee Club, of Brooklyn. The compositions of several American musicians were included in the programme.

NORWICH.—The second of the Classical Trio Concerts was given in Noverre's Rooms on the 2nd ult. The two trios chosen were Beethoven's Op. 1, No. 2, in G major, and Reissiger's in D minor (Op. 115). Reissiger's trios are less known to the general amateur than those by Haydn and Beethoven, and the performance will certainly help to bring them into notice. The executants were the same as at the former Concert: Pianoforte, Mr. A. Wiseman; violin, Mr. F. W. B. Noverre; violoncello, Mr. R. Price; and the performance, on the whole, was highly creditable. Mr. Noverre gave a violin solo—a Réverie by Vieuxtemps—with great effect. Mr. Wiseman and Mr. Price played Mendelssohn's Variations Concertantes (Op. 17) for pianoforte and violoncello. Two delicious morceaux by Henselt were given by Mr. Kingston Rudd, and, in response to an enthusiastic encore, the same author's "Cradle Song." Miss Lillian Mills was the vocalist.—The present season of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union was brought to a conclusion on the 3rd ult. in St. Andrew's Hall. The music of Weber's Preciosa, a work but seldom heard in its entirety, was announced for performance. The chorus sang well, and the band, under the leadership of Mr. F. W. B. Noverre, played the important orchestral parts in good style. The lovely song "Lonely am I no longer" was charmingly sung by Miss Phillips, and the delivery of the spoken Recitative was undertaken by Mr. B. W. Harcourt. The second part of the programme was made up of miscellaneous items. Dr. Bunnett conducted, and Mr. Lain did useful work at the organ.—Seldom has St. Andrew's Hall, during its long and eventful history, been utilised for a more useful purpose than on Wednesday evening, the 9th ult., when The Messiah was given to an audience which consisted almost exclusively of working men and women, admitted at the nominal charge of threepence each. It was a happy thought of the Mayor (Mr. F. W. Harmer), after the instruction he has endeavoured to convey to his poorer fellow-citizens by means of popular scientific lectures, to set apart an evening which should not only entertain, but elevate those who had the privilege of being present. In this worthy object the Mayor was ably seconded by the Sheriff, Mr. R. G. Bagshaw. The idea was taken up con amore by the members of the Festival Chorus and the Norwich Philharmonic Society, so that the performance had the advantage of a full band and chorus; the solo parts being ably filled by Miss Fusselle, Miss Acton, Mr. Jones, and Mr. Brockbank. With such a force at his command, and Dr. Bunnett seated at the organ, it is needless to say that Dr. Hill, as Conductor, was able to give a very good account of Handel's masterpiece. It is generally known that our worthy Mayor devotes much time during the winter months to training a choir in the village of Cringleford, but it was not so well known that he was competent to conduct a full orchestra. However, on Wednesday evening Dr. Hill resigned the bâton to his Worship's hands during the performance of the "Hallelujah" Chorus, much to the surprise of both orchestra and audience, but certainly not to the discomfort of either. Upwards of 1,400 persons were present, and had the hall been sufficiently large to contain double that number there would have been no difficulty in filling it. It is a new step on the part of a municipal leader; it is surely a better plan to entertain the poor than to feast the rich.

OLDHAM.—At St. Mary's Church, on Sunday afternoon, the 20th ult., a performance of Handel's Oratorio Judas Maccabæus was given by the St. Cecilia Musical Society, band and choir numbering about 150 performers. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Wood, Miss Chadderton, Mrs. Slater, Miss Ravell, Mr. Chadderton, Mr. Duxbury, and Mr. J. F. Slater, F.C.O., conducted.

OXFORD.—Farmer's Hymn Oratorio Christ and His Soldiers was sung in the church of St. Peter-le-Bailey on April 26 in aid of the Organ Fund. The choruses were rendered by the Parish Musical Society, numbering sixty-five voices, under the direction of the Organist, Mr. W. L. Biggs, who accompanied the work. The treble solos were sung by Master Percy James, and the tenor by Messrs. Keeler and Penn, all of St. Peter-le-Bailey choir. The contralto and bass solos were rendered by Miss Lavina Talbot and Mr. H. Thomas. A short address was given by the Rector, the Rev. F. J. Chavasse. It is noteworthy that this was the first occasion on which a musical service, or even an Anthem, had been sung in this church, which has been built about fourteen years, and is one of the leading Evangelical churches in the city.

READING.—The Twenty-fifth Anniversary Concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on the 1st ult., under the conductorship of Mr. W. H. Strickland, at the New Town Hall. Niels Gade's Cantata The Crusaders formed the first part of the programme; Part II. (miscellaneous) closing with Villiers Stanford's Choral Ballad The Revenge. Mr. Alfred Burnett was leader of the orchestra, and Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt, of All Saints, was, as usual, a most efficient organist. The soloists were Miss Bertha Moore, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail; and the band and chorus numbered about 150 performers.

RETFORD.—On Monday, the 14th ult., Mr. Hamilton White gave the second and concluding Concert for this season in connection with his vocal class. The soloists engaged were Miss Kate Fusselle, Mr. Holberry Hagyard, Miss Tallents, and Mr. T. E. Mackie. Miss Denman was at the pianoforte. There was a chorus and an orchestra led by Mr. W. Cooke, of Lincoln. The unaccompanied part-songs given by the choral class were well received by the audience.

ST. LEONARDS.—Otto Hegner's Pianoforte Recital, given at St. Leonards Hall, on Monday, the 14th ult., needs but a few words of record. The young and highly accomplished pianist performed selections from the works of the following masters: Bach, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Raff, Mozart, Rubinstein, Beethoven, Liszt, and Weber. All these selections were executed with wonderful precision. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity by an enthusiastic audience, consisting almost wholly of ladies.

SANDHURST, BERKS.—A very successful Concert was given by the Royal Military College Choral and Orchestral Society in the Gymnasium on the 15th ult., when Sir Sterndale Bennett's May Queen was performed with full band and chorus of 100 performers, under the direction of Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt, the Conductor of the Society. The soloists were Miss Bertha Moore, Mrs. A. Clarke, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. Both band and chorus acquitted themselves well, the chorus especially showing evidence of careful training. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, and included songs for each of the soloists, a violin solo by Mr. Harry Lee, and Fanning's choral ballad "The Miller's Wooing," which was effectively rendered with the orchestral accompaniments.

SHERBORNE.—Ascension Day was commemorated at the Abbey Church by an evening service, which included a sacred Cantata entitled St. Philip, composed especially for this service by Mr. G. E. Lyle, the Abbey Organist. The solos were sustained by Miss Hardy, Mrs. W. Roxby, and Mr. H. Witherington. The choruses were most efficiently rendered by the choir, assisted by a number of ladies. The service commenced with "Those eternal bowers" as the processional hymn, and at its conclusion the Rev. W. E. Colgrove read a series of collects, after which the vicar (Canon Lyon) delivered a brief address, in which he depicted the ministrations of the Apostle Philip as related in Acts viii.

SLIGO.—The sixth annual Festival of the Choral Union was held on April 24, eleven choirs, numbering more than 180 voices, taking part. Evensong was sung in St. John's at 3.30 p.m., the Anthem being "The heavens are telling."—The Musical Society brought their sixth season to a close by a performance of Schumann's Pilgrimage of the Rose, on April 26. The tenor solos were undertaken by Mr. Bapty, of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin. The miscellaneous selection included several of Mendelssohn's part-songs.

SWINTON.—On the 1st ult. a Concert was given in the New Schools by Mr. G. A. Nixon (late Organist and Choirmaster of the Parish Church), when he was assisted by Miss M. E. Sorales (pianoforte), Mr. Soar (violin), and Messrs. Simmonite and Dopple (vocalists). Mr. Nixon presided at the organ, and the programme consisted of instrumental trios by Weber, Saint-Saëns, Wagner; solos by Handel, Weber, Sarasate; and songs by Molloy, Pinsuti, Balfe, and Clay. Miss Sorales played Weber's brilliant Polacca in E, and Mr. Soar played Sarasate's "Gipsy dances" upon the violin. Miss Matilda Turner and Master T. E. Barron (pupils of Mr. Nixon) made successful appearances as pianists.

THORNTON HEATH.—The Musical Society gave its last Concert of the fourteenth season in East Surrey Hall on the 15th ult. The programme was of a miscellaneous nature, consisting of various part-songs by Müller, Rossini, Hatton, &c., which were well rendered by the choir under the conductorship of Mr. Gregory Hast. Solos were given by Miss Florence Venning, Miss Jeannie Mills, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Charles Ackerman. Madame Gregory Hast played some pianoforte solos and shared the accompaniments with Mrs. Gilson.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—On April 30 Mr. Frederick Hunnibell's Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's Creation at the Great Hall, which was very successful. Mr. Hunnibell conducted. The band of the Orchestral Society was augmented by several London players, with Mr. Henry Gibson as leader. Mr. Fred Lewis presided at the organ. The soloists were Miss Bertha Moore, Mr. Bernard Lane, and Mr. Franklin Clive. The choruses were well sung and the whole performance gave great satisfaction.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—An Organ Recital was given on the 7th ult. in St. Peter's Collegiate Church, by Dr. Taylor, of Stafford. His programme included works by Batiste, Mailly, Lemmens, Bennett, Bach, Merkel, and Wely.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—Mr. W. H. Palmer, Organist of Emmanuel Church, was presented, on the 14th ult., with a silver mounted bâton in commemoration of his thirtieth year as Organist.

WEYBRIDGE.—On the 15th ult. a Concert was given at the Village Hall under the direction of Mr. J. H. Cornish, Organist of St. Michael's Church, for the benefit of the London and South-Western Railway Servants' Orphanage, and was a great success, both musically and financially. The programme included Bennett's May Queen, Romberg's Toy Symphony, and Grossmitch's Musical Sketch, Cups and Saucers. The principal vocalists were Miss Fry, Miss Ethel Smith, Mr. J. G. Blanchard, and the Rev. G. E. Gotterill. The May Queen was most happily suited to the locality for "Fairer scene is not below than English meadow by the Thames," and was excellently rendered by the soloists already mentioned, supported by a well-balanced choir, whose attack and precision left little to be desired. The accompaniments were played throughout by Mr. A. B. Shetfield, with taste and skill.

YORK.—A third and Special Service was given in York Minster on the evening of Ascension Day, the chief feature of which was the performance of Mr. Alan Gray's The Widow of Zarephath. The unflagging attention of a crowded congregation gave ample proof that the work fulfils the purpose of its composition, being interesting and interpretative to the common congregation, while fully satisfying the exigencies of the trained musical taste.

YORKTOWN, SURREY.—On the 1st ult., Roeckel's Oratorio The Christian's Armour was given at Evensong, the choruses being ably rendered by the choir and the soprano solos by Masters Merchant and King, the alto by Mr. B. Merchant, the tenor by Mr. W. A. Oram, and the bass by Mr. Ashton, members of the choir. Mr. Passmore, A.Mus., T.C.L., the Organist of the Church, presided at the organ, and Mr. W. S. Patey conducted.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. W. R. Baldwin Tann, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Gunnersbury, W.—Mr. Bruce H. Steane, A.C.O., Organist and Choir Trainer to St. Bartholomew's Convalescent Home, Swanley.—Mr. George Cooper, F.C.O. (Professor of the Organ), to the City of London College, Moorfields, E.C.—Mr. C. E. Juleff, Organist and Choir Director to St. Michael and All Angels', Exeter.—Mr. Edward P. Oxley, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Silas's Church, Handsworth, Birmingham.—Mr. F. A. Clarke, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Highworth, Wilts.—Mr. J. H. Hill, Organist and Choirmaster to the newly consecrated Church of St. James's, Moss Side, Manchester.—Mr. James Newman, Organist and Choirmaster to Brantree Parish Church, Essex.—Mr. G. A. Gosling, Organist and Choirmaster to Hadley Parish Church.—Mr. George F. Bruce, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Wallington, Surrey.—Mr. W. Berridge Hicks, Organist and Choirmaster to St. John de Sepulchre, Norwich.—Mr. G. F. LONDON MUSICAL AGENCY.

Established 1887 as a medium of communication between Concert Givers and Artists and to facilitate business between them, both in London and the Provinces.

CONDUCTED BY

Mr. HORATIO TUDDENHAM, Principal of the English College of Music, 304, REGENT STREET, OXFORD CIRCUS, W.

THE LONDON MUSICAL AGENCY is prepared to provide Artists for Oratorios, Cantatas, Symphonies, Mixed Concerts, Ballads, Part-Songs, Glees, Morning and Evening Concerts, Garden Parties, At Homes, Dinners, Tours arranged, &c. Mr. Tuddenham being personally acquainted with most of the leading Vocalists and Orchestral Players will guarantee perfect satisfaction to all projectors of Concerts favouring him with their requirements.

THE LONDON MUSICAL AGENCY can supply Choir Boys (solo or otherwise) who are thoroughly well trained in Church Choir work, and are able to undertake their duties at once. Classes are held in this branch once a week.

THE LONDON MUSICAL AGENCY has no other branch office, neither is it in connection with any other Musical Agency. All communications by letter, telegram, or otherwise, should be made to Mr. Tuddenham,

304, REGENT STREET, OXFORD CIRCUS, W.

THE LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
54, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.

GOLD and SILVER MEDALS will be awarded at the July Examination. Open to all, without restriction to age. Examinations in Pianoforte, Singing, and Theory will also take place throughout the kingdom. Certificates granted. Particulars may be obtained of the Secretary.

Dedicated, by permission, to the College of Organists.

YORK EDITION OF CLASSICS

SELECTED, EDITED, AND FINGERED

BY

W. R. WRIGHT, Mus. Bac., OXON.

FROM BACH, BEETHOVEN, CLERMONTI, CHOPIN, DUSSEK, HAYDN, HANDEL, KUHLAU, MOZART, PARADISI, STEIBELT, &c.

The above, in numbers, will be ready about the end of June, and are intended principally for Schools, Colleges, and Academies. All the pieces are most judiciously chosen—not too long nor too difficult; every note is fingered, and, with few exceptions, all the shakes and turns written out in full. The Editor (who has had a very large experience in teaching during the last twenty years) and the Publishers feel sure this work (which will be beautifully printed on good paper) will supply a long-felt want.

Lists of contents gratis and postage free.

RUTH

A HARVEST PASTORAL

WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodius music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Ruth" is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"Ruth" has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

PERFORMED IN THE TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM,
ON TWELVE OCCASIONS.

Vocal Score, paper cover, 2s.; ditto, paper boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 4s.
The Choruses (only) in Vocal Score, for Musical Societies, paper cover, 1s.

THE PSALMS

BIBLE VERSION

POINTED FOR CHANTING

BY THE

REV. DR. TROUTBECK.

CLOTH, ONE SHILLING.

The principles on which the pointing has been done are mainly those of the Cathedral Psalter, of which Dr. Troutbeck was Co-Editor, a Psalter which has now successfully endured the test of long experience. The book is not, of course, divided into daily portions like the Prayer Book Psalter, as it is intended for the use of those Christian bodies in which the Psalms are not sung throughout a monthly course, but it can easily be so divided by those who use it.

Explanation of the Organ Stops

WITH HINTS FOR EFFECTIVE COMBINATIONS

BY

CARL LOCHER,

ORGANIST AT BERNE.

Translated by AGNES SCHAUENBURG.

"The papers contained in this comprehensive work are of importance to all who have to do with the 'king of instruments.' Mr. Carl Locher has succeeded in compressing into a small space a very large amount of useful and interesting information. . . . The entire work is written with care and musicianly spirit, and will prove a welcome addition to the organist's library as well as the student's class books."—Morning Post.

"This is an exceedingly useful little work."—Tablet.
"Written with thoroughness and good expository skill. . . . The work will be read with profit by practising organists."—Scotsman.

OFFICE FOR THE HOLY COMMUNION

(INCLUDING BENEDICTUS AND AGNUS DEI)

FOR PAROCHIAL AND GENERAL USE

EDITED BY

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price One Shilling each.

Church-music which is modern in form, interesting to a choir, and devotional in effect, whilst also of easy execution and of moderate compass for the voices, is certainly much needed in these days when choral societies are almost universal. This want is specially felt with regard to music for the Office of Holy Communion, and it is hoped that these services will be found well within the capabilities of an ordinary choir, yet not wanting in an effort to give due expression to the solemnity of the words.

PROSPECTUS.

Some years have passed since Mr. Joseph Bennett began, in THE MUSICAL TIMES, a series of biographical notices which are still far from ended. The original purpose was a limited one—namely, to throw light upon the personality of famous musicians by means of extracts selected and arranged from their letters and other writings. Hence the series had for first title "The Great Composers, sketched by themselves."

Consequent upon the remarkable favour with which the notices were received, it was determined to extend their scope, and, while making prominent the Masters' own testimony, to deal with each subject in a complete biographical form, as far as allowed by the limits necessarily imposed. The words "sketched by themselves" were therefore dropped from the title.

It was further resolved to make additions in the case of the composers dealt with under the original idea, and to issue the notices separately as "Primers of Musical Biography."

The intention of "Novello's Primers of Musical Biography" is to convey, as clearly as the limits of an elementary work will allow, a just idea of each composer's personality, and to record the principal events of his life. Knowledge of what a man is helps the understanding of what he does. These little books may serve, therefore, as a first step towards acquaintance with the genius and compositions of the masters to whom they are devoted.

For the copious extracts made from letters, &c., throughout the series, no apology is offered. They are the best material upon which to base an estimate of character.

MASON & HAMLIN AMERICAN ORGANS.

THE CELEBRATED "LISZT" MODEL,

SUPPLIED TO THE

EMPRESS EUGENIE,

FOR USE IN THE MEMORIAL CHURCH AT FARNBOROUGH.

COMPASS, FIVE OCTAVES, C TO C—FIFTEEN STOPS.

BASS—Contra Basso, 16 ft.; Viola, 4 ft.; Eolian Harp, 2 ft.; English Horn, 8 ft.; Viola Dolce, 4 ft.; Sub-Bass, 16 ft.
TREBLE—Corno, 16 ft.; Piccolo, 4 ft.; Melodia, 8 ft.; Seraphone, 8 ft.; Voix Céleste, 8 ft. THROUGHOUT—Full Organ (Knee Stop); Vox Humana; Forte (E. H. and Mel.); Octave Coupler (up); Knee Swell; Forte (Vio. and Pic.).

Having four sets of Reeds of three Octaves, three sets of two Octaves each, and one set of one Octave.

This Organ differs materially in its construction from all other Organs, being on a larger scale, employing larger and different reeds, tubes, tube-boards, and other parts, by which not only the quality of its tone is greatly improved, but its power is very largely increased. The first Organ of this class was manufactured expressly for Liszt; and, properly played, will surprise any musician who hears it—indeed, there are very few, even at the present day, who suppose it possible to produce a tone of such capacity and excellence from reeds.

The Case is in the Eastlake style, with folding fall-board, carved antes, lamp stands, and the front and sides panelled. (Used at all the principal London and Provincial Concerts.)

The dimensions are—Length, 4 ft. 10 in.; depth, 2 ft. 3 in.; Height, 3 ft. 5 in.; Weight, 293 lbs. (in Packing Case, 518 lbs.).

ESTABLISHED 1804.

"I have inspected the Upright Pianofortes of Messrs. CHALLEN & SON, and have much pleasure in giving my unqualified approval of them.

"I consider that, for purity of tone, touch, and good workmanship, they will favourably compete with Upright Pianos made by any other English firm, and superior to most of those of foreign manufacture. Their cheapness should also bring them within the reach of everyone.

NEXT FELLOWSHIP EXAMINATION, JULY 21 and 22.

Syllabus of requirements and further information may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. H. Lewis, Staines, Middlesex.

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of Ten Pounds with the Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of Five Pounds, for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS in not less than four nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two treble voices. The character of the composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative part writing; not a mere part-song or harmonised melody.

The following conditions must be complied with—viz.:

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs;
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended Tempo be clearly indicated; and
4. That the words be written out in full on a fly leaf at the beginning.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1888, each composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark.

The award of the judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in December, 1888.

"GEMS OF THE OPERAS" CONCERT COMPANY. MR. JOSEF CANTOR, at the close of another season, begs leave to draw attention to the phenomenal success achieved by this organisation, which has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. In such musical centres as Leeds, Manchester, Huddersfield, Bradford, Halifax, Preston, Bolton, Dewsbury, Blackburn, Oldham, and at Mr. Spark's well-known Worcester Subscription Concerts, the reception accorded to this unique and interesting programme has proved gratifying in the highest degree, whilst the Press have unanimously pronounced these Concerts to be amongst the most successful and artistic of those at present before the public. The opinions of such important provincial journals as the Manchester Guardian, Leeds Mercury, Yorkshire Post, Manchester Examiner, Preston Herald, Bradford Daily Telegraph, Liverpool Mercury, &c., embolden this Concert Company in the belief that, should they be able to extend their operations over a wider area, a yet more emphatic series of successes would assuredly follow.

The répertoire embraces Selections from thirty different Operas, including "Tannhäuser," "Meistersinger," "Nadeshda," "Esmeralda," "La Gioconda," "Irene," "Carmen," "Oberon," "Talismano," "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Martha," "Lily of Killarney," &c., &c. The personnel comprises from twenty to twenty-five Artists, all of whom are thoroughly competent Soloists. Selections are also introduced from the lighter compositions of Balfe, Wallace, Clay, Offenbach, Suppé, Cellier, Audran, and the Gilbert-Sullivan series.

Mr. Cantor is now booking dates for the ensuing Season, and will be pleased to forward full particulars, specimen programmes, &c., on application.

LONDON MUSICAL AGENCY.

Established as a medium of communication between Concert Givers and Artists, and to facilitate business between them, in London, the Provinces, and America.

CONDUCTED BY

MR. HORATIO TUDDENHAM, Principal of the English College of Music,

304, REGENT STREET, OXFORD CIRCUS, W.

THE LONDON MUSICAL AGENCY is prepared to provide Artists for Oratorios, Cantatas, Symphonies, Mixed Concerts, Ballads, Part-Songs, Glee, Morning and Evening Concerts, Garden Parties, At Homes, Dinners, Tours arranged, &c. Mr. Tuddenham being personally acquainted with most of the leading Vocalists and Orchestral Players will guarantee perfect satisfaction to all projectors of Concerts favouring him with their requirements.

THE LONDON MUSICAL AGENCY can supply Choir Boys (solo or otherwise) who are thoroughly well trained in Church Choir work, and are able to undertake their duties at once. Classes are held in this branch once a week.

THE LONDON MUSICAL AGENCY has no branch office, neither is it in connection with any other Musical Agency. All communications by letter, telegram, or otherwise should be made to Mr. Tuddenham,

LONDON AND PROVINCIAL MUSICAL AGENCY,

447, WEST STRAND (opposite Charing Cross Station).

Principal, W. SEXTON, Vicar-Choral, Westminster Abbey.

MR. SEXTON desires to inform his friends that he has REMOVED his Offices to the above address, the situation of which is in a more central position of London. He will henceforth have entire responsibility of all Musical Arrangements entrusted to his care, having no connection with any other Agency. For the past twelve years Mr. Sexton has gained experience as a Musical Agent, Choirmaster, and Conductor of large Choral Societies with Full Orchestras. Thus, being in direct personal communication with all classes of Musical Artists, he is consequently able to select both Vocalists and Instrumentalists at a very moderate charge.

MR. SEXTON arranges CONCERTS of every description: Glee Parties; Miscellaneous, Ballad, Operatic, and Smoking Concerts; Music for Banquets; Garden Parties; Masonic Business. Tours arranged.

MR. SEXTON has an experienced BAND for Oratorios, Operas, Balls, and Dances; and he provides principal Vocalists for Oratorios, and experienced Leaders in Chorus. Oratorios and Cantatas conducted. Choirs trained.

MR. SEXTON provides CHOIRBOYS and CHOIRMEN for Church and Chapel Choirs, as Soloists, Assistants at Church Services and Festivals, or for permanent Appointments.

MR. SEXTON arranges a good CONCERT for Five Guineas in London on the shortest notice (twenty items). This is a special cheap Concert, and gives great satisfaction.

MR. SEXTON has a BOYS' VIOLIN CLASS every Saturday at 11 a.m., and a CHOIRISTERS' BOYS' REHEARSAL at 12.30. Business of every description in the Musical Profession receives immediate attention. Send stamped envelope for Prospectus. Address telegrams and letters to

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

PRESIDENT—THE REV. SIR F. A. GORE OUSELEY, BART.

The Musical Association was founded in 1874 for the investigation and discussion of subjects connected with the art, science, and history of Music. It is similar in its organisation to the various learned societies. The members consist of practical and theoretical musicians (professional or amateur), as well as those whose researches have been directed to the science of acoustics, the history of the art, the construction of instruments, or other kindred subjects. The meetings are held at 27, Harley Street, W., on the first Monday in each month from November to June inclusive, when papers are read and a discussion follows. At the close of each session a report is sent to the members giving a transcript of the papers and discussions.

A prospectus of the Association will be sent on application to the Assistant Secretary.

THE "LOBGESANG."

A COMPARISON OF THE ORIGINAL AND REVISED SCORES.

IN the volume of this journal for the year 1883 may be found a comparison of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" as it was performed at the Birmingham Festival of 1846 and the same work as finally published. It is now proposed to treat the "Hymn of Praise" in like manner, using for the purpose, besides Breitkopf and Härtel's full score, a MS. copy of the original version, once the property of Mr. J. Alfred Novello, and now in the possession of Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co. Nothing can be more certain than that the task entered upon here will—quite apart from the manner in which it is done—receive the interested attention of musicians and amateurs. The popularity of the "Lobgesang," the fascination which surrounds everything Mendelssohnian, and the gratification of satisfying curiosity about the formative processes of great works, all give assurance that the labour of comparison will not be in vain. Let us add that the result must inevitably strengthen the popular impression of Mendelssohn's extreme conscientiousness, and the intensity of his conviction that nothing had been done while anything remained to do.

As a preliminary it may be well to recall certain historical facts connected with the "Lobgesang." The work was composed for a commemoration of the invention of printing held in Leipzig, June 24, 25, 1840—an occasion for which, also, the "Festgesang" came into being. Shortly after its production the Birmingham Festival Committee, ever on the look-out for attractive novelties, secured the "Lobgesang" for their solemnity of the same year, together with the personal direction of the composer. The English performance duly took place (September 23), and, at the close of the Festival, Mendelssohn returned to Leipzig, to resume his labours as conductor of the Gewandhaus concerts. There he was quickly called upon (by the King of Saxony) to give his new work its second German hearing. Regarding this occasion, Mendelssohn wrote to his mother, under date October 27, 1840:—

"All the music was given with such precision that it was a real pleasure to listen to it. The King had previously sent for me between the parts, which obliged me to pass through a double row of ladies (you know the arrangement of our concert room) in order to reach the place where the King and his Court were seated. He conversed with me for some time in the most good-natured and friendly manner, and spoke very judiciously about music. The 'Hymn of Praise' was given in the second part, and at the conclusion, just as I had quitted my music-desk, I suddenly heard people around me saying, 'The King is coming to him this time!' and he was, in fact, passing through the rows of ladies, and came up to my desk (you may imagine the universal delight this caused) and spoke to me in so animated a manner, and with such cordiality and warmth, that I did indeed feel it to be a great pleasure and honour. He mentioned the particular passages that had pleased him most, and, after thanking all the singers, he took his departure, while the whole orchestra, and the whole audience, made the very best bows and curtseys they could accomplish."

The homage of crowds and the praise of kings did not blind Mendelssohn to what he regarded as the faults of his work. Hence we find him writing

(November 18, 1840) to Carl Klingemann in terms as thus:—

"My 'Hymn of Praise' is to be performed at the end of this month for the benefit of old inviolated musicians. I am determined, however, that it shall not be produced in the imperfect form in which, owing to my illness, it was given in Birmingham, so that makes me work hard. Four new pieces are to be added, and I have also much improved the three sets of symphonies,* which are now in the hands of the copyist. As an introduction to the chorus, 'The night is departing,' I have found words in the Bible as fine as can possibly be imagined, and admirably adapted for music."

The "Lobgesang," with all its additions and changes, and as we now have it, was first performed in Leipzig, December 3, 1840. "The alterations," writes Sir George Grove (Article, "Mendelssohn," Dictionary of Music and Musicians), "were so serious and so universal as to compel the sacrifice of the whole of the plates engraved for the performance at Birmingham. Now, however, they were final, and the work was published by Breitkopf and Härtel early in the following year. Before leaving this we may say that the scene of the Watchman was suggested to him during a sleepless night, in which the words 'Will the night soon pass?' incessantly recurred to his mind. Next morning he told Mr. Schleinitz that he had got a new idea for his 'Lobgesang.'"

We now enter upon the comparison.

No. 1.—Sinfonia. First movement. (a) Con moto maestoso.

This introduction is scored for the same instruments in both versions, and the first four bars of the original agree exactly with those of the revised. But the second phrase for trombones presents an important difference, as may be seen below:—

No. 1.
Original.

Revised.

The alteration, as a matter of course, extended to the orchestral echo. Apart from the removal of the string parts in bars 13 and 14 (where they doubled those of the wind), the only other change in the Maestoso occurs at the cadence, where the two versions stand thus—

No. 2.
Original.

Revised—from bar three of above.

(b) Allegro. In the original this is directed to be played Allegro vivace, and so written as that each bar

* This is Lady Wallace's translation. Of course the three symphonic movements are meant.

contains but half of the matter found in each bar of the present "diminished" form. The principal subject corresponds in both versions, but its orchestration is fuller in the second than in the first, and also more mobile. These changes are not important enough for illustration. Coming to the expansion of the theme, alterations at once appear. Compare the following—

The passages immediately subsequent agree as to the string parts, but, as to the wind, the revised version presents an immense improvement upon its predecessor, which is remarkable for leanness and sluggishness. The changes, however, are not mere thickening and motion, since the additions carry on the thematic idea, much as shown in bar 2 of the last extract from the revised. On arriving at the lead into the Tutti following the exposition of the first subject, we find that Mendelssohn has abridged it somewhat—

Moreover, the wood-wind, formerly accompanying this passage, in an elementary fashion, with sustained chords, is now given the theme, which the instruments briskly pass from one to another, horns helping to fill in the harmonies. The noble Tutti, with its contrapuntal working of the subject, remains much as when first written. Not so the statement of the second subject, though the melody is altered only in a single note. The difference lies in orchestration and accompaniment. As every amateur knows, the theme in the revised is given to clarinets, bassoons, violas, and finally oboes, lightly attended by flutes, horns, and violoncelli. In the original only the clarinets, bassoons, and finally the oboes have the melody, to which the violoncelli and violas supply, during part of its course, an arpeggio of crotchet triplets—

The note changed in the melody is, of course, the third, which now drops to F from A flat. Further changes are met with in the continuation. The first version gives a repeat of the theme to the flutes, violas (divisi), and celli (divisi), the violins taking up the arpeggio; the second gives it to the flutes and violins, with a new ending and no arpeggio. We find differences of detail also in the passage leading to the peroration of the technical first part.

Passing on to the "working-out" section, attention is at once arrested by a valuable after-thought. The reader, on turning to his printed score (Breitkopf and Härtel, p. 23), will find that, after discussing the theme of the Introduction, the composer takes up the leading subject of the present movement, in E flat major—

This is wholly an interpolation. The original "working-out" does not once refer to the theme just shown, and it may be that Mendelssohn, engrossed by the stately trombone subject of the Introduction, made the omission without intending it. If so, we can understand why, on revising the movement, he effected the change just pointed out. When the discussion of the trombone motive is resumed, we find another great improvement. The character of this improvement can be seen by comparing the two versions at the point where the subject of the Introduction is resumed—

Continuing in this spirit, Mendelssohn severely revised the beautiful lead into the second subject of the Allegro—

The second subject is given in the original to flutes, violas, and violoncelli; in the revised the flutes and violins have it. Passing on to the lead into the recapitulation, we find a very great change. If the reader will turn to pages 32-3 of the present score he will find that this lead is constructed upon the first subject of the Allegro, has a dominant pedal, and continues for thirteen bars. The lead in the original took the same theme, but in how different a fashion let the subjoined quotation show—

Truly, Mendelssohn was the champion reviser—a fact of which we shall be more and more convinced as the comparison proceeds.

THE MATERIAL OF MUSIC.

VII.

THE origin and growth of all the forms in music involves in their examination a sort of resumé of a large section of the whole history of the tonal art. It is reasonable to assume that so soon as men become sensible of the emotions excited in their minds by the operation of the passions, that they should strive to give utterance in language to the impressions created. Thus poetry had its beginning. In casting their thoughts in the mould of speech different to that which was necessary for the transaction of the ordinary affairs of life, they were probably impelled to give emphasis to certain words which but expressed their feelings. Out of this emphasis came accent, out of accent came rhythm, and out of rhythm song.

The two great divisions of music are sound and measure, commonly called tune and time; or, as in the present instance it is convenient to call them, melody and rhythm.

Musicians define melody as a succession of sounds without harmonies, arranged according to certain accepted or implied rules, for the purpose of producing effects more or less agreeable. A melody is said to be complete when it realises a satisfactory result upon the ear, or when it succeeds in illustrating a peculiar sentiment. It is often founded upon relative harmonies, but it is completely distinguished from harmony, in being independent of other accompanying notes to make it perfect. A tune or air is called a melody, but in some instances melodies are only parts of tunes or airs, inasmuch as they are wanting in rhythm necessary to the complete fulfilment of the requirements of tune. Other successions of notes may be produced which, having no regard to pitch, cannot be classed in the category of melody. A true melody, then, requires not only an agreeable succession of notes, but an observance of the relations of pitch and rhythm.

By pitch the ambitus, circuit or compass of the melody, is regulated with regard to the voice or instrument which is called upon to perform it.

By means of rhythm melody is arranged in forms of ever-pleasing variety, and by the judicious employment of the rules of rhythm the musician is enabled so far to husband his ideas that they can be presented in many forms all more or less agreeable or suitable. The rules of rhythm in music were doubtless suggested

In the recapitulation changes were made corresponding to those in the first statement, while the Coda of the movement was entirely re-written. The original, in which there is no return to the Maestoso con moto, stands as below—by the accents of speech, which the old Greek writers called melos (μέλος). This, according to Plato, included "speech, music, and rhythm."

The term accent is variously applied. There is an accent of prose, another of poetry. There is the accent of speech, or cadence of voice by which the inhabitants of certain districts may be distinguished from others. There is also a personal accent on the peculiarity of tone by which one person's voice differentiates from another. In poetry quantity is sometimes called accent, according to the arsis or thesis of the syllables. One set of grammarians define prosody as the art which teaches the proper quantity and accent of syllables and words, and the measures of verses, that quantity in prosody means the length of syllables in pronunciation. Others affirm that quantity or length of syllables is of little import in poetry, that it is, in fact, regulated by the number and accent of the words.

Fortunately for musicians there is but one meaning to the word accent, that is to say, emphasis, and it has but one place in music and there has been devised a ready means of distinguishing it. It is regulated by the position of the bar which divides the melody into pulse measures. The true place of musical accent is therefore easily recognised and can be understood without trouble.

The accent of rhetoric and the accent of music are two totally distinct things. They have apparently a few points in common, but these arise from a certain lack of copiousness in technical nomenclature. Thus the arsis and thesis of music and speech are only similar inasmuch as they refer to the presence or absence of emphasis. They form important factors in the sum of each, but they have greater value in elocution than in music, where their names are only employed out of concession to the prejudices of tradition. The melody of music and the melos of speech are in no way convertible terms, and because the application of like words to different effects has given rise to much confusion and misunderstanding, it is necessary to explain what is understood by the expression in the hope that some better, more conclusive, and distinctive method may be formulated.

Melody may be the spontaneous utterance of a musical thought unguided by science. It does not follow, however, that the musician whom we call a melodist is necessarily deficient in scientific attainments. The fact that musical thoughts in the shape of melody do occur to untutored people has often led many well meaning musicians to hold melody in little esteem and to seek for scientific development in music by means which shall keep that quality as much out of sight as possible. The absence of melody, or "tuneiness," as it is called, is considered by many modern critics as an indication of advanced thought in composition. This is one of the errors men make in their efforts to hasten progress. Good melody always has been, and always will be, while the world lasts, the chief quality of good music in every style from the simplest to the most elaborate. Melody has the greatest power and influence over men's minds beyond all other characters and qualities in music. The musician who invents a successful tune—that is to say, a tune which shall find its way into the sympathies and affections of the people—is a greater musician for the people than he who can only attain his best utterances through the voices of instruments in orchestral harmony. A "melodist," contemptuous as his qualifications may be in the eyes of those who are nothing if not what they call scientific, exercises a greater influence over a larger number of his fellow creatures than one whose genius requires a special preparation on the part of those who would understand it rightly. It will perhaps be accounted heresy to say that the air of the song "Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon" has worked more moral good than all the complicated fugues ever constructed. It must be understood that no depreciation of the more exalted forms of musical science is intended in these remarks, those forms are most valuable in their place, but their place is not that which is occupied in art by melody.

Moreover, they are designed to prepare the way for the statement that true melody is really one of the most scientific forms of musical composition. It is a fact that melody can be made by the observance of certain rules. Such a manufacture may fulfil all conditions required, but it is doubtful whether it will ever reach farther than the ears of the listener. The musician who possesses the gift of melody is master of a very precious quality, which should be cherished in every possible way. The majority may compose, the minority only can invent. When the majority of composers who are deficient in melody wish to gain consideration for their productions, it is easy to over-ride the minority by depreciating in others the qualities they do not themselves possess.

There is no melody without music, and there is no living, stimulating, and satisfying music without melody.

It is assumed that melody originated from the manner in which poems were recited. There is reason to believe that certain inflections of the voice were made when the verses were repeated, and by degrees these repetitions became formulated into regular song, often the assistance of musical instruments was called in to regulate the inflections. The arbitrary tones of pipes and strings would compel the reciters to accommodate their voices to the fixed sounds produced, and the subtle accents of the voice would be compacted into definite musical tones. The nature of the instruments would be infused into the character of the melodies, and the mechanical process of producing the sounds would suggest the addition of rhythmical forms, which would impart a variety to the same melodies and help to the further extension of the means at disposal.

The similarity of character in the melodies cherished among different nations is due to the preference for peculiar instruments, and the scales they are capable of producing. The family likeness of certain tunes found among people remote from each other may be accounted for by the fact that the scales employed or favoured by such folk are based upon the same succession of tones or semitones, and that the capabilities of their musical instruments are more or less alike.

Some of the ancient melodies which have been preserved by civilised people are almost identical with those in common use among tribes in a state of barbarism, thereby implying the hypothesis of a common origin.

Now, while melody may be formed or invented by people of primitive or unsophisticated ideas, such formations rarely exhibit more than rudimentary thoughts, for the reason that little or no attempt is made to combine the powers of rhythm with tune. Consequently, barbaric melody is scarcely exalted out of the form of recitative. Recitative has no rhythm. So soon as rhythm is combined with recitative it becomes melodious, and composers recognise this peculiarity by distinguishing such departures by the name of "Arioso."

There need be no rhythm in recitative, but there can be no musical melody without rhythm. The composer of melody must call in the aid of rhythm to help him to make out his ideas.

By means of rhythm, and the alteration of accent or stress, the same melody may be made to assume numberless varieties of character. Not only will this effect be created out of the notes, but the changes of accent and rhythm will suggest the corresponding pendant themes required to fulfil the natural laws of both rhythm and accent. Thus if a melody is begun upon the weak pulses of a measure, it will be required to be completed by the remaining pulses necessary to fill the bar. Again, if the rhythm of the opening portion of the theme be slow, the rules regulating such matters demand that it should be followed by quick beats, and vice versa.

These characteristics may be observed in all music of well ordered form, whether it is new or old. The student who desires to strengthen his own conceptions, and to bring to his aid all the advantages to be derived from the experience of his predecessors, will find the greatest possible help from a personal examination of the works of musicians, great and small. The "day of small things" must not be despised by him who wishes to understand the light of brighter and greater times.

The most primitive, and, perhaps, simplest form of musical composition was the song; the simplest form of song, the ballad. The ballad derives its name from a Greek word which means to dance. The original ballads were set to tunes which could be danced to. For the purposes of the dance it was necessary that the rhythm should be distinct and well marked. Each variation of the rhythm would suggest the invention of new steps or movements. Each of these movements or dances was distinguished by a special name. Out of these dances the higher musical forms were evolved. These were at first available for the purposes of the dance, but afterwards were so expanded that little more than a suggestion of the dance and the title were retained.

The rhythmical music accompanying the dance has had a large influence over the character of musical art. The symphony is held to be the highest form of musical composition. This is an expansion of the sonata, which is a development of the suite, and was nothing more nor less than a combination of contrasted dance measures and rhythms.

These have been contributed by all European countries, and more than one of the old dances retain either their original names or some indication in their titles of the people from whom they were derived.

The Allemande is, as its name implies, of German origin. It is a modification of a national dance brought to a semi-classical condition by the French in the time of Louis XIV., in allusion to the newly acquired provinces of Alsatz and Lothringen. The measure was slow and dignified, and Scarlatti, Corelli, Handel, Bach, and other composers incorporated the dance in their suites, sonatas, or lessons. The dance, under the name of "Almain," was known in England nearly a century before the French made it fashionable. One of the characters in George Chapman's play "Alphonsus, Emperor of Germany," speaking of dancing, says:—

We Germans have no changes in our dances,
An Almain, and an Up-spring—that is all.

Shakespeare speaks of the "swaggering up-spring reels" in his "Hamlet," and Ben Jonson also mentions the dance, and as he speaks of an "Almain leap" it would imply that the "Almain" and the "Up-spring" were one and the same.

Allemandes or Allemaines were published as pieces for the harpsichord or spinet in France in 1649, and in England in 1662. Lulli also wrote Allemandes for instrumental performance, and not for the purposes of the dance, in 1670. Henri Dumont's compositions with the same title could not possibly have been fitted with terpsichorean steps in any way calculated to please an ordinary assembly.

The Coranto, Corrente, or Courant is of French origin. Its name is taken from the verb courir, to run. It was a quick dance, as its name implies, and is supposed to be allied to the country dance, which was invented in England. The term does not mean that it was a dance taken from the country folk, but because the dancers were placed opposite, "contrary" to each other. The Coranto was sometimes called in England counter-traverse, before it was distinguished by the name of country dance. The French also called it contre-danse.

The Bourrée and the Gavotte had their origin in France. The first in Auvergne, the second in the town of Gap, in the High Alps. The Bourrée is of a lively measure; the Gavotte included jumping and the clatter of sabots. The rhythm of each is distinct and well marked. The latter dance has disappeared except as a stage dance. In the olden time it was performed to the accompaniment of the bagpipe or musette. For this reason many of the old composers always added a musette or bagpipe tune to their Gavottes.

The Sarabande was of Spanish origin. In its original form it was a wild, suggestive, and not over proper dance, accompanied by the click of castanets and occasional wild yells from the spectators. The name was given afterwards to a stately, dignified measure, almost identical with the Pavan, as may be gathered from the fact that the slow melody "Lascia ch'io pianga," by Handel, was a Sarabande introduced into his opera "Almira." It was set to words and employed in "Rinaldo," the opera which provoked the disappointed sneers of Addison. The Minuet is French, and was so called because of the short steps required in dancing. The Pavan was named from its peacock-like movements; the Gagliardo, the Passacaglio, the Passamezzo, the Passeped were dances with variety of rhythms. The old composers introduced these dance-forms into their suites, but they seem to have had less influence upon subsequent developments than other dances, such as the Jig, the Rigadoon, and the Hornpipe. The Passacaglio, from having been a melody usually played by instruments of deep tone and having contrapuntal flourishes superimposed in an impromptu fashion, was made the nominal description of an ingenious piece of musical workmanship. The Passacaglio of Bach forms a familiar example of this sort of treatment, for it is a series of clever melodies and harmonies constructed upon a ground bass—that is to say, a bass which never varies, and is constantly repeated until the ingenuity of the composer is either exhausted or the character of the bass admits of no further elaboration.

The Rigadoon was, at the beginning of the eighteenth century, the most popular form of dance in existence. Book after book and sheet after sheet, "of the newest rigadoons danced at Court," were issued from the press until a new fashion arose, and other dances were favoured to the exclusion of the once popular Rigadoon. It was said to be the invention of Mr. Isaac, a dancing master, who lived at the end of the seventeenth and the beginning of the eighteenth centuries.

The two dances which have retained their popularity for a longer period than any others are the Hornpipe and the Jig. The reason for this may possibly be found in the fact that they have always been popular with the people, who are more tenacious of old ways and customs and things than the higher classes, who are swayed to and fro by every wind of fashion and caprice, especially in the matter of amusement and recreation. Both these dances derive their names from the instruments upon which they were wont to be played in ancient times.

At the beginning of the present century the Hornpipe assumed the character now accepted as typical. One of the first of the melodies in the new form was that called Lord Howe's Hornpipe. Miss Cattley's Hornpipe, composed about 1780, is in duple measure; but the stress given to certain notes shows the lingering fondness for the rhythm of the old triple measure Hornpipes. Following Lord Howe's came the College Hornpipe, "Jack's the lad," and other tunes which were originally associated with the words of songs. The dance took its name from the hornpipe, a primitive form of shawm, now represented by the Corno Inglese. Several of the old composers, Handel among the number, introduced the Hornpipe as a theme of contrast to other movements. The Jig is a measure also of English origin, and it takes its name from the fiddle, that being the instrument ordinarily employed for the dance.

The term Jig has become associated in the popular mind with Ireland, because it is supposed to be the national dance of that country. It has been adopted by the nation as a term for a dance which has existed from time immemorial, but which received other names. There is no tune called a Jig to be found in Irish music before the end of the seventeenth century, and the earliest were probably imported. It may surprise many when it is said that Scotch Jigs are of higher antiquity than Irish. Shakespeare, in "Much ado about nothing," compares "wooing, wedding, and repenting" with three dances—namely, "a Scotch Jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace." The Cinque-pace was "a slow heavy-heeled dance," the Measure was graceful and dignified, similar to the minuet; the Scotch Jig was of a very lively character, like its English namesake. The temptation which this rhythm offers to the composer to soar into the realms of fancy was taken at an early period in the history of the development of harpsichord music. It was made the vehicle for display and it was lengthened and elaborated so that it became the origin of the last movement of the Sonata.

Before the Sonata was perfected, however, it had to pass through many stages. These were of slow growth. Taking the year 1760 as the period when the sonata form was finally established in its recognised shape, the model was not completed until it had passed through a series of tentative experiments extending over a period of more than two hundred years. Reasoning from analogy, it may possibly take a like period before the graces of form receive new outlines. The sonata was the direct outcome of the suite. The suite was the expansion of the idea suggested in their works by the older composers who sought to obtain the charm of effect by the employment of dance measures of different character in contrasted sequence.

Various composers of different nationalities all contributed to this end, and for the sake of novelty borrowed the rhythms of the dances popular among the people of the rural districts, with whom singing and dancing were the chief, if not the only, means of recreation.

There is a curious confirmation of the popular origin of the suite in the absence of the Minuet in the earlier examples. The Minuet was a Court dance, and presumably unfitted for association with measures peculiar to the country. When the dance forms became merged into more elaborate treatment, in which the rhythms were preserved to a certain extent but the phrases were unsuited for dancing, the Minuet was introduced into the sonata as a memory of its origin, but in no way representing by succession the dance measures out of which it had been evolved. The Minuet was superseded by the Scherzo, first so named by Bach, but claimed for Beethoven. The word Scherzo means a joke. The older writers—Birde, Gibbons, Bull, and others of their period—kept the form of the Almaines, Gagliards, Pavans, and Dumps in their virginal music, but made variations for the right or left hands as their fancy directed them. In later time John Jenkins composed "fantasys" or fancies of greater extent than those which had been before proposed by Orlando Gibbons, whose fantasias were the first attempts at the development of the forms of instrumental music.

The Italian composers were among the first who suggested the Canzona, that form of song which was one of the predecessors of the Sonata. It consisted of two portions. The second was in a different key, the major, if the original proposition was in the minor and the reverse. The first portion was repeated and so ended the song. Sometimes the second portion was formed out of the subject of the first, and thus the earliest attempts to fix the sonata form were made out of the style of the song, with the rhythms and titles of the dance.

One other effort to consolidate the form by the reduction of the number of the movements must be noticed. The sonatas of Corelli and Purcell had a number of short movements, enlivened by changes of tempo. These changes were made the subject of distinct treatment by late composers until the middle of the eighteenth century. Bach preserved the old number of six movements in some of his suites, as in the "Clavier-Uebung," where the student will find not only this large number of pieces, but he will notice that each suite exhibits its several pieces all in the same key.

The "Sechs leichte Clavier-Sonaten" of Philipp Emanuel Bach are in correct form, and those of the French composer Schobert—which were once so popular that they were on every harpsichord in the three kingdoms—are also in strict form. The honour, therefore, of having fixed the form may fairly be divided between these two musicians.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

SCHUMANN confessed to great carelessness in money matters. He once wrote: "This contempt and waste of money is a wretched characteristic of mine. You would not believe how careless I am—I often actually throw money away. I am always reproaching myself and making good resolutions, but the next minute I have forgotten them, and am tipping somebody with eight groschen. My being away from home, and travelling about, have much to do with it; but much of the blame attaches to myself and my accursed carelessness. And I fear it will never get any better." With such a disposition Schumann was often desperately "hard up" and worried into utter gloom. His letters from Heidelberg contain many references to impecuniosity and the harassing attentions of creditors, especially of a tailor, who was our spendthrift's embodied Nemesis. The same state of things soon prevailed in Leipzig. This very clearly appears in a letter written to his mother, November, 1830:—

"For the last fortnight I have not had a farthing; I owe Wieck twenty thalers, and Lühe thirty, and really live like a dog. You say I had better borrow 100 thalers of somebody, but who is to lend them to me? I hardly know a soul, and those I do know have got as little as I have. . . I should like to have my hair cut, as it is a yard long, but haven't a copper to do it with. For the last fortnight I have been obliged to wear only white neckties, as my black one is simply in rags, and the white ones will be at an end to-morrow, so I shall have to be old-fashioned and do without. I ought to send several letters to Heidelberg, but have no money for the postage. What will the world think of me? My piano is horribly out of tune, but I cannot send for the tuner, &c., &c. I have not even enough to buy a pistol to shoot myself. That is the state I am in. So do not take it amiss if, in a despairing moment, I run right away, either to America or to my uncle at Twer, where cholera morbus is just now raging, which might soon put an end to the life and career of my wretched self."

Again he writes (December 10) in anticipation of spending Christmas at home: "It has just dawned upon me that I possess neither dress-coat nor trousers for the approaching balls and festivities at Zwickau. Will you send me by return of post six yards of fine black cloth, so that all may be ready before the holidays. . . . A shower of ducats would be universally acceptable. Otherwise I am pretty well, although I have filled my cup to the brim by falling violently in love the day before yesterday. The gods grant that my ideal may have a fortune of fifty thousand." The correspondence between Schumann and his mother in December, 1830, was brisk, and on the 12th we find him writing again, making reference, passim, to the composition of a lyric drama: "Next, you are right about the big opera; I am on fire and revel all day long in sweet fairy-like sounds. The opera is called 'Hamlet'; the thought of glory and immortality gives me strength and imagination, and official life sneaks away in affright. The journey to Zwickau would rather interrupt my flow of ideas, but still it is possible that I may come. In no case can I promise for certain. I shall come before you like a vision; you must not be frightened. I am dreadfully pale, ugly, and seedy looking, and all the Zwickau ladies will be surprised and critical."

The letters written during this same month of December contains passages of even more interest than examples of the writer's impecuniosity. According to his own statement, Schumann was then "in an uncommonly bright, airy, and divine mood," and "revelling in a pure atmosphere of deep home feeling." This may account for an unusual expansion and elation of mind to be seen clearly behind the printed page. At one moment we discover that the young man was no stranger to thoughts of future fame. He addressed his "dearest Mother" thus: "Unless the great, great time, in which we are now living, when even old men glow like youths, quite shrouds the Olympus of Art, I am not at all alarmed lest I should appear in an Encyclopædia, or among 'Portraits of Celebrities,' or that we should see our entire correspondence in print. Heavens! How shall I fare then as a son, and you as a mother?" Again he writes: "No words can give us such sweet comforting peace as music." Also we find a resolution to take Moscheles "for an example in everything." This was probably because he remembered how, on one occasion, "every one respectfully made way for him, and how modestly he walked through the crowd." Schumann felt that he was equal to the modesty, at least in outward demeanour. "I sometimes lack self-confidence before the world, although, on the other hand, I can be very proud inwardly. God grant that I may but continue to be very strong, modest, steadfast, sober." At this time he has an idea of going to Weimar and putting himself under Hummel. Upon this a pretty castle in the air is built. The dearest mother should remove to Weimar also, and the two would live together in happiness complete. "By Jove, but that idea about Weimar is glorious! But how, for heaven's sake, can you say that anything of that sort would be too great an expense? There's time enough, and I simply must finish my course with Wieck. The other day I suggested to him, in a light and airy kind of way, my plan about Hummel; but he took it ill, and asked me whether I mistrusted him, or what; and whether, as a matter of fact, he was not quite the best master. He saw that I was startled by such unnecessary anger, but we are now quite friendly again, and he treats me most affectionately, like his own child. You can hardly have a notion of his fire, his judgment, his view of art, and yet, when he speaks in his own or Clara's interest, he is as rude as a bear." The shock of Wieck's wrath seems to have burst the Weimar bubble. At any rate, we hear little more of it.

After the Christmas of 1830, Schumann neglected correspondence with his mother till February 18, 1831. Money troubles again! He was in debt at the restaurant for dinners, and the unreasonable proprietor wanted to be paid. Nay, he was most rude in pressing for the money (sixty or seventy thalers). Wieck also, and a fellow student, were creditors by money lent, and the poor young man had got into a "fix": "By Jove, it is quite true when I tell you that I have only eaten meat about twice, and lived upon plain potatoes, and, although I am very fond of them, still it is getting too much of a good thing." He had raised money at his "Uncle's." "I have also had to pawn your watch, and one book after the other finds its way to the second-hand bookseller's. You may imagine how much I am losing. The day before yesterday, I went in despair to Wieck and borrowed a thaler, and, Heavens! did I not pitch into the roast veal, that's all! Poverty must be a horrible thing, because it absolutely excludes one from human society." On the strength of all this, Schumann begged his mother for one or two hundred thalers till he came of age.

In 1831 the cholera swept through Europe, and the fell disease, being then little known and apparently irresistible, made men's hearts fail them for fear. It appears to have had this effect upon our sensitive young Leipzig student. He writes (August 8): "Though I am quite well and jolly, still I dread the cholera, not so much the disease as its consequences. To be on the safe side I have made my will, but kept it as funny as possible, as I cannot imagine at all that I shall ever die. . . . If the cholera comes any nearer perhaps I shall come to Zwickau or Schneeberg." From a letter to his brothers (September 5) we learn that Schumann actually contemplated flying from the plague into Italy. There is no doubt of the fact that he was in a desperate state of fright. Indeed, he confesses to a "painful, almost childish, dread" of the disease, and fears "it will make no bones of dragging me out of my beautiful every-day life in its talons." He goes on: "The thought of dying now, after living for twenty years in the world without doing anything but spend money, makes me quite wild. . . . I am in a fearful state of restlessness and indecision, and almost wish to send a bullet through my head." In the same letter he begs approval of his proposed "strategic movement to the rear" before the advancing foe, and cries out frantically. We can almost hear him: "Of course the journey would unsettle me very much, but it would not send me out of this world into the next. Tell me what to do. I cannot stay here. If I were to die here, or at Zwickau (I really can see myself lying dead) I should certainly exclaim (if I could) 'Oh, you donkey! Why did you not go to Italy?'" Finally, our alarmed young friend wants an answer by return, "for it (the cholera) may be here in four days."

In a little while he became calmer, and informed his mother that all his dread had disappeared together with the wish to travel. This was, perhaps, because his mind occupied itself with another and engrossing idea—artistic paternity. He announced to the home circle at Zwickau that he would shortly be the father of a fine healthy child—his first published work: "It will make its appearance at Messrs. Probst's, and heaven grant that you may understand it, with its first tones of youth and vivid life. If you only knew what joys those are—an author's first joys. Being engaged is nothing to it. The whole atmosphere of my heart is charged with hopes and presentiments, and I feel as proud to be wedded for the first time to the great world, which is the home of the artist to its uttermost limits, as the Doge of Venice was when he wedded the sea. Isn't it a comforting and beautiful thought that this first dewdrop of mine, dissolving in the illimitable ether, may possibly sink gently into some aching heart and help to assuage its grief and heal its wound?"

In the next letter (September 27, 1831) we find Schumann's talent for criticism stirring within him. The epistle is addressed to Pink, then editor of the Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung, offering a notice of Chopin's Op. 2—first of a series of articles to bear the general title of "Caeciliana," though the author expressly states that it is a title for which he does not much care. He describes his essay as "merely an endeavour to reproduce the first impression made by a genial composition of recent date." Our young critic is humble and adds, "As I have great reason to be modest, I beg of you to omit whatever you feel inclined, or what may be distasteful to you." It is pleasant to know that the paper was accepted and published.

The correspondence soon returns to Schumann's Op. 1 (Variations on the name Abegg), which he sends to his relatives, begging them to receive his child lovingly, and adding in playful mood, "If to some of you it is unintelligible, because you do not understand its speech, even those will have the advantage of imagining it lovelier than it really is." To the publisher, Heckel, at Mannheim, he forwarded twelve copies "on sale or return": "In asking you to distribute them among the Mannheim friends of music, allow me to assure you that in doing so you would be sure of the deepest gratitude of the young composer, who is braving public opinion for the first time." The anxious author goes on to say that he would gladly allow Heckel fifty per cent. commission on the transaction. Results pleasant to Schumann followed the issue of his bantling. He tells his mother: "I really seem to be more sought after since my Variations were published, and my room has been full of singers, amateurs, artists, painters, and others. You must put down the enthusiastic style of my letter to that."

From about the period we have now reached (1832) the name of Clara Wieck begins to appear in the letters. The young pianist had entered upon a public career with great éclat, and Schumann naturally rejoices in the success of his master's daughter. Writing to Wieck he says: "First of all, let me congratulate you on Clara's success. It is certainly true that if the world forgets very soon, it does not overlook anything extraordinary, though I often compare it to a herd of cattle which is startled for a moment by the lightning and then calmly goes on feeding. Such flashes were Schubert, Paganini, and Chopin, and now Clara will be another." Not a bad attempt at prophecy, but there is no indication that the prophet saw far enough into the future to behold himself the husband of the girl about whom he indulged his foresight. He wrote to her, however, a very charming letter, full of playful fancy, and in spirit just such as a brother might address to a younger sister. Referring to himself as "your old moonstruck maker of charades," he goes on: "Dear Clara, I often think of you, not like a brother of his sister, or merely in friendship, but rather like a pilgrim thinking of a distant shrine. During your absence I have been in Arabia, collecting fairy tales for your benefit—namely, six new stories of men and their doubles, a hundred and one charades, eight amusing riddles, and then some awfully fine brigand stories and the tale of the white spirit. Oh! how it makes my flesh creep!" One sees at a glance on what terms these two had been in Wieck's house, as members, so to speak, of the same family. Then he gives the absent sister some particulars of her brothers, and continues: "Have you been composing at all? And, if so, what? I sometimes hear music in my dreams; that is when you are composing. With Dorn I have got as far as three-part Fugue, and have besides finished a Sonata in B minor and a set of Papillons . . . How do the apples taste in Frankfurt? And how are you getting on with the high F in Chopin's Variations? My paper is at an end. Everything is at an end, except friendship, in which I shall ever remain Fräulein C. W.'s warmest admirer.—R. S."

In his letters written at this time Schumann makes several references to the Papillons, notably when thanking the musical critic Rellstab for a kindly notice of his Abegg Variations. He there ascribes their origin to Jean Paul's "Flegeljahr," the concluding scenes of which they are intended to illustrate. "I often turned to the last page, for the end seemed like a fresh beginning, and almost unconsciously I found myself at the piano; and thus one Papillon after another came into existence. I trust you may consider their origin an apology for the whole composition, as the separate numbers often require explaining." In another letter we read: "While I was writing the Papillons I felt clearly that a certain independence was striving to assert itself, which is, however, mostly condemned by the critics. Now the Papillons are fluttering about in the beautiful spring air, and spring itself is at our doors looking at me like a child with sky-blue eyes." The quotation just made is from a communication to his mother, in which he talks a good deal about his innermost feeling on questions of life and art, and speaks of discovering that "only sensible, honest, and persevering hard work has any effect on one's progress and preserves the charm of art, especially in music, which is at first so exciting and very soon palls." A passage in the same letter touches upon a more prosaic but, as far as Schumann was concerned, not less momentous subject. It would seem that the young man's fondness for drink had attracted some attention. "You yourself asked Rasch whether I really drank so much; I believe he took my part, but I should not have done so, for there is some truth in it. But as drinking Bavarian beer was rather a prosaic habit than a poetical passion, it was not so easy to shake it off, for it is infinitely easier to cure one's self of a passion than of an old habit. But if you ask me whether I have cured myself I firmly answer 'Yes.'"

Schumann's career was now fully laid out before him. His compositions were well received, he had a consciousness of capacity, and the entire vista of life, as far as he could see down it, appeared bright and happy. We note the effect of this in his letters. Thus he writes: "In the afternoon I had been alone to Zweyhaundorf, mind and heart full of happiness, and bright prospects for the future. With what different thoughts I visited the same place three years ago. How undecided I was in my manner of thinking! How much firmer and more settled I seem to be this year; my imagination and consciousness beautifully balanced, and my thoughts and feelings quite inseparable from one another." Again we read: "I cannot tell you how bravely I am making way, and how happily and industriously I work at my one object in life. The world lies so bright before me, and outward circumstances have such a beneficial influence upon me that I have to pray my guardian angel not to make me too ambitious, and to preserve in me the child-like simplicity of a true artist." At this time Schumann was very industrious indeed. He worked hard at theoretical studies, poring over his Marpurg and analysing Bach's "Well-tempered Clavier." "I have taken the fugues one by one, and dissected them down to their minutest parts. The advantage of this is great and seems to have a strengthening moral effect upon one's whole system, for Bach was a thorough man all over; there is nothing sickly or stunted about him, and his works seem written for eternity. Now I must learn to read scores and study instrumentation." Meanwhile he toiled so hard at the pianoforte that one hand became injured. This alarmed him, and he wrote to his mother: "I really got quite uneasy about my hand, but carefully avoided consulting a surgeon because I was so afraid he would say the damage was irretrievable. I had begun to make all sorts of plans for the future, had almost resolved to study theology (not jurisprudence), and peopled an imaginary parsonage with real folk—yourself and others. At last I went to Professor Kühl, and asked him to tell me, on his honour, whether my hand would get well. After shaking his head a good deal, he said, 'Yes; but not for some time—not for about six months.' When I once heard the word, a weight was taken off my heart, and I readily promised to do all he required. It was quite enough—namely, to take Thierbäder (to bathe the part in the blood of a fresh-killed ox), to bathe my hand in warm brandy-and-water all day long, to put on a herb poultice at night, and to play the piano as little as possible. The remedies are not exactly pleasant ones, and I very much fear that some of the nature of the ox may pass into mine; but, on the whole, they appear to be very beneficial. And I feel so much strength and spirit in every limb that I really am inclined to give some one a good thrashing. Pardon this nonsense, dear mother." There is a subsequent reference to his malady. "As to my hand, the doctor keeps consoling me, but I am quite resigned, and believe it to be incurable. At Zwickau I shall take up the violoncello again (for which one only wants the left hand), as it will be always very useful in orchestral compositions. Then the right hand will be resting, and for me rest is the best doctor."

We pass over some letters to the publishers and critics, with a single halt at a very interesting passage in a communication to Rellstab. It has reference to Schumann's pianoforte arrangement of the Paganini pieces: "Please give my work your kind consideration, and grant me your powerful help. Though I am only pleading for an adopted child, yet I have reared it with care and pleasure, and not without some selfish interest either, for it is to be a test for the critics of what I can do in theory. Seriously, the work was delightful, but not altogether easy, as the harmonies are often vague and ambiguous (even incorrect), and many of the caprices are by no means perfect in form and symmetry. When one first plays through this sort of movement for a single instrument, one feels as if one were in a stuffy room; but afterwards, when one has grasped the fine spiritual threads running through it, everything grows light and beautiful, and the strange genius is made clear. But I would rather write six of my own than again arrange three of anybody else's."

MUSIC TEACHING.

By FR. NIECKS.

WE hear a great deal about the refining influence of music. But to this art, and indeed to all arts, may be applied what Rousseau said of the sciences: "People always think they have described what the sciences do, when they have in reality only described what the sciences ought to do." If instead of repeating high-sounding phrases we examine plain facts, we come to see that those who doubt and deny the noble capability claimed for music, need not be at a loss for strong arguments in support of their way of thinking. Indeed, looking around us, and scanning the cultivators of the art, of how many of them can we say that they cultivate it with profit? Must we not rather admit that an overwhelming majority waste time, money, energy, and their own and other people's patience lamentably? When I spoke of profitableness, I thought of what affects the mind and heart, and through them the whole moral and intellectual man. But even if we take a lower view of music, and regard it as no more than the art of harmonic proportions, nay, if we take the lowest possible view of it, and regard it merely as a pastime that pleasantly tickles our ears and agreeably exercises our lungs, fingers, hands, &c., even then our inquiry will have a result which cannot but appear to us in the highest degree unsatisfactory. To be sure, there are now-a-days a goodly—though not a relatively large—number of performers who have attained a considerable amount of executive skill, but they are for the most part machines rather than agents. We may divide them into two classes—one very numerous, the other much less so. Those belonging to the former are a kind of musical boxes with a limited number of tunes, apt to deteriorate by the wear and tear of time; those belonging to the latter, on the other hand, may be likened to the ingenious contrivance known by the name of pianista, the repertory of which is limited only by the supply of the requisite perforated cardboard. But, after all, genuine music—which is something very different from the usual strumming, scraping, piping, and dittyng—is a powerful means of culture. It is a language that expresses things which no other language can express, at least not with the same force and subtlety; a language that solves the problem of how one soul speaks to another soul. The power of speaking and understanding this language, however, is not so much an acquirement from without as a growth from within. Unfortunately, in most cases, so-called musical accomplishments do not deserve even the name of acquirements, being rather precarious loans than absolute purchases. Where then have we to lay the blame for the present unsatisfactory cultivation of music? There can be only one answer: On our teaching. And our teaching is so miserable a failure, because it is not musical education, or, to use the more impressive Saxon equivalent, because it is not a "drawing out" of the innate musical faculties. Ignorant or heedless of their proper function, teachers only too often content themselves with doing for their pupils what the setters of barrels do for barrel-organs. I said intentionally that the blame for the present unsatisfactory cultivation of music is to be laid on our teaching, not our teachers. For, although no doubt one part of the blame rests on the teachers, another part, perhaps the greater, rests on the pupils and the parents of the pupils. The most common and most mischievous sins of parents are these three: (1) They hand over their children for elementary lessons to incompetent teachers; (2) they are unwilling to provide them with, or neglect to insist on their submitting to, regular, continuous instruction; (3) they demand immediate results of a kind that can only be obtained by mechanical drill and precludes real education. Hence the daily comedies or tragedies—as we may feel inclined to view them—in a teacher's life, those applications for finishing lessons by people who, after years of occupation with music, have not yet learned the elements. By earnest advice and stout opposition to parents and pupils, teachers could no doubt lessen the existing evils; but fear of loss of custom, on the one hand, and the unreasonableness and weaknesses of parents, and the indifference, idleness, and impatience of pupils, on the other hand, warn us not to expect too much in this direction. In fact, I think only one remedy can bring about a radical change, and that remedy is the proper cultivation of music in schools, from primary schools upwards.

As sounds are the material of music, the training of the ear ought to be the foundation of a musical education. Unfortunately, this sine qua non of a good musical education is generally conspicuous only by its absence. The usual way of teachers is to let the ear take care of itself. In short, most musical ears are self-taught. And even when some attention is paid to the ear, mechanical execution is allowed to get ahead of intelligent perception. The proper course for teachers to take seems to me to be this: Never to proceed to a new task till the instrumentalist is able to sing as well as to play, and the vocalist is able to perform without the help of an instrument or another voice, the preceding task. Little profit can be derived from monkey-like or parrot-like imitation. Imitation to be profitable must be intelligent—that is to say, the pupil must know what he is imitating. From the very first he has to be made acquainted with the relations of tones to each other as regards pitch and time. Both kinds of relation are important, and require long and careful study, separate as well as simultaneous; but the former is the more difficult, and shall here alone be noticed. In introducing the pupil to the multitude of melodic progressions and harmonic combinations care has to be taken that the advance is gradual. The historical development offers the best model for the course the teacher ought to choose. Begin with the phase of the savage: eschew harmony altogether, and confine the melody to a few notes. The compass of the melody is then gradually extended, and by and by a second part is added, followed in time by a third and a fourth. But the pupil must be always able to realise mentally the harmony as well as the melody. And in order to acquire this power, he has to be made to analyse the chords and to perform them melodically. The ear may be trained like any other organ. There are few men who, if they had received a proper training, would not be able to realise the meaning of what they are reading as easily in reading notes as in reading letters. The importance of the ability of recognising sounds and realising notes is again becoming more and more understood to be an essential item of musicianship, as is shown by the introduction of ear-tests at examinations and of musical dictation at music schools. The Paris Conservatoire included in 1871 dictée musicale in its curriculum. Since then several German music schools have followed the French example. In 1882 two instruction books on this subject were published: a big one in French—A. Lavignac's "Cours complet de dictée musicale"; and a little one in German—H. Götze's "Musikalische Schreibübungen." Dr. Hugo Riemann numbers among the warm advocates of the Musik-diktat. But let us not deceive ourselves. The attention paid to the ear in a later stage of the musical studies cannot make up, except in the case of the specially gifted few, for the neglect in the earlier stages.

A very important question presents itself at the very threshold of teaching. Are we to begin with the teaching of things or of symbols, or with the teaching of both conjointly? And if we do not prefer, as some do, to do at first without symbols, which is the notation most advantageous, most encouraging to the beginner—the old notation, the tonic sol-fa, the improved fixed Do, or the Galin-Paris-Chevé figure notation? Or would it be advisable to use the old notation simultaneously with one of the others, so that they might mutually cover their deficiencies and combine their strengths? This is too intricate a question to be dealt with in a few remarks thrown out in passing; I therefore leave it undiscussed on the present occasion. But teachers should avoid the fault censured by John Hullah when he says:—"We often find the earlier chapters of rudimentary treatises, whether on music or on any other subject, occupied, not with attempts to convey ideas of the things to be first studied, but with explanations of the symbols which represent them, many of these latter, perhaps, not being called into requisition till an advanced period in the study, when they have to be learned again."

As the conveying of the ideas of things (here first and foremost those of pitch and time) is in the early stages of teaching a slow process, which, as I have already said, should not be outrun by monkey-like or parrot-like performances, there will be always time enough for laying the foundation of a sound technique by a regular course of finger gymnastics in the case of players, and of lung, throat, and mouth gymnastics in the case of singers. One hour's methodical drill advances a pianist more than a whole year's unmethodical sprawling. By long doing a thing ill, you will never learn to do it right. This method, though it may seem a roundabout way, is in reality a short cut. The impatient desire for immediate results has done in the past, is doing at present, and will do in the future, incalculable harm. Mr. Lennox Browne, in his "Medical Hints on the Production and Management of the Voice," remarks:—"Beginners, especially amateurs, are so impatient for immediate results, that scarcely any time can be given to the study of the most essential preliminaries of the vocal art. Singers are therefore so unacquainted with the mechanism of the voice that not even one in a hundred can explain how he produces a note. There are still fewer who are able to manage their breath properly."

No one can expect to become a fluent and correct reader unless he has studied music intelligently, that is, unless he knows at a glance the melodic, harmonic, and rhythmical structure of what he is playing or singing, both as a whole and in its details—the intervals of the melodic progressions, the constituents of the chords, the changes of key, and the divisions and groupings of bars, periods, and movements. When the advanced student of music who has remained ignorant of these matters is suddenly confronted by them en masse, the sight terrifies him so that he thinks discretion the better part of valour, takes to his heels, and resolves to live the rest of his days in blissful ignorance. Now, if he had been made acquainted with them little by little, he would have mastered these awe-inspiring difficulties with ease. In fact, the only safe way is to advance step by step, always making sure of each new footing—haste and leaps unfailingly land the tyro in the slough of despond that lies on either side of the narrow path. If the learner has once made sure of the first footing, he is pretty safe, provided he proceeds warily. Now, this first footing consists, on the one hand, of the conception of the monotone and its nearest deflections, the major and minor second (tone and semitone), and, on the other hand, of the conception of isochronism, and the resolution of isochronous beats of one kind into quicker ones that stand to them in the relation of two to one and of three to one. Out of these simple elements all the rest can be evolved up to the most complicated melodic, harmonic, and rhythmical structures. I must here quote part of an approving letter of Liszt's to Mathis Lussy, written after an examination of that author's "Réforme dans l'enseignement du piano: Exercices de piano dans tous les tons majeurs et mineurs à composer et à écrire par l'élève." After alluding to the fundamental principle of this method, which consists "dans la continuelle mise en activité des facultés intellectuelles de l'élève," to the legions of automates fastidieux, who are nevertheless inferior in skill and charm to the pianos mécaniques, he proceeds thus: "In order to obtain less deceptive results, it will be necessary resolutely to appeal to the intelligence of the pupils and masters to conform to your method, by associating with the practice of the mechanism the noblest faculties of the human soul, and to provide for their legitimate predominance. Consequently the simultaneous teaching of the notions of harmony and of the constituent elements of music with that of the processes of fingering becomes indispensable. The manipulative study (étude manouvrière) of the keyboard cannot be profitable to the good practice of the art unless there are joined to it other ingredients. From the beginning of the pupil's studies he ought to be familiarised with the tonalities, transposition, rhythm, &c., and for this end one cannot too strongly advise that the intelligence should at once be put in action, and the pen in the hand. Just as one teaches children to read and write words, it is necessary to teach to read and write chords to all those who devote themselves to music, lest one should see them become discouraged and stupefied in a more or less laborious way."

But the intelligence of the pupil has not only to be stimulated and developed with regard to the externalities of the art, but also and more especially with regard to its soul. For it is in this soul that the power of music as a means of culture lies. The pupil cannot be taught too soon that music is not a mere tinkling and jingling. He ought to be made aware betimes of the meaning—i.e., the emotional or other contents—of what he plays or hears others play. For that reason songs that do justice to the words, and genuinely characteristic pieces like Schumann's "Scenes of Childhood" and "Album for the Young," have an immense educational value. I will not say that soulless music—of which there is a good deal—and music with little soul in it—of which there is even more—should never be given to pupils, for that kind of stuff may be useful for technical purposes; but what I will say is that they ought always to be told what is good and what is not. In fact, conversations about the music to be practised, or the music that has been practised, cannot but be profitable in many respects, and may further the artistic education of the pupil more than the practice itself. A much neglected matter is of enormous importance—namely, the choice of music. Of course, bad, vulgar, and lewd music has to be avoided like poison; but no less music which is over the head of the pupil. Most of Beethoven's works, for instance, are not milk for babes. The practising of compositions intellectually too difficult does as much harm as the practising of compositions technically too difficult. There is another aspect of the art which the teacher must reveal to the pupil—the æsthetical. And, perhaps, no other aspect stands so much in need of revelation. However, the æsthetical—the beauty of line and form—too, is a manifestation of the soul.

In conclusion, I venture to remind my fellow-teachers of two proverbs, and to ask them to remember these wise saws in the pursuit of their profession. The first comes to us from the Romans: Festina lente. The second comes to us from the Italians: Chi va piano va sano.

SOME KINDS OF MUSIC.

II.—DEAD MUSIC.

I HAVE before me the musical library of a Young Person of Quality who flourished some sixty years ago. It is contained in half-a-dozen solid volumes, bound in a style calculated to defy the attacks of centuries. Gorgeous mummies are these books, their glossy leather and untarnished gilding betraying no trace of the poor withered remains which they cover. Let us take down one at random and glance over its contents, in order to compare them with those of the well-known dropsical portfolio of our present-day young ladies. Here is a volume emblazoned "Vocal Music: Miss W—, 1831." Now, let us see. Ah! this was a young person of neat and methodical habits: I wish I had a pupil like her! She has positively paged the volume right through, and indexed the contents alphabetically on the title page. How quite too charming! Well, what have we got? Miss, or her teacher, must have been a person of fairly eclectic taste, for there is a refreshing amount of variety to be seen here. The first composition is, as I find on ending my examination, by far the worst in the book. It is one of those gruesome amateur efforts we all know so well (the talented lady, "who never had a lesson in her life," don't you know), entitled "The Treasures of the Deep; a Ballad, by Mrs. Hemans. The Music by Her Sister." Well, reverence for the name of the poetess shall stay our strictures; we will merely remark that this composition starts off and makes a close regularly every four bars in the key of E flat from beginning to end, and it is to be hoped that the publisher is not expiating his crimes too terribly in the next world. After this come a fair number of songs by Handel, some of which are now almost forgotten, being beyond the range of ordinary amateurs. Then we have a few trios or glees, such as "Oh stay, sweet Fair!" by Dr. Stevenson; "O happy Fair," by Shield; and "Lady as the lily fair," by M. P. King. The latter is a deliciously naïve composition, words and music being well matched—

(a 3.) Lady as the lily fair,
Ah, whither dost thou stray;
O'er the mountains bleak and bare,
A wild and dreary way?

(Bass solo.) See, see the clouds the storm foretell
A lonely man am I.
Lady, shelter in this cell
Until the tempest fly.

(Treble solo.) Hermit, spare thy friendly care;
O let me wander on;
Mountains' bleak and stormy air
I never more will shun.

(2nd Treble solo.) Alas, my bosom knows no rest,
And faded is my form,
For HENRY thou thy EMMA's breast
Hast steered against the storm.

(a 3.) Weeping wand'rer, dost thou then
Bewail thy HENRY'S flight?
Dost thou seek him once again?
Would he glad thy sight?

(Bass solo.) He thought thee faithless: these sad tears
Prove he wronged thy heart.
Beneath this cowl thy love appears!
We never more will part.

This dramatic denouement being too sudden for the composer he has repeated the first two verses to finish, modifying the second and seventh lines to "Ah, now no longer stray!" and "And never, never fly," which makes all right. Weep, my friends—weep for the ancient school of librettists! Composers do not get such opportunities now-a-days.

Yet really now, jesting apart, have we improved at all in these matters? Which is preferable—the cut-and-dried conventionality of those times or the affected sentimentality of to-day? Take an average specimen by a nobody of just a century ago—

The day that saw thy beauty rise
Shall sacred be for ever blest!
The world in awe of Delia's eyes
Shall grow as gentle as her breast

By all our vows and hid desires
O may our loves be still the same
I glory in the pleasing fires
If Delia share a mutual flame!

Despite its bombast this has a certain air of culture and refinement, compared with which the following specimen, by a really distinguished librettist of the present day, seems intolerable in its hysterical vulgarity—

O Love, my life's fulfilment, O Love, my life's one dream!
O Love, my life's one centre, the ocean to the stream!
O like a weary pilgrim that nears the holy shrine
I close my eyes, you are too dear, the angels call you mine!
You are too dear, 'tis all a dream, I've dreamed of yore,
I love yon heartfelt soul full with eternity before.

Help!—quick! . . . Hope you'll be better soon. Meanwhile let us return to our volume where we next find some scenas by Dr. Boyce and Dr. Callcott, with accompaniments written in a kind of compressed orchestral score, the unhappy accompanist being left to arrange it as best he can. These are but a string of stock passages whether for voice or instruments, and it is hard to think that any human being can ever have really enjoyed them. But turn for a moment from one of these and think what Haydn and Mozart did with precisely the same means and materials. Then you may realise what genius is. At the best the scena, from the stubborn rigidity of its form, was an inartistic affair, condemning every expression of the emotions to wear the same shape; but only in the hands of second-rate musicians is its full absurdity apparent.

Next comes a humorous trio entitled "Juvenile Amusement," which from the paper and printing (it has no title-page or composer's name) I take to date from about 1790. The words run thus:—

"Old women, old women, will ye go a shearing?"
"Speak a little louder, sir, we're very hard of hearing."
"Old women, old women, shall I come and kiss ye?"
"Yes, yes, if you please, and may good fortune bless ye!"

This appears to have been much sung, judging by the thumbd state of the copy. Then we have some genuine English ballads, one or two of great beauty, such as "Just like love," by John Davy; "Poor little Bess," by James Hook; "The Tear," by J. Ambrose; besides a few of later date by Moore, Carnaby, &c. I need hardly say that a large part of this collection must have come down to Miss from her mother, many canzonets and ballads being engraved in a style which denies them a later date than 1780. Two really beautiful sets of canzonets for two voices (voice parts and figured bass only), by Jackson, of Exeter, are here, and curiously enough some duets for male voices, both bacchanalian and anacreontic—"From night till morn I take my glass," "Could a man be secure," "Come, my bonny love!" a pretty little duet by "Mr. Biggs" (whoever he may be), and "'The Butterfly,' a much admired Duett, as sung by Mr. Nield and Mr. Sale, Jun., at Dr. Smith's Concert at Richmond, Surrey . . . by J. B. Sale," the composer's name being poked away in a corner to make room for a mass of information concerning his patrons. We have also some dead and gone sacred music in the shape of several hymns and anthems by one John Watlen, who describes himself on his pieces as "formerly of the Royal Navy." This gentleman advertises "'The Glorious Battle of Trafalgar,' 'The Surrender of Toulon,' 'My Mother,' and all his other Compositions," adding beneath (evidently a pushing fellow) "N.B.—Mr. Watlen teaches Singing in the fashionable stile. The Piano Forte and Violin in his new method." Turning the page we find from a long advertisement that he was a pianoforte maker, "Patentee (is this true?) of the Oblique Piano Forte so much admired for its elegance and convenience, for its full and melodious Tone, and for its remaining long in tune." His "Plain Piano Forte with additional keys, double action, inside desk, Pillar Legs, Pedal, &c," costs thirty guineas, "Piano Forte with three Drawers, thirty-six guineas." This was probably one of those little "squares" such as Amelia Sedley played upon. The sight of one in a lodging house parlour, where alone they may yet be encountered, calls up instantly the memory of Miss Schwartz and her two pieces, and three songs, "Floory du Taggy," "Blue-eyed Mary," and "That little thing from the 'Cabinet.'" Dust and ashes, dust and ashes!

Through what a musty graveyard are we wandering! Composers, players, instruments, and music are alike dead and unmourned for. There is to me something very melancholy in such a promenade through a musical cemetery. One cannot help an uneasy feeling that fate has not been altogether just in her dealings—that the Darwinian theory does not altogether hold in the survival of art-works. Of course no one disputes the right of the musical giants to life beyond the grave; but when we see societies formed for the purpose of embalming—not reviving—every trifling scrap that helped boil the pot of a Handel or Bach, one can but heave a sigh for the second and third-rate composers who have produced one or two small gems amongst their tons of rubbish, and who are doomed to utter oblivion. How would it do to start a society—it might be called the Musical Resurrection Society—to print a collection of music consisting of the best works, and only the best, of every composer who has ever written—not less than one composition, and not more than nine, by every man who has ever put pen to paper (I fix the maximum at nine in order to include all the Symphonies of Beethoven)? Really there is something in the idea. I think I shall publish a set of Preludes and Fugues—something really popular—and apply the profits to founding this scheme. But no; it is of no use. Music once consigned to the tomb is never to be resuscitated, even in the case of the greatest names. If any one discovered to-morrow the score of Beethoven's contemplated tenth Symphony, or Schubert's phantom Gastein Symphony, do you believe that either of these would take a permanent place in the répertoire of the concert-room? I very much doubt it. A hermetically sealed jar of wine was once dug up in Pompeii, and enthusiastic antiquaries quaffed it with rapture. It was wine and it had kept, but no one could say more for it than that. Even pastrycook's sherry would have been fresher. And the moral I would draw from Miss W——'s cherished library is this: Even the collection we have so superficially glanced at shows how great is the difference in the degree of vitality possessed by music. There were songs by Handel which, after more than a century of continuous popularity, have only now faded away, others which are still as fresh as ever. There are simple ballads which we would fain believe immortal, and others, but little different, which died stillborn. Must we reluctantly conclude that all music is mortal, and that it is only a question of time how long our fairest landmarks shall resist the waves of time? Alas, yes! But as in physical life death is only change of elements to another form, so in music the material which we have buried with Palestrina will again return to us—with whom?

But what is this! O hea-vens! can it be that I have writ-ten a mus-i-cal ar-ti-cle without

Since I have so shockingly violated the rules of my art let me conclude by offering in compensation a slight tribute to the fashion of the day in the form of a

BALLADE OF DEAD MUSIC.

The burden of old volumes, bound in calf,
 Gilt extra, indexed, owner's name prefaced.
 How o'er their motley contents now we laugh,
 Scorning the previous generation's taste
 That on such rubbish love and care could waste!
 Will our descendants like contempt display
 Towards collections we deemed sweet and chaste
 Shall even Beethoven endure for aye?

The burden of sheet-music, dropped in half
 With age and thrown away, as not worth paste.
 Out on the show-piece with its lithograph,
 Through which, with energy and zeal misplaced,
 The fingers of John Field or Dreychock raced!
 Will Chopin's—Schumann's music, too, decay,
 Which Bülow thumped, o'er which Pachmann grimaced?
 Shall even Beethoven endure for aye?

The burden of composers, Hiller, Raff,
 Dussek, Spohr, Hummel, Steibelt the straight-laced.
 Of these and more we read the epitaph
 By time already more than half effaced.
 Yet turn not from them with too heedless haste;
 Awhile, at least, oblivion's tide delay!
 Respect their names, whom fame has once embraced!
 Shall even Beethoven endure for aye?

Envoi.

Bach, often now by Offenbach thou'rt chased;
 Without a Handel we the organ play;
 Haydn is hidden from our eyes abased—
 Shall even Beethoven endure for aye?

SOME time ago we commented upon the improvement which has gradually taken place in the quality of the works submitted to the public since the decline of the so-called "Benefit Concerts," when showy pianoforte pieces and vocal scraps culled from the popular operas of the day filled a programme of such length as to weary all save those whose sole object was to hear a choice specimen of the powers of as many artists as could be gathered together in one morning. For residents in the country, whose stay in the metropolis during the season was of course limited, such an entertainment was an inestimable boon; but as the taste advanced music of a higher class became necessary to attract cultivated audiences, and upon the ruins of these "monster" performances arose what are termed "Recitals," both vocal and instrumental, where chiefly classical compositions are presented. A new danger, however, now became imminent, for instead of listening to a number of eminent performers, we are called upon to listen only to one; and considering that, very recently, a great pianist has given us six of Beethoven's Sonatas at one sitting, and a great violinist has played both Mendelssohn's and Beethoven's Concertos at the same concert, there can be little doubt that the programmes have not been drawn up with the view of providing a selection for an artistic audience, but as a display of the exceptional gifts of a single artist. We are by no means likely to have four of Beethoven's Symphonies performed at one concert, or Bach's Mass in B minor followed by Beethoven's Mass in D; but at the "Recitals" (which are so rapidly growing in public favour) the worship of the artist, and not the art, so narrows the critical faculty to a mere examination of the merits or demerits of the "Reciter" that the selection of the works to be played is quite a secondary consideration.

EVEN in these days of musical education considerable uncertainty seems to exist in the minds of certain good people who are officially connected with various philanthropic societies as to what a "Symphony" may be; and when this puzzling word is associated with the not altogether phonetically-spelt name "Haydn," a delightfully tantalizing enigma is produced, the solution of which is by no means aided by the introduction of the complicating word "Toy." A band of children had carefully got up Haydn's "Toy Symphony," and the announcements of their performances of this work, which have been issued by the secretaries of various societies they had consented to help, have been very amusing. We need not say that the positions of the "a" and the "y" in "Haydn" were very uncertain in the hands of local printers, and of course the musician was exchanged for the painter, and "o" or "e" introduced in his name. It is hoped, however, that the audiences brought together have not been greatly disappointed when it was promised that "Hadyn's Toy Symphony would sing" on a certain date; or when some marvellous instrument was suggested by the notice that "a band of children" would "perform on Hadyn's Toy Symphony." When it was printed "Hadyn's Toy Symphony has kindly consented to perform at the conclusion of the entertainment," surely an acrobatic display was expected. But who can tell what mysteries were anticipated by those who gathered on a certain evening to see "Hadyn's Oy Symphony executed"?

MR. EDWARD LLOYD made a great hit by his singing at the May Festival at Cincinnati. The papers speak of him in the highest terms, and express hopes that he may pay another visit to America at no distant date. It is impossible to quote all that was said in praise of his singing, but a few words from the several journals will suffice to indicate his success with our American cousins. Concerning the "Stabat Mater" of Dvorák, the Cincinnati Gazette says: "Mr. Edward Lloyd had the lion's share in the solos, almost all of which were recitatives, but these were sung in the most artistic and natural manner. It is seldom a recitative is applauded, yet this was the case with the very first one, 'Ye have assembled here to serve me.' Its fine delivery, musical emphasis, and distinct enunciation roused the audience to an unusual pitch of enthusiasm." Again—"Mr. Lloyd's singing of 'Be thou faithful,' in Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' and the curse of the Almighty in the third part of Rubinstein's 'Paradise Lost,' were two of the most perfect and uplifting pieces of vocal art that any one will ever hear in this generation." These and many other notes and notices show that our great English tenor was duly appreciated in Cincinnati, and all hope that he may be induced to repeat his visit to America, and to give other towns the opportunity of hearing one whom certain of the newspaper writers called, "the English Nightingale."

It would be absurd to expect absolute accuracy in anybody's record of musical doings. The old saw Humanum errare est applies to musical critics, reporters, and printers as much as to other people, and they may claim a certain amount of indulgence. But a line must be drawn somewhere inside of the blunders perpetrated by the writer or printer of a notice of the Handel Festival rehearsal which appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette of the 23rd ult. Although the article was short, it contained a number of glaring mistakes in matters of fact. Our contemporary first of all spoke about the Mr. Sims Reeves's fast singing, once upon a time, in "The enemy said" and "I will pursue"; that, however, might be an error of the press, but no compositor or "reader" would be likely to make the contributor say that Mr. Bridson took part in the trio of "See the conquering hero," or describe a song as a duet, and so on. Really the Pall Mall critic has done his brethren a very bad turn. So long as the mistakes made are not of an outrageous character, a gentle-hearted public will be reasonable, but such as those we have printed are apt to engender a suspicion of gross carelessness or worse, and then an irritated public is apt to tar all critics and reporters with the same brush. It is to be hoped that the contributor to the P. M. G., having done enough for distinction, will now hold his hand awhile.

Much good ink has been shed, paper spoiled, and tempers ruffled à propos of the possibility of an organised invasion of England. There are many who, like the famous Volunteer Captain, would be proud to leave the country in case of an invasion, and there are many who would defend their hearthstones to the utmost in such an event. There is need for the exercise of defensive powers now, in consequence of the recent measures taken by the police in Paris against organ-grinders. The majority of those who now make both night and day hideous will be taken to the police cell, and their instruments confiscated. A few only will be allowed to play in courts, side streets, and blind alleys. They will be licensed, and known by an official badge made of copper, engraved with a lyre and the name of the padrone. The rest having nowhere else to exercise their craft will, of course, turn their eyes and their steps towards England, where legislation is of the amiable and conciliatory type, and where the chief occupation of the police is to wear a uniform and draw their wages. The peace-loving citizen of our native land will be at the mercy of these musical guerillas and gorillas, and the law showing him little or no protection, he will have entirely to submit to this organised invasion.

THERE are curiosities of advertisement as well as of criticism relative to musical matters. A prominent place of entertainment in London in advertising extra attractions for "Handel week," as it called the week of the Handel Festival, announced special performances on the Grand Organ, with selections from "The Messiah," "Judas Maccabæus," &c.; and further states that the new tenor will sing "Comfort ye" and "And every valley" ("Messiah") at 4 o'clock; and "Sound an alarm" ("Judas Maccabæus") at 9.45, with grand organ accompaniment; followed by the name of a comic singer with his new songs, "In a very different place" and "As of old"; the Two Macs, the Pylades, Ida Heath, Lauck and Hurley, Sam Redfern, the Black Philosopher; the Flying Sisters Ongar, from the Folies Bergères, Paris, the greatest lady gymnasts on the flying trapeze ever seen in this country; Miss Lillie Western, the Olympian Quintet, Mdlle. Dallo, Prof. Cross (Phrenologist), &c.; with swimming performances, with the charming troupe of pretty young lady swimmers. The comprehensive character of such an entertainment none will question. Its miscellaneous incongruity may be taken as typical of the variety considered necessary to produce a corresponding charm among a certain class.

THE readiness with which people find a name for an appliance of whose proper name they are ignorant is shown by the following anecdote:—A violinist at an evening concert in a pit village in the North of England gave as one of his solos an imitation of the bagpipes con sordino. The solo in question created a furor amongst the delighted Geordies, and there was much difficulty in getting them to suppress their enthusiasm. When, however, silence was restored, one voice was heard to exclaim, "Eh, man! gi' us t' p'ëace agen wi' t' coomb on."

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

TIME, in its swift and, as appears to some of us, ever swifter course brought round, last month, the appointed days for another triennial Festival in commemoration of Handel, which accordingly took place on the 25th, 27th, and 29th ult., preceded by a public rehearsal on the 22nd ult. Our readers know that these mighty musical celebrations are now under the sole management of the Crystal Palace Company (at one time power and profit were shared by the old Sacred Harmonic Society), the directors of which, no doubt, find the enterprise amply remunerative. There was assuredly no sign of commercial lassitude and indifference in the manner of preparing for the solemnity just concluded. Rather did the directors and officials enter upon their work with zest and carry it through in the spirit of men who are satisfied with what they are about. This was especially the case as regards the composition of the orchestra and chorus, with which, especially in the case of the chorus, the utmost care was taken. We note these facts for more than their own sake—that is to say, for the evidence they give of confidence, in the most sensitive quarter, as to the stability of the Handel Festival. There is no doubt anywhere that the enterprise set on foot thirty years ago will continue, and go on increasing in popularity. It was thought by "croakers" in the early days that when once the novelty of an army of performers had passed away, the performances themselves would follow. But these mistaken prophets reckoned without the permanent devotion of the English public to Handel's music. There we have the mainstay of the whole concern, and while it holds good, the Crystal Palace directors can, as business men, welcome the recurring Festivals, invest time, trouble, and money in them, and await with confidence a profitable return.

Apart from the special measures referred to above, the refurbished machinery of previous Festivals served for the preliminary steps, and produced the old results. It is, however, credited with having brought together at the appointed time a larger multitude of executants than ever. But this is immaterial. Enough that, when Mr. Manns, on the rehearsal day, ascended the platform, and looked for his skilled and obedient thousands, there they were, their serried ranks filling the orchestra from top to bottom and from side to side. We cannot pretend to estimate the expenditure of varied effort which produced that consummation of measures preparatory. All we know is that it must have been enormous, even if ample allowance be made for operations made almost automatic by long experience. The executive force brought together on the 22nd numbered a little over 3,500, of whom 500 were instrumental performers, the remainder—3,016, to be precise—being divisible into 782 sopranos, 779 altos, 677 tenors, and 778 basses. Of these a large majority consisted of London amateurs; but the whole United Kingdom had representatives present, and the national character of the Festival could still be pointed out as a feature of special value and importance. Our opinion with regard to the quality of the band and chorus thus brought together will amply appear in the course of these remarks.

The number of persons who entered the Crystal Palace on the day of public rehearsal was 18,844—an increase of 1,056 upon the number of admissions on the corresponding day three years ago. This was of good augury for the success of the entire Festival. Like an initial victory in war, it put heart into everybody concerned, because it proclaimed the sympathy of the public, which, in all such matters, is the breath of life. The main question of the hour was not, however, one of more or less patronage, but whether the executants would show themselves up to the high standard by which the public had been taught to judge them. When suggesting an answer, we mean to avoid, as far as possible, the criticism which, in connection with a rehearsal, would be out of place. Some may urge that the doings on the first Friday are a rehearsal only in name. Mr. Manns would probably express a different opinion. He did not hesitate to do genuine preparatory work, unappalled by the multitude behind him, and we are not going to see the occasion in a different light. On the other hand, it is legitimate enough to indicate how far hopes were encouraged of a musical success to come. The chorus was most satisfactory, both in quality and volume of tone, and in executive proficiency. Speaking comparatively of its four sections, we may say without fear of contradiction that the basses carried off the palm. Their ensemble was simply majestic in its solidity, and no less in its assured and stately march. The tenors, if less sonorous, were equally pure in quality; while the contraltos, usually the weakest, showed ample power and a most effective timbre—sweet and even touching. On their part, the sopranos gave less satisfaction, so that one wished for a stronger infusion of the big and brilliant northern voices. But the falling off in this section was only made specially noticeable by the uncommon excellence displayed elsewhere. Moreover—as will appear in due course—it subsequently became much less apparent. The orchestra rose easily to the height of excellence everyone expected it would attain. This was specially shown in the “Dead March,” the accompaniment to the Organ Concerto in B flat (solo by Mr. Best), the “Occasional” Overture, and the Violin Sonata in A major, the solo in the work last-named being taken, as on a previous occasion, by all the violins. No better proof of efficiency could be desired than was given. The works rehearsed during the course of a long sitting, in addition to those already named, included the “Hallelujah” and “Amen” choruses from “The Messiah,” a large part of the programme to be performed on the selection day, and ten choruses from “Israel.” Besides these several solos were introduced, not so much, we assume, for the sake of a trial as in order to give the audience some variety and the chorists a rest. Madame Nordica sang “So let the lute and harp awake”; Madame Valleria gave a very beautiful rendering of “Angels ever bright and fair,” which, by the way, was not in the day's programme; Mr. Barton McGuckin essayed a formidable task in “Total eclipse” and “Deeper and deeper still,” with its customary pendant, “Waft her, angels”; Mr. Bridson and Mr. Brereton were heard to much advantage in “The Lord is a man of war,” and Madame Trebelli also appeared. Mr. Manns conducted the rehearsal with great skill and determination. There were moments when impulse seemed to carry him into quicker tempo than desirable, and once the Conductor checked himself in a very marked manner, but too much cannot be said for the admirable way in which he steered his great host through the shoals and dangerous places of the selected music.

The first day of the Festival proper was a great success. Splendid weather favoured it, and the turnstiles of the Crystal Palace registered 22,522 admissions—a figure with which the best friends of the enterprise had reason to be content. We do not, on these occasions, take much note of “distinguished” visitors; but the audience included many well-known persons, and not a few representatives of music in America and on the Continent. These we are always glad to welcome. Their experience on Sydenham Hill enlightens them by removing false impressions, and gratifies a natural sense of pride in ourselves, since the musical display is unique and, we firmly believe, not to be rivalled in any country of the world. Moreover, our visitors on such occasions have an opportunity of estimating the strength and vitality of Handel's music, and the reasons why certain of the great master's works are held in such esteem by the English, for whom he composed them. Generally speaking, the Handel cult in this country is incomprehensible to foreigners, but not, we shrewdly surmise, to those who have attended the Festivals. They have a glimmering, at least, of the reason for it. It cannot be necessary here to descant upon “The Messiah,” which is no sealed book to the readers of our journal. Let it be said, however, that each performance under the conditions of a Handel Festival amply warrants the distinction which the work enjoys in the triennial scheme. Even if the managers could discover a sister oratorio more popular they would be unable to find one more worthy. Against the destructive influences of lapsing time, and in spite of all rivalry, “The Messiah” holds its ground, and will, we believe, continue to defy opposition. There are special reasons for this not positively musical in their nature, but the main cause lies in the expressive power, pathos, and grandeur of the music. The performance given under Mr. Manns's direction was one of the finest, if not absolutely the best, ever heard in the Crystal Palace. Superb as were the choruses, with hardly an exception (if there was an exception “Let all the angels of God” may be named in connection with it), the solos, entrusted to Madame Albani, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, were in their way equally fine. It would be superfluous to go into details on such a familiar theme and with regard to effects which every reader can imagine for himself. Enough that the greater choral numbers were again given with astonishing force and impressiveness, “For unto us” and the “Hallelujah” above all. The execution of these two was the crowning achievement of the day, and made a deep impression. As for the four soloists, they were in their right places as representative of the best talent which has devoted itself to Handel's music. Madame Albani in “Come unto Him” and “I know that my Redeemer liveth,” Madame Patey in “He shall feed His flock” and “He was despised,” Mr. Lloyd in “Thou shalt break them,” and Mr. Santley in “Why do the nations” rose to the height of a great occasion, and made the best airs nearly equal in effect to the grandest choruses. On all hands the general success of the performance was admitted, along with the fact that the Handel Festival had added another feather to its many-plumed cap. The “Dead March” in “Saul” was played before the Oratorio as a tribute to the memory of the late German Emperor.

The Selection Day was not greatly favoured by the weather, which had been so propitious to “The Messiah” gathering. But the interest of its programme may be reckoned as a formidable element on the other side, and, in the result, the attendance was very little, if at all, short of that which made the corresponding occasion in 1885 a popular success. Great praise is due to Mr. Manns for the pains he took in searching out good things from the mass of Handel's unfamiliar works. In common with all intelligent admirers of the master, he must have felt that the second day of the Festival, on which alone it is possible to produce novelty, should be utilised to the utmost—even at the risk of offending those who prefer to hear, over and over again, a few choice pieces. It is not as though the whole gospel of Handel were familiar to the public, who, as a matter of fact, know but a small number of his productions. This limit should be extended, and the Handel Festival always presents a supreme opportunity—a fact which Mr. Manns not only recognised (he was bound to do that), but acted upon, at the cost of much labour and no little responsibility. Doing so, the talented Conductor did not stop short at half measures. Out of twenty-eight pieces in the programme, fifteen were new to this occasion—a proportion which, possibly, the late Sir Michael Costa would have regarded with the utmost doubt, not to say alarm. Moreover, the number of choruses was only ten, the object, apparently, being less to make a sensation with the exceptional means at command than to show Handel in his various aspects. Here we discern a really artistic purpose, worthy of the highest commendation; although it cannot be denied that the central transept is hardly the best conceivable place for music which depends in any measure upon delicacy of expression and effect.

We shall best discharge our task with reference to the selection by taking the pieces in the order of their occurrence. First came a tardy, and not, perhaps, quite obligatory recognition of the Queen's Jubilee, through the performance of the National Anthem and the Coronation Anthem, "Zadok the Priest"—a work less familiar now than when it was a yearly feature of the Charity Children's Festival at St. Paul's. Both were given with imposing effect, the second more especially, as being one of the finest examples of the composer when, so to speak, in his most regal mood. We know no work of the kind more truly jubilant, or more adequate to the expression of a universal feeling than "Zadok, the Priest." Its music, as given at the Crystal Palace, sounds like the voice of a nation at a moment of highest enthusiasm. The performance was superb in the steadiness of its march and the fullness of its ensemble. Following the loyal pieces came the Seventh Organ Concerto in B flat, one of a set of six published almost immediately after the composer's death, and remarkable as having a separate part for the pedals. The work is in three movements, of which the second, a Largo, and third, a Bourrée, are more remarkable than the opening Allegro, which is decidedly intended for mere executive display. The Largo has claims to rank among Handel's inspirations, while the tuneful and vigorous character of the Bourrée commends it at once to acceptance. Mr. Best presided, as usual, at the solo instrument, and played with his never-failing ability. As usual, also, his Cadenza in the first movement was not wholly in the spirit and manner of Handel. With much of it no fault could be found on this head, but at times the executant permitted himself to slip "down the ringing grooves of time" from Handel's day to our own, with an effect somewhat incongruous of character. Mr. Best, nevertheless, was loudly applauded—as, indeed, he deserved to be. A selection from "Jephtha" followed the Concerto, but it was a short one, consisting only of "Deeper and deeper still" and "Waft her, angels"; those favourite numbers being entrusted to Mr. Barton McGuckin. The Irish tenor did himself justice, and was not wholly unsuccessful in making head against formidable comparisons. His expression often satisfied critical hearers; there was, however, rather a lack of finish, and once, for a musical effect, Mr. McGuckin phrased thus, "Waft—her angels," which, of course, he knows to be wrong. A selection from "Esther" presented two numbers—the contralto air (or Arietta) "Jehovah, crowned with glory bright," and chorus "He comes." These had not previously been heard at a Handel Festival, nor had any excerpt from the master's first English oratorio found a place at the Crystal Palace, although, as the programme-book pointed out, the pieces just named were performed at the Commemoration (1784) in Westminster Abbey. Mr. Manns's choice of them must be commended. The solo, though short, is broadly conceived, and expressed with true Handelian grandeur; as, to a much greater extent, is the chorus; a relative minor episode, on the words "Earth trembles," being entitled to rank among the master's thunderbolts. Madame Trebelli did her best with the air, while the performance of the chorus was one of the finest efforts of the day. "Samson" contributed the next group of pieces; the Overture, "Total eclipse," "O first created beam," "Honour and arms," and "Let the bright Seraphim." Every one of these belongs to the familiar things of oratorio, and we are now concerned simply with their performance. The execution of the Overture left little or nothing to desire, each of the three movements being given with equal spirit and precision. The fugue was, of course, the most imposing, as became a piece in which science and martial feeling curiously and effectively blend.

But it was the Minuet, most tuneful and graceful of its kind, that went to the hearts of the audience and called out all their applause. Any other result would have been odd indeed. Father Haydn himself never wrote a Minuet more truly beautiful. Mr. McGuckin made no effect with "Total eclipse," which seemed to be beyond his dramatic capacity; but Mr. Santley in "Honour and arms," and Madame Albani in "Let the bright Seraphim" carried the audience with them. It may be that the popular baritone never gave greater effect to the song of the Philistine champion, but we have heard "Let the bright Seraphim" performed to better purpose, both by the vocalist and the solo trumpet. "O first created beam," and "Ye tutelary gods" ("Belshazzar") were choral triumphs, equal, in their way, to those of Mr. Lloyd in "Call forth thy powers" ("Judas") and Madame Nordica in "So shall the lute." The first part closed grandly with "See the conquering hero," the trio being sung by Mesdames Nordica, Emily Squire, and Trebelli.

The second part opened with the Overture to the "Occasional Oratorio." This Overture is too well known for description, and has rarely been omitted from the Handel Festival programme, thanks to its completely popular nature. In its performance the orchestra was not altogether of one mind; but the final March went splendidly, so delighting the audience that an encore was insisted on and granted. Another success attended Madame Albani's delivery of "Ombra mai fu" ("Serse"), best known now as a Largo by Handel, arranged for instruments by Helmesberger, of Vienna. In this form the piece is generally esteemed and Madame Albani had an easy task in winning for the original version abundant favour. The Saraband from "Almira" was followed by its derivative "Lascia, ch'io pianga," capitably sung by Madame Trebelli; after it coming the "Calumny" chorus from "Alexander Balus," with a magnificent and truly Handelian Coda. Now was the turn of a selection from "Acis and Galatea," "Hush, ye pretty warbling choir," charmingly given by Madame Nordica, "Love in her eyes," which Mr. Lloyd long since made his own; and the ever-welcome "Wretched lovers," rendered in the old, solid, stupendous style. Mr. Santley next repeated one of his stock pieces—"Del minacciar del vento," ("Ottone") with customary success; the remainder of the Concert being made up as follows:—Sonata in A for violin and orchestra, given as on the last occasion; the air "When two fond hearts" ("Deidamia"), sung by Mr. McGuckin; the "Nightingale" chorus, always expected on these occasions, and always successful, and a selection from "The Triumph of Time and Truth," consisting of the chorus "Ere to Dust," the air "Guardian Angels" (Madame Albani), and the chorus "Hallelujah." With this ended a very interesting and instructive selection.

"Israel" was performed on the 29th ult., too late for notice in our present issue; but even now the general success of the Ninth Handel Festival may confidently be asserted. It is a credit to everybody concerned, and an event of which the whole nation should be proud.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE last two Concerts of the Philharmonic season now come under review—the sixth, given on May 31; the seventh, which took place on the 16th ult. Both were under the direction of Mr. Johann Svendsen, Conductor of the Copenhagen Opera House, &c., who had been engaged to fill the place of Mr. F. H. Cowen during his absence from England. The Swedish musician justified the choice of the directors. He is not a “brilliant” Conductor in the sense of being sensational, otherwise he would hardly have suited our Philharmonic Society. But he knows his work, does it efficiently, and is in the completest sense a safe man for his post. The Concerts, therefore, did not suffer by his direction; the season, on the contrary, ending with distinction. Mr. Svendsen's powers as a composer were shown at the first of the two Concerts by his Symphony in D, a work written while he was yet a student, and the first of its kind from his pen. We need not speak of the Symphony as though it were unknown in this country. It has several times been publicly performed and discussed; amateurs, therefore, were not unprepared for its manifest ability and interest, also for the fact that, though the work of a Scandinavian, there is about it little of national character or colouring. Composed at Leipzig, it reflects the classic influence of its birthplace, and derives no aid from the “dark and true and tender” North. Those of our readers who know the work will agree with us as to its concise and disciplined expression of vigorous and even exuberant ideas, as to the beauty of its orchestration, and, especially, as to the great charm of the Scherzo—a movement not easily dismissed from mind when once heard. The Scherzo was encored with enthusiasm, and certainly if ever there was adequate provocation to such a result it occurred on the occasion under notice. At the same Concert Mr. J. F. Barnett produced a revised and enlarged version of an orchestral work composed by him for the Norwich Festival of 1881, and then called “Harvest Festival.” In its new form it is known as a “Pastoral Suite,” and consists of five movements, descriptive of scenes and incidents connected with an ideal “harvest home.” One of the movements, dealing with the quarrel and reconciliation of two lovers, is an addition to the old work, every part of which has had a thorough overhauling with a view to increased strength and importance. As it stands, the “Pastoral Suite” is a very agreeable thing, full of pleasant tune, marked by perfect clearness of treatment, and both picturesque and suggestive of the programme it illustrates. This might have been expected from Mr. Barnett's known qualifications for such a result—qualifications which, however, have rarely received such a complete exemplification as in the present case. The Suite was heard with attention and, at its close, the composer, who directed its performance, received ample assurance that his labours of revision and emendation had not been in vain. We have further to note that Mr. Alfred Hollins, the blind pianist, gave a really remarkable performance of Beethoven's Fifth Concerto. Having regard to the physical disadvantage under which he labours, Mr. Hollins played with astonishing correctness and freedom. It was clear, moreover, that he is an artist having qualities higher than mechanical skill. He read the music with intelligence and feeling. The “William Tell” Overture ended the Concert, in the course of which Mrs. Hutchinson sang some vocal music.

The final programme of the season contained nothing which had a claim to novelty. But it was full of excellence, and a crowded room testified ample approval of the directors' choice. Mr. Svendsen conducted a capital performance of Beethoven's “Pastoral” Symphony; Miss Soldat played Brahms's Violin Concerto in a manner which would have rejoiced the heart of her master, Joachim; Madame Menter, though suffering much from indisposition, gave a fine and characteristic rendering of Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto in G; Dr. Mackenzie conducted his excellent Scottish Rhapsody, No. 1; and that admirable artist, Mr. Carl Mayer (from Cologne), sang in his best manner an air from “Jessonda” as well as songs by Schubert and Schumann. Here was truly a “feast of fat things” with which the most exigent should have been satisfied. We rejoice to add that, at the annual dinner of members and associates, the chairman, Mr. Cummings, announced a state of affairs very satisfactory to the guarantors, who will not be called upon to make good a deficiency of cash for the reason that none exists.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

SINCE the date of our last notice, which dealt with the second performance of the series, five of these Concerts have been given, and only two remain. For the most part, Mr. Richter has pursued the even and customary tenor of his way, giving on each occasion works by Liszt and (principally) Wagner, which the patrons of the enterprise must know by heart. We are not so foolish as, on this account, to blame the Conductor, or the public whose preferences he consults. They have a right to do as they please, and we also have a right—to wonder that they can go on, year after year, forming the staple of their Concerts out of such limited and peculiar material.

The programme of May 28 contained Liszt's “Totentanz,” for pianoforte and orchestra. This was an addition to the repertory, made, it may be assumed, on account of a certain success achieved by the work when played earlier in the year at the London Symphony Concerts. The pianist under Henschel was also the pianist under Richter, Mr. Fritz Hartvigson achieving as great an executive triumph in the one case as in the other. Many amateurs, no doubt, find it hard to understand why an artist should devote much time and immense labour to the mastery of a composition like the “Totentanz,” but they can, on the other hand, admire the industry and skill which made possible a rendering such as that given by Mr. Hartvigson. There is undoubtedly power in the work, and we can understand that the subject would appeal to a highly sensational and picturesque nature like that of Liszt. The Wagnerian selections at this Concert were from “Die Meistersinger” and “Tannhäuser,” the vocalist being Mr. Henschel; while the concluding Symphony, politely bowed in from without the charmed circle where Wagner reigns supreme, was Brahms's No. 2. Of this a very fine performance was given; but, indeed, the whole Concert ranked as a brilliant executive success.

The fourth Concert (the 4th ult.) introduced a new violinist in the person of Mr. (or Master) Henri Marteau, a boy of fourteen, who comes, we believe, from Rheims, and has been a pupil of Léonard. The young gentleman, a bright and intelligent looking lad, took the solo in Max Bruch's well-known Concerto, and played to the marked satisfaction of his audience. His tone is small, but pure; his style illustrates the special and, as yet, unrivalled merits of the French school, and he supplements executive capacity with the grace and charm that come of a musical nature. Thus equipped, it was not wonderful to see him received promptly into the favour of the public. A Haydn Symphony (in C), Beethoven's (No. 4) in B flat, and an Orchestral Transcription, by Felix Mottl, of Liszt's pianoforte solo, “St. Francis preaching to the birds,” were also in the programme, as was Dr. Mackenzie's new Overture “Twelfth Night,” specially written and performed for the first time. In this interesting work the Scottish composer has made no attempt to produce a musical epitome of the play as a whole, limiting himself, rather, to a few incidents and characters, principally connected with Malvolio. Yet even thus he found great length necessary to an adequate exposition of his ideas, the result being that the Overture might stand for the first Allegro of a Symphony without violation of the proprieties. To such a use it may come at last, and form, perhaps, a “Twelfth Night” Symphony—a work which Dr. Mackenzie has now shown himself well qualified to produce. The Overture, as will be inferred from the remarks just made, is regular in form, but it also contains charming and appropriate melodic ideas, worked out with the skill of a practised hand. We, however, find the special and peculiar merit of the new piece in its quaint, old-fashioned humour, sentiment, and colour. It is sometimes said of Mendelssohn's incidental music to the dramas of Sophocles that though we do not know what Greek music was, and though we know it was not Mendelssohnian, yet the composer has satisfied those who demand that such illustrations shall be true to the spirit of the thing illustrated. It is so in the case of Dr. Mackenzie's Overture. We recognise there the Shakespearian humour, and what we know must have been the feeling and expression of the sixteenth century; of which feeling and expression Shakespeare, though "not for an age but for all time," stands as the embodiment. To our mind this is the highest achievement at which the composer could have aimed, and short of which he would have missed a full success. It shows him to possess the receptivity and power of assimilation, as well as of expression, that, while not required in abstract music, are essential to the musician who would make his art an index to extraneous things. Undoubtedly the Overture needs hearing more than once by an average audience, for the very reason that it is so true to the subject. Undoubtedly, also, it will grow more into favour as its merits are increasingly perceived.

Master Marteau appeared again at the fifth Concert (the 11th ult.), and played very acceptably a Rondo capriccioso by Saint-Saëns. At the same time, Dr. Mackenzie's Overture was repeated, with the result of fuller appreciation than on the first occasion. Apart from the works just named, and the "Jupiter" Symphony, Wagner and Liszt ruled the roost, the first contributing the "Faust" Overture, the "Trauer" March, and the "Good Friday Music"; the second being represented by his first Hungarian Rhapsody. The performance, up to the high average of these Concerts, calls for no special remark.

The sixth Concert (the 18th ult.) was devoted entirely to Berlioz's "Faust," with Mrs. Mary Davies, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Pierpoint, and Mr. Santley as soloists; the choral music being sung by the augmented and re-organised choir connected with the Richter enterprise. Evidently the public regarded this occasion as important, a crowded audience being present, but for our purpose it was not suggestive. Nothing remains to be said about the work, which, to use a forcible expression of Prince Bismarck, has been "bled as white as veal" by comment and criticism, while the soloists have long been associated with their respective characters, and nothing is better known by amateurs than the manner in which they sing the music. It remains, therefore, only to speak of the orchestral performance and that of the chorus. The first came quite up to the expected mark, and all the instrumental numbers were superbly played and violently applauded. The chorus was not quite satisfactory. It wants better voices and further training before it can be fit to associate with such an orchestra as that for which Mr. Richter answers. However, the general performance of "Faust" appeared to give much satisfaction to the crowded audience, whose applause was frequent and hearty. That Berlioz's work will be heard from time to time under the same auspices scarcely admits of a doubt.

In the programme of the seventh Concert (the 25th ult.) there was nothing but very familiar selections, which it will be sufficient to name—Beethoven's "Namensfeier" Overture, some excerpts from Wagner's "Meistersinger," the "Ring," and "Parsifal"; Saint-Saëns's "Rouet d'Omphale," and Schumann's Symphony in D minor.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE story of Covent Garden Theatre since our last notice need not be a long one, since no works have been performed save such as are among the most familiar on the Anglo-Italian stage: "Carmen," "Lucia," "Le Nozze di Figaro," "Il Trovatore," "L'Africaine," "La Traviata," "Faust," "Don Giovanni," "Les Huguenots," "Rigoletto," "Lohengrin," "Il Flauto Magico," &c. We are hardly called upon to be particular about a list made up of materials which, however excellent, are so common. But it is necessary to make note of certain features in their performance as directed chiefly by Mr. Mancinelli, in part by Mr. Randegger, to whom falls the more classical works, for the reason, perhaps, that with them Mr. Mancinelli is not much in sympathy. The orchestra has shown an improvement during the month, and is now, while far from perfect, a good deal in advance of its first form. This may be explained by continuous working together, and increased familiarity with the intentions and directions of the chiefs. From the opening of the season the chorus has been good, but on special occasions, in "Faust," "Lohengrin," &c., Mr. Harris has supplemented it with a body of English chorists, to the manifest advantage of the ensemble. The introduction of the extra chorus when large effects are desired must be pronounced a success, creditable to those who conceived the idea and worked it out. With regard to the mise-en-scène, readers are prepared to be told of its adequate efficiency and splendour. Mr. Harris has spared no cost or trouble in mounting the more elaborate operas. He failed, it is true, in "L'Africaine," which could not compare with the original setting of the same work twenty-five years ago; on the other hand, the presentation of "Lohengrin" and "Carmen," to mention no others, gave the utmost satisfaction.

Turning to the principal artists, it cannot be said that the manager has had good luck with his new ladies. Several, among them Miss Martini and Miss Columbia, having appeared once, and then being relegated to the obscurity from which they ought never to have emerged; and only Madame Melba, an Australian soprano, made an effect good enough to warrant her retention on the active list. Madame Melba is a fluent vocalist, and a quite respectable representative of light soprano parts; but she lacks the personal charm necessary to a great figure on the lyric stage. Meanwhile Miss McIntyre—in whom "society" was so much interested—cannot be said to have made progress. An apparently invincible—sometimes ludicrous—stage awkwardness is a very serious obstacle in her path. With no really valuable recruits, Mr. Harris has had to carry on the campaign with the "old guard," and these have done excellent service. Mesdames Albani, Fursch-Madi, Russell, Nordica, Hauk, Arnoldson, Scalchi, Trebelli; Messrs. Jean de Reszke, Ravelli, Edouard de Reszke, Lassalle, Del Puente, Navarrini, Cotogni, D'Andrade—these were to be depended on, and in some cases, notably those of the De Reszke's and Lassalle, have carried all before them. On the whole, the operatic season may be described as a brilliant one, so far. The average of effective representations is high, the company is strong, and the fashionable world appears to have returned in force to its once familiar haunt. For this Mr. Augustus Harris may take credit.

DR. HANS VON BÜLOW'S RECITALS.

SOME fifteen or sixteen years ago musical circles in London were startled out of their propriety by the apparition of a performer on the pianoforte who cast to the winds nearly all the notions then held in favour as canons of art, and gave readings of honoured classical works which the sober-minded critics of the time regarded as revolutionary and destructive. It may be said without irreverence of Hans von Bülow, that "the common people heard him gladly," while veteran musicians regarded him with suspicion and almost unqualified distrust. Much has happened since that time, and a more potent illustration of the fact that "the old order changeth" could not be desired than the difference in the attitude of musicians and the general public towards the great pianist during his recent visit. The latter did not find him sufficiently sensational to run after greedily, while the former knelt at his feet, metaphorically speaking, and listened to his exposition of Beethoven as that of one having authority. The explanation is, that within the last decade we have made acquaintance with a large number of gifted performers, and are now generally agreed that the works of the great masters admit of many varieties of interpretation, so long as their obvious intentions are not wilfully violated. Progress on these lines is safe, but it is as necessary as ever to be on guard lest some impostor should arise and, boasting himself to be somebody, lead away weak spirits into false artistic paths. Hans von Bülow cannot be so described, and it is not too much to say that those who have carefully followed him through his Beethoven Cycles at St. James's Hall on the 4th, 12th, 19th, and 26th ult. received a lesson the value of which it is impossible to over estimate. The task he set himself was arduous alike to executant and listener. The scheme did not include the whole of the sonatas of Beethoven; indeed, some favourite works were omitted which we would gladly have heard him play. But enough was done to justify us in describing each performance as a herculean feat. Thus on the first occasion six of the early works were given, concluding with that in D (Op. 28), commonly known as the "Pastorale," beside two sets of Variations. At the next Recital we had Op. 27 (Nos. 1 and 2), Op. 31 (Nos. 2 and 3), the Variations and Fugue on a theme from the "Eroica" Symphony, and the thirty-two Variations in C minor. This programme, however, was child's play compared with that of the third Recital, when the pianist gave the Sonatas in F minor (Op. 57), "Appassionata" (Op. 78), "Les Adieux" (Op. 81), and the three last Sonatas (Op. 109, 110, and 111). As a test of physical endurance this was noteworthy, but the final work was as finely, or even more finely, played than any of the others. Equally exhausting was the fourth programme, which consisted of the Sonata in A (Op. 101), the Grand Sonata in B flat (Op. 106), and the rarely heard thirty-three Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli (Op. 20), Beethoven's last composition for the pianoforte.

And now it is necessary to consider briefly in what lay the unquestionable greatness of Hans von Bülow's interpretation of these mighty works, not certainly in the mere executive skill he possesses, remarkable though that may be. It is not often that one hears runs, trills, and arpeggi played with such a crisp, pearly touch. On the other hand, he occasionally stumbles over a comparatively easy passage, although it is only fair to add that this occurred but once or twice during the recent performances; at the third and fourth Recitals technique as well as every other quality was well nigh perfect. But that which gave distinction to the playing and rendered it memorable, was the extraordinary impress of intellectual feeling which the pianist brought to bear upon his task. He did not merely play the sonatas as an actor might recite speeches from Shakespeare, with correct emphasis and inflection and clear enunciation; the spirit of the master seemed to animate him and made him an interpreter in the highest sense of the word. Something of the same kind of sensation has been experienced in listening to M. de Pachmann when playing Chopin, but in a far less degree even, as the Polish composer is inferior to Beethoven. We repeat that to hear the greatest works ever written for the pianoforte rendered with such a rare insight into their subtle beauty and strength was an artistic treat of the highest order, and, with all his eccentricities, Hans von Bülow must be regarded as one of the most remarkable musicians of his time. We trust he has been sufficiently satisfied with his reception to pay us another visit at no distant date.

MR. CHARLES HALLÉ'S CONCERTS.

THOUGH the knighthood of this esteemed musician has, we believe, been duly gazetted, he has not yet assumed the title, and we must therefore, for the present, speak of him as Mr. Hallé. At the fourth Concert, on the 8th ult., there was a large audience attracted by a lengthy and varied programme. The chief item of interest was a selection of four pieces from a set for violin and pianoforte by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie (Op. 37). The first of these, entitled "Benedictus," at once arrested attention by its melodic beauty and tenderness. It is a little gem in its way, and will assuredly obtain popularity with violinists. Of the others we preferred a bright and engaging "Saltarello," but they are all pleasing and musicianly, and being played to perfection by Madame Néruda, were received with very great favour. The other works in the programme were Schumann's "Mährchen Erzählungen," for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello; Beethoven's Sonata in A (Op. 101), finely played by Mr. Hallé; Mozart's Duet in B flat, for violin and viola; and Brahms's Trio in E flat (Op. 40).

On the following Friday there was another novelty of some importance—namely, a Pianoforte Trio in A minor, by Edouard Lalo (Op. 26). The composer was hitherto only known in this country by his "Symphonie Espagnole," which Señor Sarasate plays so frequently; but in France he is much esteemed, and if this Trio is a fair example of his works they deserve to become more widely known. It is thoroughly of the French school, but is none the worse on that account, and is distinguished by clearness of form and a large infusion of captivating melody. With the exception of the slow movement, marked "très lent," which seemed rather too lengthy for the material employed, the work was perfectly comprehensible on a first hearing and was much applauded. Mr. Hallé played Beethoven's grand Sonata in B flat (Op. 106) in his usual masterly style, and the programme likewise included Emmanuel Bach's pleasing Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin, and Brahms's genial Sonata in F, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 99).

The late Stephen Heller's music is somewhat neglected in the Concert-room, and Mr. Hallé may be thanked for bringing forward his Intermezzo in E, still in manuscript, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, at the sixth Concert, on the 22nd ult. The work is of small dimensions, but it is pretty and fanciful. Volkmann's Trio in B flat minor (Op. 5), which commenced the Concert, is elaborate, and, with the exception of the slow movement, somewhat dry. Mr. Hallé was warmly recalled after his fine rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in E (Op. 109), but the honours of the afternoon were carried off by Madame Néruda, whose share in Schumann's Sonata in D minor (Op. 121) was a magnificent example of violin playing.

MR. CUSINS'S CONCERT.

AMONG the most successful Concerts of the summer season must be numbered that of Mr. W. G. Cusins, given in St. James's Hall on the 7th ult. To what extent the co-operation of Señor Sarasate contributed to this result it would be idle to speculate; probably the name of the Spanish virtuoso was a potent attraction with the general public, especially as he was announced to co-operate with the Concert-giver in that most popular of concerted chamber works, Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata. The work was placed first in the programme, and this no doubt accounted for the very small percentage of late-comers. To those used to the broad and vigorous playing of Herr Joachim or Madame Néruda in this work, Señor Sarasate's reading was not a little curious. He attacked the music in the light and airy style he adopts in his own show pieces, and anything less suggestive of Beethoven cannot be imagined. Still there was something of charm in the perfect finish and delicacy of the treatment, and the audience was evidently delighted. A large number of eminent artists took part in the Concert, and among them was Mr. Santley, who appeared to have received much benefit by his sea voyage. The very long programme partook of the nature of a high-class miscellaneous Concert, and there is no occasion to enter into further details.

M. OVIDE MUSIN'S CONCERT.

AMONG the most interesting Concerts of the past month must be numbered that of M. Ovide Musin, which took place at the Princes' Hall on the 19th ult. The Belgian violinist had the assistance of a full orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Walter Damrosch, son of the late Leopold Damrosch, who for many years occupied a very high position as Conductor in the United States. Mr. Walter Damrosch has succeeded his father as director of the Symphony and Oratorio Concerts as well as the German Opera in New York. The programme commenced with Beethoven's Symphony in A (No. 7), a very fair test of a Conductor's ability, and Mr. Damrosch's reading was generally commendable, though exception must be taken to the very slow tempo adopted in the trio of the third movement. The first solo of M. Musin was a series of Concertstücke in the form of a serenade by the elder Damrosch. The work is in four movements, and is chiefly noteworthy for light, fanciful, or, as some might say, "tricky" effects; but the second movement, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and the third, "Love Song," are very pleasing. The Belgian violinist seemed scarcely at his ease at first, having, we believe, changed his violin at the last moment, but he recovered

SEÑOR SARASATE'S CONCERTS.

THE Spanish violinist has occupied the proud position of having interested the public to a greater extent than any other solo performer during the present season. The fourth Concert, on the 2nd ult., drew such an overflowing audience that it was at once decided to give an extra performance on the following Saturday. The works performed by Señor Sarasate are only known to the public through him. M. Emile Bernard's Concerto in G minor, first introduced two or three years ago, is a somewhat dull, though musicianly work, its principal weaknesses being the absence of individual expression and the lack of interest in the accompaniments. The Andante is a curiously feeble echo of the corresponding movement in Mendelssohn's Concerto. The solo part is effectively written, but we do not think violinists generally are likely to add M. Bernard's work to their repertory. On the other hand, Max Bruch's Fantaisie Ecossaise is not unlikely to win popularity as it becomes known. Free as to form, its outline is, on the whole, consistent and symmetrical, and very effective use is made of themes bearing a close resemblance to genuine Scottish tunes. Another piece of a national kind was Señor Sarasate's "Muñeira," a Spanish song, with some extraordinary variations, which we should think very few violinists would care to attempt. The orchestral items at this Concert were Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Massenet's favourite Rêverie, "Le dernier sommeil de la vierge," and Liszt's "Mephisto Walzer."

The extra Concert duly took place on the 9th ult., and, in order to give distinction to the occasion, the Concertos of Beethoven and Mendelssohn were repeated. How Señor Sarasate plays these masterpieces we have already declared this season, and need not enter into the subject again. We understand that he is so well pleased with the result of his recent visit to this country that he will return to us next year. This news will be welcome to a very large circle of amateurs.

M. DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

IF St. James's Hall was not so full as usual at M. de Pachmann's last Recital, on the 23rd ult., the diminution can be accounted for partly by the lateness of the season and partly by the excessive number of pianists who have courted the favour of the London public of late. The gifted interpreter of Chopin must not imagine that there is any real falling off in the number of his admirers. His programme on the present occasion contained several examples of the Polish composer which he played in his usual inimitable style. It also included three new pieces by Mr. F. H. Cowen, which the composer has dedicated to him. The first and second of these, Allegretto grazioso and Romance, are graceful, elegant trifles, exactly suited to M. de Pachmann's style, but the third, a Scherzo in G minor, is by far the most meritorious and original of the three. The audience endeavoured to gain a repetition of this, but the pianist would not comply. We cannot speak so favourably of a Tarantella (Op. 21) by Hans von Bülow, though as a study it would certainly be useful. Other items in the programme were Madame de Pachmann's clever Theme and Variations, Brahms's Ballade (Op. 10, No. 2), and Beethoven's Sonata in F sharp (Op. 78).

MADAME DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

THIS event, which took place on the 9th ult. at Princes' Hall, must be classed among the most interesting of the season. It was so in a double sense: firstly, on account of the marked improvement evinced by the young English artist over her previous efforts as an executant, and, secondly, in consequence of the illustration afforded of the rapid development of her powers as a composer. The Theme with variations from her pen which she played on a previous occasion gave evidence of more than average ability, and this was more than confirmed by her new Sonata in E minor for pianoforte and violin, in which she was assisted by Mr. Gompertz. Though the work is in four movements it is more remarkable for condensation than elaboration of the thematic material. What Madame de Pachmann has to say is of interest in itself; in other words, her subjects are virile and attractive to the ear, and throughout she expresses herself with mingled clearness and energy. To say that she appears to have been principally influenced by Schumann and Brahms is tantamount to placing on record that the composer has taken the best of the modern masters as her models. The new pianoforte and violin Sonata is a work of great promise and at once places its author among the foremost female composers of her time. The programme of her Recital included selections from eight composers, the most important work being Beethoven's Sonata "Les adieux, l'absence, et le retour." This most highly esteemed piece of programme music demands a very large amount of feeling and expression for its proper interpretation, and Madame de Pachmann fairly proved herself equal to its requirements. Her touch is extremely sympathetic, and her execution as neat and accurate as could be wished. The future stages of her career, both as an executant and a composer, will be watched with interest.

MADAME SOPHIE MENTER'S RECITALS.

AMONG female pianists of the present generation Madame Sophie Menter deservedly holds a foremost place, though it is impossible for musicians or cultured amateurs to regard her with unqualified admiration. The border line which separates the artist from the virtuoso is sometimes difficult to define, but the Austrian pianist must unquestionably be placed in the lower category. Physical power far beyond the average is a dangerous gift for a musical executant to possess. The temptation to exaggerate a composer's meaning, or to devote too much attention to music of the sensational school is no doubt hard to resist when a player has phenomenal means at command, and it must be said that Madame Menter sometimes yields to it in a measure calculated to make the judicious grieve. The programmes of her two Recitals at St. James's Hall, on May 28 and the 14th ult., were largely made up of show pieces, the classical masters being poorly represented. On the first occasion the only great work was Beethoven's Sonata in E (Op. 109), of which, strangely enough, she gave a feeble and colourless rendering, the lovely air with variations suffering especially. The most acceptable performances were those of an Allegro (modernised) by Scarlatti, and Schumann's fanciful trifle "Traumeswirren." We have never heard the latter played with more delicacy and crispness of touch. Liszt was represented by no fewer than seven items, among which were the extraordinary Fantasia and Fugue on the name of Bach, three of the transcriptions of Schubert's Lieder, the Rhapsody (No. 8), and the famous "Don Juan" Fantasia. The energy and manipulative skill with which Madame Menter interpreted these pieces were simply astounding, and in this particular line she has no rival among her own sex, and very few among male pianists. We may take this opportunity of correcting a widespread, though erroneous, impression, that she was a pupil of the Weimar master; as a matter of fact, she never received any tuition from him, and it is to Tausig she owes the training and development of her natural gifts.

The delay in the commencement of the second Recital, which caused manifestations of impatience from the audience, was due, we understand, to a temporary indisposition, from which, happily, Madame Menter sufficiently recovered to carry out her programme. Indeed, she was at her best in the opening item, Beethoven's Sonata Caractéristique in E flat (Op. 81). The first two movements were rendered in the true classical style, all superabundant energy being carefully repressed, and only in the Finale was there some tendency to exceed the bounds of moderation. Schumann's Carnaval, which came next, afforded opportunity for a wonderful and startling display of the player's mechanical resources. Save by Rubinstein we have never heard this series of poetic sketches interpreted with such vivid colouring and herculean strength. At the same time, it must be said that if the reading Madame Schumann gives of the work is correct, that of Madame Menter must be wrong; they are too widely asunder to be reconcilable. The rest of the programme consisted, with the exception of two Chopin trifles, of virtuosos pieces, including Liszt's fanciful "St. Francis preaching to the birds," and his transcription of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overture, the rendering of the latter being an extraordinary feat of pianoforte playing.

MR. AMBROSE AUSTIN'S CONCERT.

PERFORMANCES are sometimes given in which the interest is of a personal rather than a strictly musical nature, and the pen of the critic has for the time to be laid aside. One of this nature was the "Testimonial Concert" given to Mr. Ambrose Austin at St. James's Hall on the 13th ult., on his retirement from the management of the hall. That such a compliment was well deserved everybody who has been brought into business contact with Mr. Austin will at once agree. Much of the present prosperity of the building, judged simply from the commercial standpoint, is unquestionably due to the zeal and tact mingled with unflinching courtesy with which he has managed its concerns; and the personal respect in which he is held was evinced by the number of well known names on the organizing committee of the farewell Concert, as well as the readiness of the most eminent artists to lend their aid in the programme. As we have said, criticism of what was done is wholly needless, the scheme being framed mainly to afford opportunity for as many high class performers as possible to appear. The list of names was as strong as it could well be, and included Madame Valleria, Madame Stirling, Madame Trebelli, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Maybrick, Mr. Santley, Mr. Sims Reeves, and M. de Pachmann. There was a full orchestra, Mr. W. G. Cusins conducting the Overtures to "William Tell" and "Leonora," No. 3, and Herr Richter that to "Tannhäuser." Madame Albani was only prevented by illness from lending her valuable assistance.

MADAME NILSSON'S FAREWELL CONCERTS.

IF it cannot be said that the retirement of the great Swedish artist, Madame Christine Nilsson, will cause a distinct void in the musical world, it is because she has gradually withdrawn herself from public life for the past seven years. But the actual, and so to say official farewell, is nevertheless an event of interest, and so it was regarded by the public. Most of us would have been pleased had the gifted songstress elected to appear once or twice more on the operatic stage, of which she was for many years a supreme ornament; but, doubtless for sufficient reasons, she preferred the Concert platform for her final appearances. The Concerts given under the direction of Mr. Kuhe at the Albert Hall on the afternoon of May 31 and the evening of the 20th ult., had no abstract musical interest whatever. An orchestra lent some dignity to the first, but the second was a mere ballad Concert, rather below than above the average of its class. Beyond saying that Madame Nilsson was assisted by several eminent artists, including Madame Trebelli, Madame Sterling, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Henschel, Signor Foli, Mr. Santley, and Mdle. Janotha, we need not enter into the general features of the entertainments. The selections of the Swedish artist herself included examples of every style of music in which she has won distinction, and the way in which she rendered them showed that her natural powers are as yet unaffected by time. Among other pieces she introduced a song by Balfe, "There is a shadow," his last composition, written expressly for her, and now sung for the first time. It was well received by the audience. After her final song on the 20th ult., commenced a series of demonstrations, the like of which is rarely witnessed in a concert-room. Madame Nilsson first responded by singing a ballad, and then the applause continuing unabated she came forward and gave the Jewel Song from "Faust," one of her most brilliant efforts in the past. Still the audience would not be satisfied, and nearly half-a-dozen recalls followed, the assemblage rising en masse and waving hats and handkerchiefs with enthusiasm, apparently uncontrollable. Thus was written the last chapter in the public history of a grand performer, and Madame Christine Nilsson is now only a memory to those to whom she had afforded unqualified delight. We have no space here to discuss at length the qualities which gave her a position absolutely unique among executive artists. Nature endowed her with a personality more winning and a voice more strangely thrilling in its sweetness than any other singer we can call to mind, and in parts requiring above all things feminine gentleness and pathos she has never been approached in our time; and it is in the highest degree improbable that another such ideal Marguerite, Mignon, Ophelia, or Edith will appear for many years. It should be mentioned that the book of words of the second Concert contained a well-written biography by Mr. W. A. Barrett, and an artistic portrait, both worthy of reproduction if possible.

"THE LOTHIAN'S" ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

MR. JOHN PETTIE, R.A., evidently does not share in the absurd opinion that a sanctuary dedicated to one art is desecrated by being made the temporary abode of another, equally noble and elevating. On May 30 and the 20th ult. he threw open his spacious studio, the Lothians, in Fitz John's Avenue, to his talented fellow countryman, Mr. Hamish MacCunn, for two Orchestral Concerts, of which the programme consisted mainly of the young Scotch musician's works. The only drawback to the enjoyment of the audience was one quite unavoidable; the orchestra of forty-eight performers were necessarily ill-balanced, and a proper ensemble was out of the question, the wind quite overpowering the strings at times. We will, therefore, defer all expressions of opinion as to Mr. MacCunn's qualifications as a Conductor, judgment under the circumstances being obviously unfair. The examples of his ability as a composer at the first Concert were the piquant Overture, "Land of the mountain and the flood," the picturesque and original Ballad, "The Ship o' the Fiend," and a remarkably spirited drinking song, "Pour forth the wine," sung by Mr. Henry Pope. Into the rest of the programme it is not necessary to enter.

At the second Concert a new so-called Ballad Overture, suggested by a Scottish folk-poem, "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow," was performed for the first time. In this Mr. MacCunn displays as much or even more originality than in his previous works. The Overture is a remarkably well written piece, full of characteristic melody and capably scored. It will sustain, if it will not strengthen, the composer's reputation as a national musician. We do not blame him for confining himself to Scottish subjects; he, doubtless, knows the bent of his genius, and does well to follow its dictates entirely for the present, especially as nationalism in music is becoming a more powerful factor every year. In this programme was another new Overture by Mr. E. Duncan, lately a companion student of Mr. MacCunn at the Royal College of Music. It is excellently put together, if it does not display any precise vein of originality. Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, the solo part excellently played by Mr. Barton, was another prominent item in the scheme.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

MR. ROBERT GOLDBECK, a pianist, composer, and professor of very considerable repute in the United States, gave a Recital at Steinway Hall on the 1st ult. Some thirty years had elapsed since Mr. Goldbeck first came to London, and doubtless few amateurs remembered his having been here at all. He is by birth a German, and studied under Heinrich Litolf. In 1861 he took up his residence in the States, where he became in turn head of the Chicago Conservatoire and of the Beethoven Conservatory of St. Louis, subsequently settling down in New York. Mr. Goldbeck possesses as a pianist the characteristic attributes of the school in which he studied—a sound technique, rare lightness and delicacy of touch, and remarkable brilliancy of style, allied with great charm and intelligence of expression. His playing, whilst giving evidence of exceptional manipulative force, is free from the slightest trace of exaggeration, his powers being invariably kept under admirable restraint. Unfortunately, Mr. Goldbeck afforded no opportunity for judging of his gifts as an exponent of some important classical work, his chief effort being made in a Pianoforte Concerto of his own composition, the accompaniments to which were executed on a second piano by Mr. F. A. Sewell, of the Royal College of Music. This work, however, served to show that he knows how to write clever bravura effects for his instrument as well as to interpret them with skill and ease. Among other pieces from Mr. Goldbeck's pen included in the programme was a song entitled "Lucy," prettily sung by Miss Sibyl Grey, whose vocal efforts, together with those of Mr. Richard Temple, helped to agreeably diversify the Recital.

A pleasant afternoon's entertainment, enjoyed by a numerous audience, resulted from the Vocal and Dramatic Recital given at the Marlborough Rooms on the 6th ult. by Miss Bertha Moore in conjunction with Mr. Ernest Pertwee. The young soprano sang in her accustomed graceful and effective manner three Lieder by Meyer Helmund, Grieg's "Solveig's Song," Schumann's "Humility," and songs by Dvůřák, Rubinstein, and Sullivan, ably accompanied by Signor Bisaccia. All were more or less heartily applauded, while Mr. Pertwee's recitations likewise commanded warm appreciation.

Two Pianoforte and Vocal Recitals were given last month at Steinway Hall by Herr Max Vogrich and Madame Alice Rees-Vogrich. At the first, which took place on the 14th ult., the room was sparsely filled, and it was perhaps fortunate for the spirits of the Recital-givers that their audience atoned for lack of numbers by vouchsafing them an abundant measure of applause. Herr Vogrich is an executant of no mean ability, and his rendering of Schumann's Sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 11), and Liszt's eighth Rhapsody, showed him in the most favourable light as an interpreter of modern pianoforte music. He also figured largely in the programme as a composer, playing some clever original pieces, and also showy transcriptions of Wagner's "Feuerzauber," and the "Erlkönig" and "Ständchen" of Schubert. Madame Vogrich, who, we believe, won a considerable reputation in the Colonies under her maiden name, possesses a bright, resonant soprano voice, and sings with good artistic feeling. She was heard, among other things, in an air from "Der Freischütz," Mozart's "Deh vieni," and an "Arabian Song" by her husband.

THE MACFARREN SCHOLARSHIP.

A MEETING of the subscribers to the above was held on Saturday afternoon, the 23rd ult., in the Concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music, among those present being the Rev. Canon Duckworth, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Dr. Horace Hill (Norwich), Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Miss Oliveria Prescott, Messrs. W. Macfarren, Meadows White, C. A. Barry, T. L. Southgate, B. Tours, G. T. Rose, A. O'Leary, H. R. Rose, Kuhe, Schloesser, F. R. Cox, John Gill, and Charles E. Stephens and J. Percy Baker, the Hon. Secretaries. Mr. Meadows White, Q.C., occupied the chair.

The subscription list was announced to amount to nearly £1,430. The following resolutions were unanimously passed as defining the conditions of the Scholarship:—

1. That the Macfarren Scholarship shall be an open scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, and shall be awarded for promise in Musical Composition.

2. That it shall be open for competition to British-born candidates between the ages of fifteen and twenty-one years.

3. That it shall be tenable for three years, subject to the usual annual tests, and the control of the Committee of Management of the Royal Academy of Music; with power to the Trustees, in cases of exceptional talent, to extend it to one year more, on the recommendation of the Examining Board of the Academy.

4. That the holder of the Scholarship shall be ineligible for a second competition.

5. That if, after payment of the Academy fees and other necessary expenses, there be any surplus remaining, the Trustees shall be empowered to hand over to the holder of the Scholarship such portion of the annual balance as they may deem desirable from time to time.

6. That in the event of the Scholarship not being awarded for want of a fit candidate, the income, for the time being, shall be added to the corpus of the fund.

7. That intending candidates shall, on entering their names for the competition, be required to pay a fee of one guinea towards defraying the expenses of the examination.

8. That the balance of the money subscribed shall be invested in the names of three Trustees, whose appointment shall be subject to the conditions pertaining to trusteeship.

9. That the Principal, for the time being, of the Royal Academy of Music be one of the Trustees.

10. That Mr. Walter Macfarren and Mr. Thomas Threlfall be appointed Trustees.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

On the 4th ult. Dr. Charles W. Pearce concluded the session with a paper on "Some further modifications of Day's Theory of Harmony." After briefly recapitulating the various objections that had been raised to the theory he said that Day had two sides to his book. He was pre-eminently psychical but he tried to be physical as well. The lecturer's object was to show the untruth and worthlessness of Day's physics, and to prove that when his book was stripped of its pretended and false science his psychics still remained not only uninjured by the separation, but immensely improved. The great truth which Day taught us was that modern tonality is three-fold. The tonic key is the centre of the tonal system, having as its accessories certain characteristic features of the dominant key on the one side, and of the subdominant on the other. Why did not Day develop the idea that as every scale has in itself strong melodic dominant and subdominant tendencies, so too the key established by that scale was harmonically capable of so expanding itself in either direction as to almost become a new key, but could be saved from entirely overbalancing its tonality by preserving its own individual characteristics amongst those of its two closely allied attendant keys? Having laid the foundation for his theory in some such manner as this, he could have gone on building up his system of roots and derived his psychical series, depending thereon not from mistaken observation of natural phenomena, but from the unquestionable teaching of musical history. After dealing with various points that had been raised in the discussion on Mr. Prout's paper in March, Dr. Pearce went on to say that it was not easy to see why Day and Macfarren so strictly confined the use of the eleventh to the dominant only when several chords, even in Mozart's works, can only be explained as supertonic or tonic elevenths, and asked why a chord of the augmented sixth could not be used with good effect on the minor third and the diminished fifth of the key. It was simply extending the three-fold tonality one remove in each direction. The Day Theory needed simplification in its exposition and presentation in an attractive and popular form. That this could be done, that it was worth doing, and that the doing of it could be justified, confirmed, and exemplified by a book of practical illustrations from composers of all ages since harmony began was undeniable.

Dr. J. F. Bridge, Mr. Charles E. Stephens, and Mr. E. Prout were the speakers in the discussion that ensued.

BOLOGNA EN FÊTE, 1888.

THE present year seems that par excellence for exhibitions. In London we have, inter alia, an Irish, an Italian, and a Danish exhibition, and at Glasgow, Munich, Barcelona, Brussels, and at Bologna special attractions of the kind on a larger scale have this year been organised. A few stray notes concerning the last-mentioned, after some allusion to the recent Bolognese festivities, may be acceptable to your readers.

The International Exhibition of Musical Instruments, &c., of which Verdi is Honorary President, and Boito is President of the Committee of Organisation, and which was opened early in May, has not yet attracted a very large number of visitors to the ancient capital of the "Emilia." But the very remarkable and brilliant

"VIII Centenario dello Studio Bolognese, sotto l'alto patronato di S. M. Umberto I Re d'Italia," the celebration of the 800th year of foundation of that mother of Universities, which was held in the middle of last month, brought to the supremely interesting old city a crowd of professors and students from almost every University; and the occasion being emphasised by the unveiling, by the present King, of a Roman equestrian statue of the late King of Italy, civic and military co-operation was also secured, and the presence of Royalty added lustre to an event which, more certainly than the exceptional bloom of the aloe, can only take place once in a century. Excepting want of organisation, in which the Italians showed marked incompetence, and excepting also the great heat of the weather, causing all exertion to be difficult to Northern visitors, everything combined to render the occasion memorable to those who took part in its celebration. The ancient city itself, an ideal locale for an academic festival, with its arcades in every street and picturesqueness at every turn; its leaning tower, commemorated by Dante; its famed gallery of pictures, containing the divine "St. Cecilia" by Raphael, known, from numberless reproductions, to most musicians, and worshipped by their brother artists; its Campo Santo, churches, and palaces—Bologna "la grassa," or the wealthy, is familiar to those of your readers in whose route it may have occurred in visiting the contiguous Ravenna, Florence, or Venice. Such readers will recognise the eminent suitability claimed for the old city on such an occasion, when its University and its municipality, aided by almost every advantage of place and association, put forth their whole strength to give due effect to the various functions, which were made bright with academic and civic costumes of every hue, recalling pictures of mediæval pageants and traditions of olden time. And amid the glimpse into past ages which seemed thus afforded, a visitor of 1888, especially if he had previously known Bologna, could scarcely fail to be struck by the practical adoption of modern improvements in a city where all, till recently, seemed antiquated—such as a funicular railway up to San Michele in Bosco, and, more prominently, a most effective illumination by electric lamps, gracefully swung, as at Milan, across the principal streets, causing a sort of full moon every night, and enhancing architectural effect.

Early this year a circular letter in choice Latin was written to the Senates of the Universities of the world, with an invitation to send delegates to the Eighth Centenary of the "Mater Alma Studiorum." Some 370 professors accepted, and representatives of students from most European Universities also responded to the invitation. The Universities from Italy represented were Cagliari, Camerino, Catania, Ferrara, Genoa, Macerata, Messina, Modena, Naples, Padua, Palermo, Parma, Pavia, Perugia, Pisa, Rome, Tassari, Siena, Turin, and Urbino; from Austria-Hungary—Buda-Pesth, Cracow, Czernowitz, Grätz, Innsbruck, Kolozsvár, Lemberg, Prague, and Vienna; from Belgium—Brussels, Ghent, Liège, and Louvain; from Holland—Amsterdam, Leyden, Utrecht, and Gronigen; from Denmark—Copenhagen; from Norway and Sweden—Christiania, Lund, and Upsala; from Germany—Berlin, Bonn, Breslau, Erlangen, Fribourg, Göttingen, Halle, Heidelberg, Jena, Kiel, Königsberg, Leipzig, Marburg, Munich, Rostock, Strasburg, Tübingen, and Würzburg; from France—Paris, Aix, Bordeaux, Caen, Lille, Lyons, and Toulouse; from Russia—Dorpat, Helsingfors, Kasan, Moscow, and St. Petersburg; from Greece—Athens; from Roumania—Bucharest and Jassy; from Spain—Madrid, Granada, and Oviedo; from Portugal—Coimbra; from America—New York, Baltimore, Cambridge, Iowa, Itaca, Cornell, New Haven, Philadelphia, Princetown, Michigan, and Virginia; from India—Bombay; from Australia—Adelaide and Sydney; from New Zealand—Dunedin and Wellington; from Switzerland—Basle, Berne, Geneva, and Zürich. From Great Britain and Ireland, the Oxford University delegates were Professors Holland, of All Souls'; Hon. W. Warren-Vernon, and Mr. R. Spencer Stanhope, of Christ Church—the two latter words not being translated, as at Oxford, into the Latin "Ex Æde Christi," but naively into the literal Italian "della Chiesa cristiana," as if all the other British delegates were heathens. Cambridge was represented by Professors Jebb

(who also represented Glasgow), Adams, Middleton, and Denman; St. Andrew's by Principal Donaldson and Professor Knight; Aberdeen by Professor Harrower; Glasgow, by Sir William Thomson, Professors Ramsay, Fergusson, Jebb, and Macleod; Edinburgh, by Principal Sir William Muir, Professors Sir Herbert Oakeley and Kirkpatrick; Dublin, by Professors Cunningham and Haughton; Durham, by Professor Rashdall; London, by Dr. Pole, also a delegate from the Royal Society. Various academies and learned societies from most parts of the world were also represented. The following was the official list of the principal "functions" of the festival:—

The 11th ult.—9 a.m. Presentazione dei Delegati delle Università, Accademie ed altri Istituti scientifici al Sindaco di Bologna.

2 p.m. Intervento all' inaugurazione del monumento a Vittorio Emanuele II. Concerto dell' Orchestra Bolognese diretto dal Maestro Martucci all' Esposizione.

8 p.m. Fiaccolata artistica disposta dal Municipio in onore dei Sovrani.

9.30 p.m. Illuminazione alla veneziana nei Giardini Margherita.

The 12th ult.—9 to 12 a.m. Corteo dei professori e dei delegati degli Istituti scientifici dall' Università all' Archignasio. Solenne commemorazione dell' VIII Centenario dello Studio alla presenza di S. M. il Re.

6 p.m. Banchetto offerto dal Governo.

9 p.m. Serata in onore delle rappresentanze al Teatro Comunale.

The 13th ult.—9 a.m. Distribuzione delle lauree d' onore ad illustri scienziati nel Cortile dell' Archignasio. Discorsi di S. E. il Ministro e del prof. Ceneri.

8 p.m. Festa umoristica degli studenti nella Montagnola.

From the above list is omitted a Reception held on the evening of the 12th ult., by the King and Queen of Italy, when some of the delegates had the honour of being presented to their Majesties. The Queen was present at the Concert given in the fine Music Hall of the Exhibition on the 11th ult., under the admirable direction of Signor Martucci when the following programme was excellently performed by the Bolognese orchestra of about seventy-five executants:—

1. Weber—Ouverture dell' Opera "Freischütz."

2. Beethoven—Andante della 5.^a Sinfonia.

3. Rossini—Ouverture dell' Opera "l'Assedio di Corinto."

4. Rubinstein—Andante (per strumenti ad arco).

5. Tsczikowsky—Walzer (per strumenti ad arco).

6. Brahms—Due danze ungheresi.

7. Berlioz—Danza delle sifidi.

8. Wagner—Calvacata delle Walküre.

This Concert agreeably surprised some of the German and British visitors, who were scarcely prepared to hear finished orchestral playing on the south side of the Alps. The performance was chiefly remarkable for the grace and refinement associated with Italians, and in these respects the "wind" was immaculate. The purity of intonation and delicacy of the four horns at the commencement of the first Overture at once rivetted attention, and the family of "wood-wind" appeared equal in excellence to that, for instance, of the Paris Conservatoire of twenty-five years ago. The unison of violas and violoncellos in the divine melody in A flat with which the second movement of Beethoven's C minor Symphony begins, never seemed more exquisite. An Overture by Rossini, perfectly played, was an interesting selection at a concert in the city where the "Swan of Pesaro" passed so much of his time; and the three last items by modern composers, whose names and music no longer seem strange or uncouth to sensitive Italian ears, were rapturously received. In fact, the close attention of the whole audience, which contained a large number of University students who appeared absorbed only in the music, and the unanimous burst of applause after each selection, seemed to show the deep-rooted love and devotion to our divine art still possessed by Italians. Evidence at Bologna of a cultured taste in music is also indicated by the calibre of Martucci's periodical Exhibition Concerts. On the evening of which some of us were reluctantly obliged to return northwards, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and other good things were in the programme. And if the testimony of a musical student of the "Liceo Rossini," now the principal teaching conservatoire at

Bologna, may be taken as accurate, another sign of recent advance there is that the music at present most admired by teachers and students of that school is that by Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, &c. And further, the assiduous study of counterpoint is still considered a sine qua non and de rigueur for Bolognese musicians. Thus, as of old, and true to its motto, "Bononia docet."

Specially interesting features of the morning function on the 12th ult. were the congratulatory addresses, chiefly in Italian or Latin, by a University delegate from each nation. In the case of the address from England, which was read in Latin by the accomplished Professor Jebb (who also contributed a masterly Greek and an Italian Ode on the Centenary), an unconsciously severe satire on the British pronunciation of Latin which was observed in a Bologna journal of the following day, caused considerable amusement. After mentioning the language in which each congratulatory address had been delivered, the Italian reporter, whose opinion seemed to be generally shared by his countrymen, stated that the English representative spoke in English, "parlò il rappresentante del l'Inghilterra in inglese."

A few words may be added regarding the Musical Exhibition, which, as will be understood, your correspondent had very little time to examine. The most interesting portion of the collection was placed just where, in a hurried visit, it might be altogether missed—namely, in the rooms upstairs, which are approached by a "scala," unusually mean and narrow for Italy. No catalogue had been published, nor was anything indicated viva voce to aid native or foreign exploring parties. The upper rooms referred to contain a priceless exhibition of MSS. and of autographs, which have been lent by various continental libraries or by private collectors. Besides a probably unequalled collection of old ecclesiastical MSS., most of which are illuminated, and which are contributed chiefly by the Bologna "Liceo Filarmonica," and by other Italian musical societies or libraries, the following autograms of the greatest masters were noticed:—Full scores by Haydn and Mozart, and the famous "Exercise" in Counterpoint written by the latter when only fourteen years of age, for the diploma which he received from the Bologna Philharmonic Society or "Liceo Filarmonica"; also the scores of Beethoven's opera "Fidelio," Ninth Symphony, Septuor, &c.; scores by Bach, Cherubini; pianoforte music by Clementi, Mendelssohn, including the "Gondola," "Lied ohne Worte," and by Schumann, &c. Near the autographs are some superb violins, by Stradivarius and other famed Cremona makers, and also a case containing stringed instruments lent by H.R.H. The Duke of Edinburgh. It is unfortunate that the instruments from England, and from Edinburgh University Music Chair, which were to have been forwarded by the London Committee, formed early in the year for aiding British exhibitors, were not sent to Bologna, owing to a hitch, at the last moment, as to insurance against all risks.

It may here be mentioned that the statement which appeared in several English papers that a MS. score of a work written for the Festival was sent from England, and was by mistake placed among the autographs at the Exhibition, is quite erroneous. No such score was sent. The misstatement may be traced to the fact that some printed music, forwarded for the University Library, and for the Conductor of the Exhibition Concerts, seems to have been mixed up with other modern printed works sent for exhibition by various musical publishers, and was placed in the portion of the building on the ground floor assigned to modern publications. It need scarcely be added that this department of the Exhibition is of quite secondary interest, and left no special impression.

From the retrospective glance thus taken of the occasion under notice, it will be perceived that the paramount interest of this year—it may be said of this century at Bologna—was the memorable eighth centenary of the ancient University, which in brilliancy and in general success has probably surpassed any celebration of the kind. But after the summer heat has subsided, towards the second half of September, English tourists on the other side of the Alps would certainly find a visit to the International Musical Exhibition, at one of the most interesting cities of North Italy, "operæ pretium."

HERBERT OAKELEY.

DUDLEY BUCK'S "LIGHT OF ASIA."

THE American Musician in speaking of the performance of this work, says:—

"An audience that filled every seat assembled at the First Baptist Church, Newark, on May 31, to hear the first complete performance in America of Dudley Buck's Cantata, the 'Light of Asia.' Mr. Dudley Buck and his sons, who are promising vocalists, were present."

Mr. E. M. Bowman conducted. The Harmonic Society, about one hundred voices, sang well. Their attack was good, their most effective efforts being in the "Wedding Chorus," the "Spring Song," "The Temptation," and "Softly the Indian night."

The orchestra was composed largely of the Symphony Society members, and the soloists, Miss Mary J. Dunn, Mr. Dennison, and Dr. Carl E. Martin, did their work admirably, and were deserving of warm praise.

During the evening Dr. Stockton, the President of the Harmonic Society, presented Mr. Bowman with an elegant bâton. Mr. Dudley Buck, the composer, was also called upon, and complimented the Conductor for his moral courage and liberality in producing a work by a native author. The general verdict in Newark is that the Concert was one of the most successful ever given by the Harmonic Society, and that the work is worthy to rank with the best cantatas of the day. The Newark Daily Advertiser, in summing up its review of the Concert, says:—

"The once despised cause of American music was brought into prominence in a most gratifying way, and there is no doubt that this Concert—with the eyes of the musical world upon it—will exert a wide and beneficial influence upon the development of national music and its recognition. Dudley Buck stands in the front rank of American composers, and his latest large work was performed for the first time in this country by one of the oldest of our singing societies and under a distinguished Conductor. Mr. Buck shows that he is a progressive artist, and thoroughly in sympathy with the modern romantic school. In his modulations, in his use of the Leitmotif, in the importance given to the orchestra, in his avoidance of senseless repetitions of words and phrases, and in his strict adherence to canon that the music must fit the meaning of the words, he acknowledges the value of Wagnerian principles. The work is replete with the sweetest melodies and at times decidedly dramatic. The orchestration is elaborate and striking."

A second journal says:—

"After the first measures had been sung, one could not fail to be struck with the exquisite beauty of the subject-matter of the Oratorio. The poem is wonderfully musical in itself, the sentences flow with wonderful smoothness, the diction is perfect, each line contains some gem of thought, and throughout the whole are scattered marvelously powerful word pictures which adapt themselves to musical composition. Anyone who has read the poem can see in an instant why Dudley Buck fastened upon it for the subject-matter of his latest great musical work. Its music of rhythm must have captivated him, while the all-pervading purity of its tone—a requisite almost imperative in all Oratorios—proved how admirably adapted it was from another standpoint. The audience last night must have seen at once how perfectly the composer must have understood 'The Light of Asia' before he undertook the musical adaptation of it. One could not fail to perceive also that Conductor Bowman had given to the preparation of the Oratorio a vast amount of study not only from a musical, but from a literary standpoint as well."

A third thus speaks:—

"The old Harmonic Society last evening achieved the grandest triumph of its long existence. 'The Light of Asia' was presented in such a delightful manner as to charm everybody. The production of this composition is not only a credit and honour to the chorus, but also to the city. We take pleasure in giving this praise, because it requires (though it should not) great courage for any leader and chorus to take hold of an American work. It is a great credit to our country that we have a composer who has the ability to produce a work of the grand scope of 'The Light of Asia.'"

The Newark Sunday Call says:—

"The orchestral part, which the composer thought so important that he declared he would rather have the work never given at all than have this omitted, is very picturesque and highly descriptive. Indeed, it may truthfully be said that no proper conception of the composition can be obtained unless it be heard with full orchestra and chorus. Mr. Buck has shown not only a high degree of technical skill in his orchestral scoring, but he has also demonstrated that he possesses a lively imagination and a true poetic appreciation of his theme. The two representative phrases, the Fate and Consummation motives, which run through the whole work, take the most delicate shades of meaning through his treatment of them. The performance was an even plane of excellence. The attacks were firm and precise, the phrasing was clear and intelligent, the pianos, fortes, crescendos, and diminuendos were all excellent, and the various choral phrases delivered with dignity and impressiveness. It is certainly truthful to say that the society never sang better. Even in the difficult 'Temptation' scene there was not an instant wavering, and the final crescendos in the Epilogue has never been excelled by any chorus singing before heard in Newark."

SIR JOHN STAINER.

AN influential committee has been formed to give a public dinner and to present an address of congratulation to Sir John Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc., together with words gratefully recognising his eminent services to the musical art. The following gentlemen form the committee: Lord Herschell, Lord Thring, Lord Charles Bruce, Colonel the Hon. W. Colville, the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton, the Right Hon. J. A. Mundella, M.P.; W. H. Gladstone, Esq., M.P.; C. Stuart Wortley, Esq., M.P.; the Rev. Canon Scott-Holland, the Rev. Canon Gregory, the Rev. S. Flood Jones, the Rev. W. H. Milman, the Rev. W. Russell, the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck, Mr. J. Barnby, Mr. W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac., Oxon; Dr. J. F. Bridge, Mr. T. Chappell, Mr. Arthur Chappell, Mr. Arthur Coleridge, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. W. G. Cusins, Professor Ella, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, Sir George Grove, Mr. E. W. Hamilton, Mr. H. Weist Hill, Mr. R. R. Holmes, F.S.A.; Mr. Henry Leslie, Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Dr. G. C. Martin, Mr. Charles Morley, Mr. Buxton Morrish, Dr. C. Villiers Stanford, Dr. Steggall, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Mr. E. H. Turpin, Mr. F. Walker, and Mr. M. E. Wesley, with power to add to their number. The Executive Committee consists of Lord Charles Bruce, the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton, Dr. Bridge, Messrs. Otto Goldschmidt, A. H. Littleton (Hon. Treasurer), and E. H. Turpin (Hon. Secretary). It is expected that the dinner will take place at the Hotel Metropole, on Tuesday, the 17th inst., and applications for tickets (25s. each) should be made at an early date to the Hon. Secretary, at the College of Organists, 95, Great Russell Street, or 6, Argyle Square, W.C., or to Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., 1, Berners Street, S.W. At the moment of going to press the name of the chairman and several final arrangements are still in abeyance. There is no doubt, however, that the meeting will be a most enthusiastic one, and the company highly representative. The occasion will alike do honour to our eminent English musician and to the cause of music and its professors and admirers.

OBITUARY.

THE name of MR. WILLIAM WINN has now to be added to the list of those who have crossed the dark waters of death. He was born at Bramham, in Yorkshire, on May 8, 1828. He came to London about 1854, and was in great request as a vocalist. His voice was a rich basso-baritone and his style of singing was manly and incisive. He was appointed Gentleman of the Chapels Royal in 1864, and Vicar-Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral in 1867. He was the composer of a number of vocal pieces, glees, and songs. Among the latter was the Ballad "A kiss and nothing more," which has attained a world-wide reputation. He was one of the Professors at the Guildhall School of music and was a valuable member of the Committee, and one of the Treasurers of the Choir Benevolent Fund. He died on the 1st ult., and was buried in Kensal Green Cemetery.

MADAME LINA BALFE, the widow of the composer Michael William Balfe, died on Friday, the 8th ult., after a short illness. She was born in Hungary, in 1806, on September 1, and consequently was in her 82nd year. In early life she was a famous singer, and while she was yet a student Bellini heard her, and wished her to make her début in his opera "La Sonnambula," many of the passages in the part of Amina being altered to suit her vocal powers. When she married Balfe she sacrificed her own career in order to devote herself to her husband. This devotion was the characteristic quality of her life. After Balfe's death in 1870 she occupied her time in founding a scholarship at the Royal Academy, in erecting a statue in the vestibule of Drury Lane Theatre, the scene of his many triumphs, in having certain of her husband's posthumous operas placed upon the stage, and in securing a place in Westminster Abbey for a tablet to his memory. She had three children, a son and two daughters, deceased, one of whom, a famous opera singer, married the Duke de Frias, who recently died Governor of Madrid, the other was the mother of Henry Behrend, the well known composer. Her remains were interred at Kensal Green, on the 14th ult., in the grave where rest those of her famous husband. Only a few friends were present, the funeral being of a private character, and the cortège consisted simply of a hearse drawn by four horses, two mourning coaches, in which were the deceased lady's son-in-law, Mr. Behrend, with members of his family, and the private carriage of Madame Christine Nilsson, who herself attended at the cemetery. Among those present at the grave side were Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Stewart, publisher of Balfe's posthumous opera "The Talisman"; Mr. John Gill, representing the Royal Academy of Music; Mr. Duncan Davison, a very old friend of the Balfe family, and a few others. The burial service was read by the Rev. Canon Duckworth, and the coffin, covered with a profusion of flowers, bore the inscription, "Lina Rosen Balfe, born 1806, died June, 1888." A magnificent wreath of choice blooms was sent by Madame Nilsson.

MR. FRANK SPINNEY, Organist of Leamington Parish Church, and Conductor of the Warwick Choral Society, and formerly of Warminster, died at Leamington on the 5th ult., aged thirty-eight. He was the elder surviving son of Mr. T. E. Spinney, of Salisbury, under whom he received his early musical training. Afterwards he was articled to Dr. Hayne, choragus, University of Oxford, and Organist of Queen's College.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OUR musical doings this month have taken the form of Promenade Concerts at the Theatre Royal, an enterprise which seems to be very successful, judging from the large audiences that patronise the nightly performances. Mesdames Sinico, Agnes Larkcom, Annie Grey, Marian Mackenzie; Mdles. A. Mullen, A. Janson, and Messrs. Bantock Pierpoint, Sidney Tower, A. Rousbey, and J. W. Turner are among the artists engaged for these Concerts. M. Auguste von Biene conducts the orchestra and gives violoncello solos, and Mr. Bridgman is accompanist. The programmes are of the popular order, as a rule, Scotch nights, Irish nights, national dance music, &c., with a sprinkling of Wagneriana now and then.

The first number of the new monthly journal of fine arts, called The Scottish Arts Review, has been issued in Glasgow for June. Whilst the first section and the third treat of painting and literature respectively, the second is devoted to music. This month's number contains, amongst other articles, an analysis of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's "Ode," performed at the opening of the Glasgow Exhibition; an article upon provincial musical examinations held by delegates from the various schools of music in the metropolis; a summary of the Glasgow musical season, and one of the same order for Edinburgh. The enterprise of this journal is in the hands of the artists themselves, both painters and musicians, and the object of it is to record the progress of art and to further the interests of artists in Scotland.

The Edinburgh Society of Musicians have held, since the last report, two meetings. At the first Mr. Robertson, Mus. Bac., gave a Lecture on the subject of the advisability of registration of Musical Societies in Great Britain, with a view of raising the status of the profession. At the second, held on the 17th ult., office-bearers were elected for the year as follows: Hon. President, Mr. Edmund Edmunds; President, Mr. Otto Schweizer; Vice-Presidents, Mr. G. Lichtenstein and Mr. Carl Hamilton; Treasurer, Mr. A. C. Edmunds; and Secretary, Mr. J. C. Dibdin. Mr. W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac., London, Mr. J. Seligmann, President of the Glasgow Society of Musicians, and Mr. F. Niecks, Dumfries, were elected honorary members.

In the Committee's statement for the past year, which was submitted to the meeting, it was stated that the roll of the Society contained sixty-eight names as foundation members, and that twenty-one Associates had been elected during the season.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MUSIC in our "dark sea-born city" (to quote Mr. Robert Buchanan's imaginative characterisation of Glasgow) is almost exclusively to be associated at present with the International Exhibition, now in full swing, within its bounds. The general character of the music daily discoursed in the Exhibition Building and its spacious and attractive grounds, has proved, taken altogether, to be rather higher than was anticipated, both in the selections, vocal and instrumental, which have been made, and in the manner of their execution. Following the introductory note of the Glasgow Choral Union on the opening day, there was a Concert, a week or two later, by the Pollok-shields Lyical Society (under Mr. D. McColl), with a programme of Scotch music, chorally arranged. Succeeding that came a highly satisfactory appearance on the part of the Greenock Choral Union, under the direction of Mr. W. T. Hoock, one of our cleverest local musicians. The programme of this Society, which has been recently re-constituted, and is nearly 200 strong, comprised the "Loreley" fragments—Ave Maria, Vintage Song, and Finale to Act I—and several Glee and Madrigals by Webbe, Stevens, Morley, and Macfarren, together with choruses by Wagner and Eaton Faring, and vocal solos, the latter, as also those in the "Loreley," being taken by Miss Minnie Duffus, a promising young soprano of this district.

On the 7th ult. the Glasgow Choral Union again occupied the platform with a repetition performance of the Inaugural Ode "The New Covenant." An enormous crowd was present, and Dr. Mackenzie's music, splendidly executed as it was on the part of chorus and band, and under the direction of Mr. Joseph Bradley, was accorded the warmest possible reception. The audience joined with fervour in the choral "All people that on earth do dwell," with which the Ode terminates. It is understood to be the intention of the Choral Union to give another performance of the work within the Exhibition Building, while it has been suggested that it might fittingly be included also in next year's scheme of Concerts, all which is corroborative of the view that the composition is very far removed from the character of a pièce d'occasion. Choruses from "Samson," "Engedi," and "Israel in Egypt," interspersed with solos from Mendelssohn and Handel were sung at this Concert, to the effective organ accompaniment of Mr. Thomas Berry. The next following Choral Concerts that may be referred to were, first, on the 14th ult., by Mr. J. Bogue's choir (fifty to sixty voices), with a programme of part-songs, madrigals, &c., ably rendered throughout; and, second, on the 16th, by what is somewhat ambitiously entitled the Exhibition Chorus, it being furnished chiefly from the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society, and under the charge of Mr. Andrew Myles. The programme was quite of a distinctive character, comprising specimens of rounds, madrigals, and glees, chronologically arranged.

The Paisley Choral Union (which is under the conductorship of Mr. James Barr) sang in the Exhibition Building on the 21st ult. Their programme consisted of choral selections from Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," and Handel's "Samson"; and on the 23rd ult. a choir of 700 children from the Board Schools discoursed some simple music under the direction of Mr. W. M. Miller. All the choral Concerts have been largely patronised.

The Glasgow organists are all taking their part in the daily Organ Recitals in the large hall of the Exhibition, and, generally speaking, they have large and attentive audiences. Those who have already played are Messrs. J. Bradley, Herbert Lewis, F. Turner, T. Berry, H. A. Lambeth, Alfred Heap, J. Pattinson, W. J. Clapperton, J. B. Ritchie, and W. G. Martin. Dr. A. L. Peace, who ranks so high among our organists, and who was prevented taking his intended place at the organ on the occasion of the inauguration ceremony by very severe indisposition, is to give a fortnight's Recital during July.

The annual pic-nic of the Glasgow Choral Union took place on the 9th ult., the members of the Society turning out in goodly numbers and betaking themselves to the beautiful shores of Lochgoilhead, in the "good ship" Shandon, so long identified with these pleasant excursions. Despite a somewhat threatening day, and not a little rain at departure, the trip was most successful in every respect. To each member was presented a copy of an Ode written for the occasion by the Union's own laureate, Mr. Robert Carmichael. It proved to be an exceedingly clever parody of the Exhibition Ode, with strophe, antistrophe, and epode, all in order, and preceded by a proem, the first of the two parts of which is an imitation of the old ballad "Sir Patrick Spens."

The Glasgow Society of Musicians have unanimously elected Dr. Stainer and Mr. W. A. Barrett honorary members of their body.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SUMMER term is usually marked by a series of College Concerts of considerable interest, and this year the colleges have fully sustained their reputation. The most important performances are now given in the "Eights week," during which Concerts, with full orchestra and chorus, were held at Exeter (May 29), Merton (May 31), and Queen's (1st ult.). All of them were eminently successful and most creditable to the various committees and conductors. It is almost invidious to particularise when so much was excellent, but we cannot forbear to add a special word of praise for the chorus at Queen's. The principal works performed were, at Exeter, Handel's "Acis and Galatea" and a MS. Overture by Arthur Carnall (conducted by the composer); at Merton, Cowen's "Rose Maiden" and Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony; and at Queen's, Haydn's "Clock" Symphony, a Spohr Concerto for violin and orchestra, and J. F. Bridge's "Festival Ode." The last-named work was specially composed for the occasion by Dr. Bridge, who is a member of Queen's College, and was conducted by the composer, who had every reason to be satisfied with the way in which his charming work was performed, and with the applause bestowed upon it.

Concerts on a less complete and important scale were given at Pembroke (14th ult.), Keble (14th ult.), New College (19th ult.), and Magdalen (20th ult.). C. H. Lloyd's "Andromeda" was performed at Keble, and Corder's "Bridal of Triermain" at New College. Amongst the soloists at Keble was Miss Hilda Wilson, but both Cantatas suffered much from the want of orchestral accompaniment. It may be questioned whether it is not better, when a band is not forthcoming, to fall back on a madrigalian programme, after the plan of Magdalen and Pembroke. We regret to say that the encore nuisance shows some signs of recrudescence here. At Magdalen especially the authorities seemed quite unable to protect the vast bulk of the audience from the repetitions demanded by a very small, but very noisy, knot of people at the back of the hall. Mr. Farmer's Concerts at Balliol have included a very fine performance by the Nottingham Philharmonic Chorus (May 25), and renderings of Pergolesi's "Stabat Mater" (May 27), and Mendelssohn's "Antigone" (16th ult.)

Three other performances require a word of mention. On April 26 a Concert was given in the Sheldonian Theatre by a Ladies' String Orchestra, conducted by the Rev. E. H. Moberly. The ladies played with great taste, if with little power, and Miss Liza Lehmann sang Meyer Helmund's "Mädchenlied" most charmingly. On the 13th ult. an Exercise for the Degree of Doctor of Music, by Dr. Gilbert, of New York, was performed in the same place. A curious circumstance in connection with this exercise is that it was approved more than a quarter of a century ago, but, owing to the composer's absence in America, not performed till now. The Philharmonic Society gave Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," the Finale to Mendelssohn's "Loreley," and Schubert's B minor Symphony, in the Sheldonian Theatre, on the 18th ult. Mr. Taylor, after more than twenty years' service, is now retiring from the conductorship of this Society, and the members appeared to have taken unusual pains to make his last Concert successful. There was a good deal of indecision about the leads, and the tenor chorus was poor, but otherwise the performance was really good. It is hardly needful to say that Mr. Taylor had a warm reception, and that he will carry with him into his retirement the best wishes of all who know how to appreciate honest hard work and musicianly ability.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE French capital has entirely assumed her summer aspect, and the Muse, following the fashion, has closed her several temples and departed. Only one event, in the way of public performances, comes under our notice, and that is a Concert which took place at the Trocadero, where Charles Gounod and Benjamin Godard conducted some of their orchestral and choral works. For this occasion Gounod wrote a hymn on a poem by George Boyer, entitled "Notre Dame de France, hymne de la Patrie," which was performed by the choir with accompaniment of organ and full orchestra. This hymn is a simple melody in D major within the compass of an octave, which is to be sung by a soloist, the choir in unison taking up the refrain. The hymn is preceded by a prelude of eight bars played by the orchestra, after which the solo begins, accompanied by the organ and supported by a few chords of harps and wind instruments at the end of each melodic period. In the refrain, at the end of each of the three couplets, the voice is further supported by contrapuntal work given to the altos and double basses, the rhythm being marked by drums, and in the concluding fortissimo, on the repetition of these two lines, all the strings, the harps, and the brass instruments are used to lead up to the ritornello of the orchestral prelude. It is a very effective composition, and bids fair to become deservedly popular in France. Only three parts of Benjamin Godard's choral Symphony were performed. This work has been heard in its entirety and for the first time two years ago at the Colonne Concerts, and though the French public, and French critics especially, have not been unanimous in their appreciation of it, yet we most decidedly side with such as believe the "Symphonie Légendaire" is not only one of the most original and inspired works of its composer, but of all modern French and foreign composers.

Nous avons mis en vous toute notre espérance

M. Lalo's "Roy d'Ys" holds on successfully at the Opéra Comique, and has reached the twenty-first performance. It is undoubtedly the best "drawing card" of the season, as it has the power of raising the recette of the répertoire operas, which is about £32, to £250 and even £300, every night that it is on the bills.

At the end of June the Opéra Comique also will close its doors for a time, so that for several weeks there will not be literally anything important to be registered by musical critics. Active preparations are, however, already being made for the next season and for the eventful exhibition year. Saint-Saëns's "Ascanio" is already entirely written and scored, and is to be brought out during the winter at the Grand Opéra. Massenet is also, together with Sardou, busy at the composition of a new opera which he has been commissioned to write for the Opéra to be produced during the exhibition, and at the same time he is working hard with De Grammont and A. Blau to complete a new work for the Opéra Comique. Though the newspapers have already announced the titles of these two works their authors have so far not yet decided on any, and we have good reasons for saying that nothing positive is known and cannot be known for some time to come, either as regards the titles or the chosen subjects.

At the re-opening of the Opéra Comique two new operas will soon be presented to the public: first, "Carmosine," by M. Poise, and immediately after "Benvenuto Cellini," by M. Diaz, the successful author of "La coupe du roy de Thule." Later on there is well grounded hope of hearing Godard's "Ruy Blas," though as yet nothing has been definitely arranged, and it is asserted that within the twelve months there shall also be ready a "Charlotte Corday," by Gounod. Works and workers are evidently not lacking in France. It is only to be hoped that audiences will follow them in their newer and freer fields of art, and that all reasonable innovation in musical and operatic forms may not be held back by the indifference and conservatism of the public generally and of opera-goers particularly.

Weber's "Oberon" is shortly to be revived at the Grand Opéra, with a new version of the libretto from the pens of MM. Jules Barbier and Philippe Gille, assisted by M. Victor Wilder. As to the question of the recitatives, it is probable that those added by the late Sir Julius Benedict will be made use of. "Oberon" was, it may perhaps be remembered, in course of preparation at the Opéra Comique at the time when that historical theatre was destroyed by the now equally memorable conflagration.

MUSIC IN SOUTH WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Brigend Eisteddfod, intended to be annual, was held on the 25th ult., and came up to the standard of general expectation. Lord Dunraven shows his interest in the institution by volunteering the handsome subscription towards the funds of £100 per annum for seven years. In his absence, Judge Gwilym Williams presided. The adjudicators in music were Mr. E. H. Turpin and Mr. D. Jenkins, and the accompanists Madame C. N. Davies and Miss H. Hughes. The test piece in the principal competition between choirs of more than 150 voices was "Great and wonderful are Thy works," and the prize £100 and a gold-mounted bâton for the Conductor. Five choirs sang—Blaenycwm (Mr. E. Watkins, Conductor), Dowlais Philharmonic (Mr. J. Davies), Porth and Cymmer (Mr. T. Hopkins), Port Talbot Choral Union (Mr. Vowles), Rhondda Philharmonic (Mr. D. J. Prosser). In his remarks, Mr. Turpin said he hoped the great musical talent of Wales would be saved by orchestral aid, and it was not fair such great choirs should suffer from the want of stronger instrumental support. In spite of drawbacks great feeling had been betokened in the interpretation of the music. Mr. Jenkins offered some critical remarks, and awarded the prize to Dowlais. For the best rendering of "Worthy is the Lamb," a prize of £25 and a silver-mounted bâton was offered, choirs to consist of from eighty to 150 voices. Three choirs sang, and the prize was divided between Swansea Excelsior and Tondy and Aberkenfig Choirs. The brass band competition involved the rendering of "The Village Festival." Five bands took part in this competition, and the prize went to Cwmmer Colliery Band (Mr. R. Martin).

MUSIC IN THE WEST.

THE two grand services in connection with the opening of the Western Towers of Bristol Cathedral took place on the 8th and 9th ult. The preparations for the occasion were on a large scale, a temporary orchestra being erected at the west end of the nave for the accommodation of the choir of about 600 voices, and the band, which numbered about 100. There was also an organ placed above the orchestra, so that nothing should be lacking to ensure a complete rendering of the great works selected. Immense interest was manifested in the city, and at both services there were crowded congregations. The Cathedral was lighted by electric light, the effect of which was much admired, and the coolness of it was especially appreciated by the performers. Coming to the services themselves, we may speak of them as a real musical triumph, of which Bristol may well be proud, and especially as she owes it almost entirely to the exertions of the talent within her gates. The large chorus belongs to Bristol, as well as a good portion of the band; and the Conductor, to whom so much of the success is due, is a native of the city. So that, possessing the material in our midst, and also the hand that can form it, we hope that our city may realise her own capability, and that in days to come she may be satisfied with nothing short of perfection, and that she will produce this result from her own resources. "Israel in Egypt" was given on Friday evening, the 8th ult., and "Elijah" on the following afternoon. The chorus effects in the former were simply marvellous. The "sighing" of the children of Israel was intensely real in its pathos, the opening sentence being given out by the alto with just the right quality of tone, subdued, and yet clear; and this is worthy of note, as it is a point so often missed in this work. Later on, there was a little danger of the female voices being overpowered by the men, but this entirely vanished at the "Hailstone" Chorus, of which it is impossible to conceive a more truly magnificent rendering. Band, organ, and choir responded like a single man to the enthusiasm of the Conductor, and the result was such a piece of choral singing as has never been heard in Bristol before. The same may be said of "The horse and his rider," "But the waters," and "Thy right hand, O Lord." The two choirs were exceedingly well balanced, and the chief points which forced themselves upon our notice were the distinctness of the words and the accurate reading of the score. Not the smallest point was neglected, every word was begun and ended at the right time, and the rests were silent, which is not always the case. The attack was prompt and the crescendos and diminuendos united, and this of course must be put down to the credit of Mr. Riseley.

We have purposely dwelt at length upon the work of the choir, as it was the outcome of the hard practice of seven months, weekly rehearsals having begun in November, which were altered to bi-weekly ones in January. The orchestra must have almost unqualified praise for their accompaniment, while the solos were rendered by Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Harper Kearton, Mr. Montague Worlock, and Mr. W. Thomas, of Bristol Cathedral.

Of the performance of "Elijah" we shall not give such a detailed account. It was sung at the Commemoration held in the Cathedral last year at the time of the Jubilee, and though that was an admirable rendering this last was an advance upon it. The solos were entrusted to Miss Williams, Miss Wilson, Mr. Kearton, and Mr. Santley, who showed himself still unequalled in his conception of the part of Elijah. The ladies both did extremely well, and Miss Williams almost surpassed herself in the air "Hear ye, Israel." The band gave the Overture with telling effect, and accompanied well throughout, though sometimes their pianissimos were not quite so perfect as those of the choir.

Mr. Fulford, assistant organist of the Cathedral, rendered good service at the organ, and Mr. George Riseley, of course, was the Conductor. On each day the Oratorio was preceded by a short service, intoned by the Rev. Precentor Mann, and three hymns were finely sung by the choir and congregation. It should be observed that the part of the Youth in "Elijah" was taken by one of the choristers of the Cathedral, which seems a more natural arrangement than the usual one. The Mayor of Bristol invited all the guarantors and the members of the choir to a Soirée at Colston Hall on the following Monday evening, when, in speeches by Canon Robeson, Precentor Mann, and others, the disbanding of the choir was strongly deprecated, and it was hoped that Bristol would soon again have cause to pride herself on a similar success to that just achieved, and that these services were but forerunners of many other like ones to be held in the beautiful mother church of our city.

THE Examiner's report on the papers worked by the candidates in the recent Theoretical Examination of the Society of Arts shows some very curious facts. Not one of the papers obtained full marks, but the percentage of failures being proportionately small is in itself a cause for congratulation. The number of those who are entitled to distinction in the first class this year averages twelve per cent., for the second class forty-one per cent., for the third class thirty-four per cent., while the failures only amount to about eleven per cent. This is encouraging enough, but the clearness, and even neatness, with which some of the papers have been worked is still more so. Occasionally statements have been made which, by the regularity of their appearance, seem to be traceable to a common origin. The conclusion, therefore, is that the writers have been compelled by force of circumstances to depend for their information upon books which are not only worthless, but are mischievous for their errors. Mistakes in spelling have not been accredited with loss to the writers if the information intended to be conveyed was in the main correct. Thus, when it was stated that Brahms wrote a "Villain Concerto," the fact implied was recorded in the writer's favour, and the orthography, as well as the criticism involved in the statement, were overlooked. The name of Gounod was written Guonod, Gunod, Gunoud; yet the name of Mendelssohn offered no difficulty to the spellers, though in more than one place it was stated that one of his works was the oratorio "Elizah." The biographical particulars concerning the musicians whose names were placed upon the paper were again both curious and interesting. It was stated that Meyerbeer lived between the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries; that Beethoven was born in 1770, and died in 1887; that Schumann was born in 1710, and died in 1856; that Dvorák was the name of a German opera of the seventeenth century; that Bishop was organist of Westminster Abbey and of the Chapel Royal, and that his most important work was the "Misolto Bough." The composer of "Mors et Vita" was variously stated to be Mozart, Dr. Stainer, and Agust Manns; the composer of the "Talisman" was Tallis, and in correction of the paper, one kindly wrote relative to Brahms, "You mean Brahmams, the well-known sea song writer," but offered no more information on the subject. The Examiner further states that "there are many other peculiarities which need not be specified. The teachers will learn of them through their pupils who worked the paper, and will doubtless take steps to avoid if possible their recurrence in future. There is yet something to be done in the way of teaching the proper formation of musical characters, but the style of the work done as a whole displays a distinct advance."

THE oratorios at the Cathedral of Bristol, to which reference has been made by our correspondent from the West, have not been allowed to pass without a protest from certain clergymen. A memorial with reference to the recent great musical services, at which the oratorios "Israel in Egypt" and "Elijah" were produced at the Cathedral, has been issued by three clergymen of the city and circulated amongst others of the clergy, soliciting their signatures to it, but several have declined to append their names. The memorial is addressed to the Dean of Bristol, and is to the effect that the memorialists have noticed with pain and sorrow that on the occasion of the musical services in commemoration of the completion of the Cathedral, admission to the Cathedral was only to be obtained by the purchase of books, which served as tickets of admission. They are of opinion that this is derogatory to the character and use of the Cathedral as the House of God, which should be free to all at every service, and they express the hope that on any future occasion the arrangements may be free from this objectionable feature. The objection to the payment for books of admission is rather singular from one point of view, seeing that in very recent times seats in the churches of the local Evangelical clergy have been sold in the open market, one pew sold as a freehold realising £100. At one church the pews have been known to belong by assumed right to certain houses, and to go with the change of ownership or occupancy just like the back garden. A correspondent says:—"It is rather difficult for a non-clerical mind to see how the charge of 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s.

for a copy of the service as an admission book to a great special service can be, as the memorialists say, 'derogatory to the House of God,' while the payment of a guinea a seat or pew to perpetually hear a popular parson is to be taken as a conventional arrangement which custom has so sanctified that it is an honoured if not a sanctified proceeding." He asks whether the three clergymen who noticed with so much "pain and sorrow" the necessary charge made for the books on the occasion referred to took any part, lot, or interest in these grand services, and in what way they would carry out their suggestion that "on any future occasion the arrangements may be free from this objectionable feature"?

If we are unable to say much about the so-called "Improvisatore Concert" given by Mr. Mortimer Ames, on the 20th ult., the fault will scarcely be considered to rest with us when we explain that the affair in question was not held at the room where it was announced to take place, and that it did not commence until forty minutes after the advertised time. This change was necessitated, it seems, through Messrs. Collard and Collard refusing at the last moment to permit the holding of the Concert at their rooms in Grosvenor Street, and it was only on the very afternoon that Mr. Mortimer Ames contrived to engage the Portman Rooms, and distributed telegrams right and left, to inform ticket holders of the alteration in the locale. Of his own improvisations on the pianoforte, we shall be compelled to speak another time. All we can do at present is to note the introduction by his brother, Mr. John Carlowitz Ames, of the new keyboard invented two or three years ago by the well-known Hungarian mathematician, Paul von Jankó, and now considerably in use in Leipzig, Dresden, and other German musical centres. This clever idea, which suggested itself to the inventor as a means for overcoming the difficulty of stretching long intervals on the pianoforte (his own fingers being uncommonly short), certainly presents many advantages, notwithstanding an awkwardness natural at the outset to learners who have already played upon the ordinary keyboard. The keys are arranged in four rows immediately adjacent to each other, so that all can be played on simultaneously by both hands. The fingering is essentially strange, but to compensate for this it is precisely the same for every scale, no matter what the key. The most difficult stretches and "extensions" may be accomplished with ease, such things as chromatic sixths and octaves and quick passages in chords here becoming comparative trifles to the player. For instance, Mr. Ames performed Chopin's E flat Etude on arpeggios without needing to alter in the slightest the normal position of the hand. Altogether the new keyboard possesses utility as well as interest, and though it may never replace the old one, we are prepared to see it taken up to a certain extent by musicians in this country.

CARLO BOZZA, an Italian, has just perfected a series of inventions for the application of electrical power, by means of which he telegraphs, or rather produces, at any distance, the concerted orchestral music of the great composers, or, indeed, any music. Unaided, save by a powerful battery, he plays all the instruments of a brass band to the number of thirty or forty, with the usual accompaniments of drums, tambourine, castanets, triangle, cymbals, &c., and the music is produced at any required distance from the operator. The instruments are suspended in mid-air at a distance from the performer, and separated from each other by as many feet or yards as the dimensions of the hall will permit of. Signor Bozza has made application to the managers of the Italian Exhibition in London to give his performances there. The beating of drums, gongs, bells, &c., and percussion effects upon them by electricity are by no means new, having been exhibited at various times for many years, but the playing of wind instruments has never been attempted, and most certainly never before accomplished, and Signor Bozza has wisely protected the results of his long and patient study by patent. Those who have heard his performances in Liverpool agree that the effect is extraordinary. In addition to playing the whole of the instruments of a brass band, Signor Bozza plays upon a harmonium also suspended in mid-air at a distance from him, and likewise upon a number of clarinets, piccolos, and flutes. By means of switches he plays upon any number or upon all of these various instruments together by single touches upon a spring keyboard, if a board of about 20 inches square supported upon a pillar of about 6 inches in diameter can be so termed. London should have the opportunity of judging how much of these statements may be removed from the realms of fiction to that of fact.

MR. J. T. HUTCHINSON'S Annual Concert took place on May 29 at the Holborn Town Hall. The first part comprised Handel's "Alexander's Feast"; the solos were taken by the Concert-giver and two of his pupils—Miss Mildred Harwood and Mr. W. Price. The lady was especially successful. Though obviously indisposed she sang with good taste and feeling. Mr. Hutchinson gave an impressive rendering of the air, "Revenge, Timotheus cries," and the choruses were sung by the Holborn Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Windeyer Clark. Mr. R. S. Philpot was the organist and shared the accompaniments with a small string band. The second part opened with Mr. Harvey Löhr's Motett "They that go down to the sea in ships." This work, which was reviewed in our columns some time since, is thoughtful and original, and Mr. Hutchinson is to be commended for including it in his scheme. The organ was in the hands of the composer, and the choir sang steadily under the firm beat of Mr. Hutchinson. The solo was efficiently sung by Miss Harwood. A few miscellaneous numbers followed, among which we must mention Haydn's Pianoforte Trio in G (played by Messrs. Harvey Löhr, Szczepanowski, and Hambleton), and a very clever rendering of the Quarrel Scene from the "School for Scandal" by Mr. Charles Fry, who was enthusiastically applauded.

ON Thursday evening, the 14th ult., Mr. J. M. Ennis gave a Concert at Myddelton Hall, and there was a good attendance. The only vocalists were Miss Kate Flinn and Mr. Alfred Probert. The former sang four songs, "Mazurka," "Chanson de Florian," "Last Night," and "Mädchenlied." Each of these were given with much delicacy and effect. Mr. Alfred Probert sang "Where'er you walk" (Handel), and, later in the evening, "The Garland" and "Gondolier's song" (Mendelssohn). The instrumental portion of the programme was of a high order of merit. Mr. J. M. Ennis played three pianoforte solos, Scherzo in B flat minor, Op. 31 (Chopin), Nocturne (Liszt), and "En Courant" (Godard). His execution of these pieces afforded ample evidence of his ability as a pianist; and the encore which he obtained was fully deserved. Miss Janie Hutchinson's performance of a violin solo, "Bourrée," "Gondoliera," and "Perpetuum mobile," from the Suite in G, Op. 34 (Ries), was received with much applause. The Trios for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, Rubinstein in G minor (Op. 14, No. 2) and Beethoven in C minor (Op. 1, No. 3), by Miss Hutchinson, Mr. P. Kiefert, and Mr. Ennis were also attractive items in an excellent programme. Miss Julia Allen was an efficient accompanist.

At a Meeting of music publishers, relative to the appointment of Mr. Moul as Agent-General for the British Empire of the Société des Auteurs, Compositeurs, et Editeurs de Musique, and Agence Internationale de la Propriété Artistique et Littéraire, on Monday, May 28, the following resolutions were passed. Mr. Ashdown was voted to the chair, and introduced Mr. Moul to the meeting as a chosen representative of foreign musical interests, whom he felt sure the trade would be glad to hear had been selected. The resolutions that closed the meeting were moved respectively by Mr. Thomas Chappell and Mr. Augener:—"That it is desirable to come as speedily as possible to amicable decisions with the foreign proprietors on all musical copyright matters which the Berne Convention and domestic legislation have furnished with new forms of protection." "That Mr. Alfred Moul's appointment and representation of the various foreign interests placed in his hands be welcomed and endorsed by the London music publishing trade, and that he be assisted and encouraged in every possible way to bring about the reciprocal defence and development of all commercial and artistic musical interests in those countries which have joined the International Copyright Convention."

MR. HENRY PHILLIPS gave his annual morning Concert at Messrs. Collard and Collard's Rooms on May 31, when an attractive programme was gone through to the evident delectation of a full audience. Mr. Phillips sang in artistic style the air "Shepherd, what are these pursuing" ("Acis and Galatea") and a new song called "The Milkmaid," by Miss Mary Carmichael; the latter being accompanied by the composer and encored. A prominent part was taken in the Concert by Mrs. Davis, who, in addition to singing "Ah non credea" and the final air from "Sonnambula" and Dessauer's "Le retour du promis," was associated in a duet with Mr. Henry Phillips, and the trio from "Ernani," wherein Mr. Barrington Foote took part. Madame Patey sang "Caro mio ben" and "Who is Sylvia?" and among the remaining vocalists were Miss Gigia Filippi (a talented daughter of the famous Milanese critic), Mr. Herbert Reeves, and Signor Villa. Miss Sasse and Miss Shinner played a duet by Reinecke for piano and violin, and were also heard in solos for their respective instruments; Miss Annette Lotinga recited, and Miss Carmichael accompanied throughout in her usual tasteful manner.

SOME excellent music was heard at the morning Concert given by Madame Sophie Löwe and Miss Mathilde Wurm at Princes' Hall on the 12th ult. The most important item in the programme was the earlier set (Op. 52) of Brahms's "Liebeslieder-Walzer," for vocal quartet and piano accompaniment for four hands. This charming "cycle" of pieces has not been heard so often of late, and the graceful music was listened to with an enjoyment that found frequent expression in cordial applause. The voice parts were capitally interpreted by Madame Sophie Löwe, Miss Lena Little, Mr. Robert Kaufmann, and Mr. Herbert Thorndike, while Miss Mathilde and Miss Alice Wurm executed their task at the pianoforte with neat and facile skill. Miss Matilde Wurm, who is making distinct progress in her art, gave an intelligent and interesting rendering of Schumann's "Carnaval," and was likewise heard with good effect in shorter pieces by Bach, Scarlatti, Chopin, and Rubinstein. Each member of the quartet above-named sang solos, Madame Sophie Löwe's comprising Beethoven's "An die ferne Geliebte" and four songs by Robert Franz.

THE United Richard Wagner Society (London Branch) held its annual Conversazione at the Princes' Hall on Tuesday, the 19th ult. There was a crowded and brilliant attendance of the members and their friends, and the proceedings passed off pleasantly enough. Regarded from the standpoint of pure Wagnerism, however, the musical programme left a good deal to desire. The "Siegfried" Idyll and the "Träume," for small orchestra, were performed as the composer wrote them, under the skilful direction of Mr. Carl Armbruster; but selections from "Götterdämmerung" and "Die Meistersinger" were given with pianoforte accompaniment only. Miss Pauline Cramer, Mr. W. Nicholl, and Herr Carl Mayer deserve praise for their earnest efforts as the principal executants. Choruses from "Rienzi" and "Der Fliegende Holländer" were sung with purity of intonation and strict attention to the nuances by the choir of the Hyde Park Academy of Music. The London Wagner Society has greatly increased in numbers of late, and we understand that its next public performance will be an Orchestral Concert in St. James's Hall.

A PIANOFORTE Recital was given by Mr. E. H. Thorne, at the Princes' Hall, on Saturday afternoon, the 23rd ult., in which he was assisted by several of his pupils. There are few English musicians who occupy a higher position than Mr. Thorne, and as an executant he is a thoroughly sound and trustworthy guide to young pianists. Besides playing Beethoven's Sonata in D (Op. 10, No. 3), and pieces by Sullivan and Bennett, he introduced a new Sonata Elegie from his own pen. This work is in the key of A minor, and shows the hand of a musician on every page. In order to preserve its elegiac character it is necessarily somewhat serious in tone, but by no means too sombre, and the theme of the second movement, which stands in the place of a Scherzo, is very fresh and melodious. An Andante con variazioni must also be praised on account of its clever workmanship. It would be invidious to single out any of the students who appeared, as they all evinced the proficiency which can only come of good training.

AN experimental performance of Balfe's operetta "The Sleeping Queen" was given privately, on the 21st ult., with a view to testing its suitability for a provincial tour. Miss Fusselle sang the music of the Queen effectively, although she failed to realise the dramatic significance of the character; Mr. Gawthrop, as Philippe, displayed a charming voice and natural qualifications for opera which will be improved by experience; and Mr. Frank May sang and acted the part of the Regent with considerable spirit and humour. The most artistic performance was, however, that of Miss Mary Willis as Agnes. Her singing was refined and musically, and her acting highly intelligent, displaying considerable promise. The accompaniments were effectively given by a trio of strings and pianoforte, played by Miss Willis, Miss Edith Willis, and Mr. George Calkin, and the stage business was efficiently directed by Mr. Charles Fry.

THE forty-eighth performance of the Musical Artists' Society was held at Willis's Rooms on the 2nd ult. The principal instrumental works were a Pianoforte Quartet in G, by Miss Olivia Prescott; a Sonata in E minor, for pianoforte and violin, by Dr. Swinnerton Heap; and a Septet in D, for pianoforte, wind, and strings, by Mr. Aguilar. We are only able to speak of the first of these, which is the best effort we have yet received from the composer. The motto, "Be happy since God is good and friends are kind," prepares us for the generally cheerful character of the music. The Scherzo is especially winning, and was warmly encored. Mr. St. John Lacy has well caught the spirit of the time in his setting of Alison's quaint verses, "There is a garden in her face" (1606), and the song is effectively written for baritone voice. We can also speak favourably of a canzonetta for violoncello, in B minor, by Mr. Walter Wesché.

THE tenth Concert of the Westminster Orchestral Society was given on Wednesday, the 6th ult. A lengthy selection from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," comprising the Overture and six of the solo numbers, occupied the first part. Obviously the interpretation of these rested chiefly in the hands of the vocalists, whose efforts may be described on the whole as creditable. An Italian pianist, Signor Benedetto Palmieri, displayed a large amount of energy and technical skill in some reminiscences of Verdi's "Otello," but he must be heard in pianoforte music of greater artistic value before an opinion can be pronounced as to his real abilities. The second part included Beethoven's "Prometheus" and Mozart's "Figaro" Overtures. This Society has advanced itself by the work done during the past season, and we hope its progress will be continuous.

THE Streatham Choral Society has recently concluded a very successful second season, during which two Concerts have been given at the Assembly Room, Streatham Common, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Stewart Macpherson. The programmes have included Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" and Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," besides smaller works, amongst which may be mentioned two charming part-songs by Mr. Walter Macfarren, who was present at their performance. Mr. H. C. Banister read a highly interesting paper to the members of the Society on the "Life and Works of the late Sir George Macfarren," who was the first President of the Society. Mr. Macpherson's work in connection with the Society has met with cordial support, the members showing their appreciation of his services during the season by presenting him with a handsome silver-mounted ivory bâton.

MISS SOPHIE LINDEN gave a very successful Concert at the Steinway Hall, on Wednesday evening, May 30, and was heard with marked favour in several well selected airs, the list including Logé's "Relics," Henry Klein's "Love's rebuke" (the accompaniment to which was played by the composer), and the aria "Roberto tu che adoro," from Meyerbeer's "Roberto il Diavolo." The Concert-giver also had the assistance of Mdle. Adelina Bordogni (who created a special effect in a very pleasing new song, with a cleverly written accompaniment, entitled "Fleurette," from the pen of Mdle. L. Bordogni), and also of Miss Helen Armstrong, Mrs. Elwyn, Miss Bessie Furze, and other competent vocalists. The programme was varied with some violin solos, played by M. Jacques Haakman; some pianoforte solos, contributed by M. Henri Logé, and some recitations given by Mdlle. Dith.

A PERFORMANCE of Flotow's Opera "Martha," was given at St. George's Hall on the 23rd ult. before a large audience. Miss Clara Leighton and Miss Jeanie Rosse efficiently represented the vivacious Maids of Honour, Lady Harriet and Nancy; Mr. Valentine Smith's experience with the Carl Rosa Company enabled him to give an admirable rendering of Lionel, both vocally and dramatically; Mr. Charles Victor was an acceptable Plunkett, and the subordinate parts were played by Mr. H. G. Harper and J. B. Dumbell. The band and chorus were both excellent, the latter especially distinguishing themselves by throwing life and action into their stage business. The staging of the opera, together with the training of the chorus, reflected great credit on Mr. Henry Baker, who conducted throughout with much skill and discretion.

THE Meistersingers have opened their beautiful new Club House in St. James's Street, and have already given two Concerts in their elegant music room, each under the able direction of Mr. A. J. Caldicott. At the second, besides some English glees given by a choir of selected voices, a blind Spanish guitar player, Señor Manjou, delighted the club with his extraordinary transcription for his instrument of Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, and other pieces expressively executed; a violin solo by Tivadar Nachez; a violoncello solo by Mr. Leo Stern; and songs by Mr. Herbert Thorndike, Mr. Percy Palmer, Mr. Lloyd James (a new tenor from Birmingham), and Mr. Franklin Clive. It is intended to form a male voice choir to perform part-music, such as the "Œdipus" and "Antigone" of Mendelssohn, and Gadsby's "Alcestis."

IN the Report of the Annual General Meeting of the Music Publishers' Association, among other matters mentioned concerning the work done by the Society there is a note of warning which it may be as well to place before our readers. It appears that it is not generally known that by virtue of the 5 and 6 Vic., cap. 45, sec. 2, the sole and exclusive liberty of making manuscript or other copies of copyright works is vested in the owner of such copyright, and any other persons making such copies without the permission of the said owner render themselves liable to heavy penalties or damages. It may be mentioned also that the transposition of copyright songs into other keys is an unlawful copying. Considering that most of the useful pieces of music are published at a very cheap rate, it seems scarcely worth while to risk so much to save so little.

MR. CHARLES GARDNER'S annual Matinée Musicale, at Willis's Rooms, on the afternoon of the 9th ult., had an attractive programme, and a large audience attended. To musicians the most interesting item was Beethoven's recently published Trio in G, which was given for the first time as the composer wrote it—that is to say, for pianoforte, flute, and bassoon. The Concert-giver was assisted by Mr. W. L. Barrett and Mr. W. Wootton, and the effect was decidedly curious and picturesque. The work possesses little value save as a curiosity, but it deserves to be heard occasionally if only to show from what small beginnings Beethoven's genius gradually developed itself. Among the artists who took part in the Concert were Madame Belle Cole, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Herr Josef Ludwig.

AN interesting Matinée was given by M. and Madame Breitner at 1, Belgrave Square, on the 11th ult. It will be remembered that M. Breitner, a former pupil of Herr Rubinstein, played on several occasions at the Musical Union eight or ten years ago. He is an executant of great ability, though he sometimes sacrifices refinement to mere display, and produces unpleasant tone by a too ponderous touch. Madame Breitner is a capable violinist, with a pleasant, highly finished style. Their programme included Brahms's Trio in C minor (Op. 101), in which they were assisted by M. Hollmann; a somewhat dry Sonata for pianoforte and violin by M. Saint-Saëns (Op. 75), and Rubinstein's favourite Sonata in D (Op. 18), for pianoforte and violoncello.

THE June Chamber Concert of the Royal Academy of Music was postponed from the 16th to the 23rd on account of the death of the Emperor of Germany, and the programme opened with the Dead March in "Saul," played on the organ by Dr. Steggall. Among the most promising of the students who appeared were Miss Isabelle Girardot, who was heard in two tastefully written songs by Mr. Frank Idle; Miss Blanche Powell, in Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute"; and Miss Greta Williams (Westmoreland scholar) in a ballad, much above the average of its class, by Mr. Henry J. Wood. High commendation is due to the ladies' choir, who gave a beautifully finished rendering of Schubert's 23rd Psalm, under the direction of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie.

The opening of the East London Institute of Music, under the principalship of Mr. George J. Sumpter, was celebrated by an inaugural Concert, given at the Town Hall, Stratford, on the evening of May 31, under the patronage of the Mayor, George Hay, Esq. A large audience assembled for the occasion and a programme of a miscellaneous order was executed by well-known artists, together with several professors and students at the new Institute. Particulars are not called for: it will suffice to say that the Concert served its purpose admirably, being in all respects a success, and bringing into conspicuous notice an undertaking that merits and will doubtless receive substantial local support.

THE members of the Grosvenor Choral Society gave their 196th monthly Concert at the Grosvenor Hall on Friday evening, the 15th ult., when a miscellaneous selection was given. Among the part-songs, "The Rainbow," by Tours, was the most justly appreciated, and great success awaited Mr. H. J. Wood's new semi-chorus, "Twas in the beauteous month of May," conducted by himself. The soloists were Miss Amy Burton, Miss Charlotte Hanlon, Mr. Owen Roberts, Miss Ullithorne (with two brilliant violin solos), all first appearances at these Concerts, Mr. Nye, and Miss Kelly. Miss B. Poirin gave two pianoforte solos. Mrs. T. P. Frame accompanied, and Mr. David Woodhouse conducted.

THE second of Messrs. Ludwig and Whitehouse's Chamber Concerts took place at the Princes' Hall, on the 13th ult., when a programme framed on the "Popular Concert" model was presented to a numerous audience. The instrumental works were Brahms's second Sextet in G (Op. 36), Beethoven's Rasoumowski Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3), Haydn's Trio in E, and Boccherini's familiar Violoncello Sonata in A. Praiseworthy performances were given of these, the Concert-givers being assisted by Messrs. Collins, Gibson, Heydrich, and Leo Stern, and Mdlle. Jeanne Douste. The necessary vocal relief was pleasantly supplied by Miss Lena Little.

THE fifth annual Festival of the Association of Tonic Sol-fa Choirs was held at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, the 16th ult. The programme embraced a choral contest for choirs of mixed voices, a grand performance of Mozart's Twelfth Mass, with full orchestral accompaniments, and Organ Recitals by Messrs. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., F. Proudman, E. F. Cowick, and Miss F. Klickman. Mr. L. C. Venables conducted the Concert, and Mr. H. W. Weston was the Organist. During the evening the first performance of the open-air ballet "Midsummer Night's Dream" was given, and was well received by a large audience.

A VERY successful Concert was held on Monday, May 28, at Princes' Hall, in aid of the funds of the Poor Jews' Temporary Shelter. The programme was formed and the arrangements efficiently carried out by Mr. James Castello and Mr. F. H. Harvey Samuels. Songs were well rendered by Misses Adela Meyers, José Sherrington, A. A. Levy, and Birnbaum; Messrs. S. J. Spurling and Iver McKay. The instrumental music, exceedingly well executed, was provided by the Misses Ellen Eldridge, A.R.A.M., Copland, and Powell, and Messrs. L. H. and R. L. Powell.

MADAME MADELINE HARDY gave a morning Concert at Willis's Rooms, under influential patronage, on the 16th ult. Besides the bénéficiaire herself, there appeared in the programme the names of Miss Eleanor Rees, Miss Meredyth Elliott, Miss Hilda Wilson; Messrs. Percy Palmer, Sidney Santon, Henry Guy, Sackville Evans, and Richard Temple as sustaining the vocal element; while instrumental solos were contributed by Mdlle. Marie Ernst (violin), Mdlle. Clara Eissler (harp), and Miss Kate Cheyne (pianoforte). Recitations by Miss Blanche Leigh and Mr. Reginald Sumner. Mr. Turlie Lee accompanied.

MADAME MINNIE HAUKE, after the third act of the tenth anniversary performance of "Carmen," at Covent Garden, on the 22nd ult., in which she repeated her matchless impersonation of the heroine, was presented with a splendid testimonial subscribed for by several ladies, including Madame Bizet, widow of the composer. The testimonial is a wreath of laurel and oak leaves in solid gold, bearing the inscription, "Presented to Madame Minnie Hauk in commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the first production of 'Carmen' in England, June 22, 1878." Few testimonials have been better earned.

MR. OSBORNE WILLIAMS gave his annual Concert at St. George's Hall, on the 5th ult., when a well varied programme was presented. The Concert-giver was assisted by Madame Rose Hersee, Miss Minnie Wassall, Miss Adelina Hibbert, Mrs. Goode, Miss Winifred Williams, Mr. Reginald Groome, Mr. Stanley Smith, Mr. Mallett, Mr. S. S. Barker, and several pupils. Mr. Williams's new Coronation March, for eight hands, was enthusiastically encored, and special successes were made by Madame Rose Hersee in Rode's Air with Variations, and by Mr. Charles Fry, who gave three recitations.

THE 232nd Consecutive Monthly Concert of the St. George's Glee Union took place on the 1st ult., in the Pimlico Rooms, Warwick Street, S.W., under the direction of Mr. Joseph Monday. The solo vocalists were Madame Madeline Hardy, Miss Annie Matthews, Miss Jeanie Rosse, Mr. Sidney Santon, Mr. T. W. Page, Mr. W. H. Webb, and Mr. James Budd. Mdlle. Eléonore de Burgh played two pianoforte solos. The part-singing included glees, &c., by Pinsuti, John Wilbye, Bishop, Mendelssohn, Eaton Fanning, Martin, and Schumann. Mr. F. R. Kinke was the accompanist.

MR. AND MRS. HENSCHER announced two of their agreeable Vocal Recitals at the Princes' Hall on the 1st and 18th ult., but on account of the Court mourning the second was postponed until the 27th, just too late for notice in our present number. On the former occasion Mrs. Henschel made her first appearance since her severe illness, and we were glad to notice that her voice was in nowise affected; indeed, she has never sung more charmingly. Among the items of a very interesting programme were some rarely heard airs from Handel's operas and five numbers of Schubert's beautiful "Winterreise."

A VERY successful Service of Sacred Song was given on Wednesday evening, the 13th ult., in Eltham Congregational Church. The choirs of the churches of the Loop Line Association united in rendering the following Anthems: Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, "Come, let us sing"; Gounod's Ave Verum, Mendelssohn's "How lovely are the messengers," and Smart's Te Deum in F. The chorus consisted of about seventy voices. Mr. Francis Adams, of Bexley Heath Congregational Church, presided with efficiency at the organ, and Mr. Storrie, of the Eltham Church, conducted.

ON Friday, the 22nd ult., Dr. Stainer entertained the Vicars and Assistant-Vicars Choral of St. Paul's to dinner, at the Albion Tavern, on the occasion of his leaving the Cathedral. Several complimentary speeches were made by Mr. F. Walker, Mr. Kempton, Dr. Martin, and Mr. Barrett, the latter presenting Dr. Stainer, in the name of the Vicars Choral, with a magnificent painting of the "Pool of the river Thames at evening," by Charles J. de Lacy, taken from near Rotherhithe, and having a distant view of the dome of St. Paul's. On the same day, at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Cathedral, Mr. Salisbury and Mr. Hewitt, on behalf of the Deputy-Choirmen, presented a set of musical tubes, accompanied by an address, both of which were accepted and acknowledged by Dr. Stainer.

THE students of the Highbury and Islington Organ School and College of Music gave a Concert on Wednesday, the 6th ult., in the large Hall of the Highbury Athenæum, before a crowded audience. A special feature of the programme was a Cantata for female voices, by Godwin Fowles, F.C.O., given by the choir, the solos being taken by the Misses Johnson, Addington, and Dingley. Miss Berrie Stephens conducted, and the accompaniments were played by Miss Emily Free.

ON May 28, too late for notice in our June number, the Hornsey Wood Musical Society gave a Smoking Concert at Hornsey Wood Tavern. The programme was a lengthy one, and we have not space to notice it in detail. It must suffice to say that the selection comprised many of the popular songs of the day, varied by a pianoforte solo and a vocal quartet. Mr. P. L. Deighton was Musical Director, and Messrs. Barnard and Bambridge presided at the pianoforte.

A PERFORMANCE of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was given on the 6th ult., at Chelsea Congregational Church, Markham Square. The choir was largely augmented, and the choruses were very effectively given. The solos were sung by Miss Laura Cater, Miss Annie Layton, Mr. A. Howden Tingey, Mr. E. Humphry, Mr. Joseph Catten, and Mr. Alfred J. Layton. The accompaniments were played by a stringed orchestra and the organ, at which Mrs. A. J. Layton presided.

A PERFORMANCE of Sacred Music was given at St. Mary's Boltons, on Sunday, the 17th ult., in place of the usual voluntary after Evensong. The performers were Miss Marie de Lido, Herr Waldemar Meyer, and Mr. Abdy Williams, the Organist of the Church. The programme included an aria from Bach's Passion Music, with violin obbligato, solos for violin by Meyer and Thorne, and Bach's Toccata in F, for organ. The choir also took part and sang Richardson's Anthem "O how amiable are Thy dwellings."

MR. AND MRS. STANLEY MAYO gave their first Concert of this season at St. James's Hall on the 16th ult. Among the performers who most distinguished themselves were Misses Agnes Meyers, Isabel Cooper, Alice Severn, Louise Line, Grace Stroud; Messrs. Walter Barker, James Fairbrother, and J. B. Hardwicke. The débütantes were Miss Louie de Caston, Miss Florence Rosemere, and Miss Mary Howard. The pianists were Madame Williams and Miss Ada Marguerite Edwards.

MISS EMILIE LLOYD, a rising and talented young contralto, gave her first Matinée Musicale at 30, Grosvenor Square (by permission of Mr. and Mrs. A. Wynne Corrie), on the 19th ult. She was assisted by Mrs. Mary Davies, Madame Laura Zagury, Miss Adèle Myers, Miss Eleanor Falkner, Miss Millward; Messrs. Harper Kearton, William Nicholl, Edward Griffin, Robert Hilton, Frank Arnold, and Carlo Ducci.

MR. FREDERICK S. MARSH, Assistant Organist of Hampstead Parish Church, gave an Organ Recital at St. Barnabas Church, Kentish Town, on Saturday, the 16th ult. The programme was made up of selections from the works of Bach, Handel, Guilmant, Salomé, Sterndale Bennett, F. E. Gladstone, and W. S. Hoyte. The vocalist was Mr. William A. Marsh. There was a large congregation.

THE Kyrle Choirs, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of the "Creation," on May 30, at St. Jude's Church, Kensal Green. Soloists: Mrs. Bartholomew, Mr. Reginald Groome, and Mr. W. G. Forington. A second performance of the Oratorio was given on the 6th ult. in St. Peter's Church, Clerkenwell. Soloists: Mrs. Stanesby, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Albert Orme. Mr. E. H. Turpin accompanied on the organ.

"THE CAPTIVES OF BABYLON," an Oratorio by Geo. Shinn, Mus. Bac., Cantab., was performed on the 4th ult., at St. Luke's Church, Bermondsey, by a band and chorus of 100 performers, under the direction of the composer. The solo parts were well sustained by Madame Jarratt, Miss Leah Marchant, Mr. W. F. Gellatly, and Mr. Robert Poole. Mr. Arthur J. Crabb presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. F. G. Shinn at the organ.

ON Tuesday last the Directors of the Birmingham Town Hall unanimously appointed Mr. W. Perkins as organist, vice Mr. Stimpson retired. Mr. Perkins, who is a young man of marked ability, was for several years organist of the Swedenborgian Church, at Handsworth, near Birmingham; but for some time past he has filled a similar post in London.

AN interesting and novel musical representation is to be given in Manchester this month. A Russian National Opera Company, with a band and chorus of 120 performers, under the direction of Herr Wilhelm Spaczek, will perform, in their native speech, Glinka's Opera "Life for the Czar." The result of the performance will be watched with considerable curiosity.

THE Free Scholarships in the Music School under Miss Macirone, in Baker Street, have been awarded by Mr. Walter Macfarren as follows:—The Senior School Scholarship to Charlotte Mark; the Junior School Scholarship to Ethel Shepard; the Exten Scholarship, to pupils of the Music School only, to Clara Haines; and the prize for excellence in harmony to Eleanor Lassell.

AN Organ Recital by Mr. Thomas Pettit, Organist of St. Peter's Church, Cranley Gardens, South Kensington, was given on Monday, May 28, at Messrs. Henry Jones and Son's Organ Factory, Fulham Road, to test the capacities of an instrument just constructed by the above firm, under the personal supervision of Mr. Pettit, for the Parish Church, Stour, Staffordshire.

MISS WAKEFIELD is about to contribute to Murray's Magazine a series of popular articles upon "The Foundation Stones of English Music," the first of which appears in the number for the present month. Miss Wakefield is specially anxious to advocate the more frequent performance of works by old English composers, whose achievements are far too seldom recognised at the present day.

MR. EDWARD A. COOMBS, Organist and Musical Director of Beckenham Congregational Church, gave a Recital on the fine organ at the People's Palace on Saturday, the 16th ult., when he rendered an attractive programme to a very large and appreciative audience. The Recital commenced with the Dead March in "Saul" in memory of the late Emperor of Germany.

A MOST successful Organ Recital was given by Mr. W. G. Wood at St. Michael's, Bowes Park, N., on Monday evening, the 11th ult. The programme included Mr. Wood's Introduction and Allegro in D, Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata in B flat (No. 4), and Beren's Fantasia in C minor. During the evening a selection of choral music was rendered in an efficient manner by the choir of St. Michael's.

It has been suggested that as the pianoforte makers are an important body in London, it would be advisable to form a Section or Committee of the London Chamber of Commerce, to look after, in particular, the interests of the pianoforte trade, should a sufficient number of firms join the Chamber to warrant its formation.

A BAZAAR took place on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th ult. in Holloway Hall, in aid of a fund for the establishment of a Musical Institute in connection with the Finsbury Park Musical Society. There was a good attendance, and the entertainments were very well executed and amusing. About £500 were realised.

A COMPETITION of tenor vocalists for the Joseph Maas prize was held at the Royal Academy of Music on Thursday, the 22nd ult., when it was awarded to Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys. The adjudicators were Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Mr. Charles Lyall, and Mr. W. A. Barrett.

A CONTRACT between Mr. Barton McGuckin and Mr. Carl Rosa has been made whereby Mr. McGuckin rejoins the Carl Rosa Opera Company in August next for the new season 1888-9. He will appear, it is said, in the English version of Halévy's opera "La Juive."

THE "Royal Albert Hall Choral Society" will, by command of Her Majesty, be known in future under the style and title of "The Royal Choral Society."

THE Queen has been graciously pleased to select for the honour of knighthood Mr. Charles Hallé and Dr. John Stainer—honours well deserved and reflecting distinction on the whole profession.

ON Tuesday, the 5th ult., at St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey, an Organ Recital was given by Mr. Edward Harvey, Organist of Holy Trinity, Lee. Mr. John Garratt was the vocalist.

REVIEWS.

The Fairies' Isle. A Cantata for female voices. Words by Edward Oxenford. Composed by Battison Haynes. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WE have frequently drawn attention to the conspicuous merits of Mr. Haynes's compositions, chiefly for the organ, and must now compliment him highly upon his contribution to a class of music in greatly increasing demand. Mr. Oxenford's libretto is simplicity itself. The peasant maidens of Sicily make an annual pilgrimage to a rocky island supposed to be the home of the sea fairies, in order to propitiate these beings on behalf of their fisher relatives and friends. Each maiden brings away a shell, which is supposed to act as a charm against all disasters during the coming year. The music, in ten numbers, is laid out for three solo voices and three-part chorus. In general it is graceful and refined in character, and though the voice parts are by no means difficult the composer has taken care to distribute the interest between each part, and the flowing and independent pianoforte accompaniment greatly enhances the effect. Measures in triplets predominate, and there is a pleasant suggestion of the sea in almost every number. "The Fairies' Isle" is certain to please the young vocalists for whom it is intended.

There is a Shadow. Ballad composed expressly for Madame Christine Nilsson, by M. W. Balfe.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS delightful and expressive ballad was sung by the gifted prima donna on the occasion of her farewell to the public in the Royal Albert Hall last month, an event which forms the subject of a special notice in another column. The air is sweet, flowing, and natural, and like most of Balfe's songs is exactly fitted for effective singing. The accompaniment is most artistic and helpful, and the song will delight not only the admirers of Balfe's music, but also will give much pleasure to the lovers of melody from whatever source it may emanate.

Musical Pictures, an opening to the Study of Harmony. By Isabella C. Fletcher. [William Reeves.]

THESE musical pictures place in a very attractive form some of the truths required to be known by students of harmony. They will be valuable to those who desire to know those truths for the purpose of better understanding the powers of music. Serious students will have to approach the matter more seriously. Still the little pamphlet is pleasantly written and may be read with profit by all interested in musical composition.

Joyful Songs for Sunday School and Home.

[Sunday School Union.]

THE collection called the "Voice of Praise," from which the present little book is compiled, has already been made the subject of favourable comment in these columns. It is therefore only necessary to call attention to its existence, and to say that it contains two hundred melodies, soprano and alto parts only, with all the words, published for twopence in paper covers.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE mortal remains of Ludwig van Beethoven were removed from the suburban churchyard of Währingen to what it is to be hoped will prove their final resting-place, at the Central Cemetery of Vienna, on the 22nd ult. They were laid next to Schubert's, and close by the empty grave of Mozart. There was an immense concourse of spectators in addition to those officially engaged in the ceremonies—musical societies from various parts of Austria and Germany, representatives of the town of Bonn, the composer's birth-place, and others—the hearse being, moreover, followed by over two hundred carriages. Dr. Angerer, the popular Assistant-Bishop of Vienna, supported by a large number of priests, performed the Funeral Service, after which Herr Lewinsky, one of the leading actors of the Burg Theater, delivered a brief but impressive oration. The musical performances forming part of the proceedings had been entirely selected from the works of the great master whose memory they were intended to honour. There was afterwards a gathering of the professors of the Conservatoire under conditions curiously associated with the memory of Beethoven. By the will of a great professor of counterpoint, a sum of money was left quite recently to the Conservatoire in order that its professors should all sup together on Beethoven's anniversary or on some other day devoted to his memory. This testator was Herr Marxsen, of Altona, the master in his art of many great living musicians, and among them of Brahms. He died not long ago at the age of eighty-three, and his life curiously connects the modern composers with the great founders of the German school. He was a pupil of Von Seyfried, who was a constant friend of Beethoven, and who had known Haydn and Albrechtsberger intimately.

Wagner's most characteristic music-drama, "Tristan und Isolde," was performed, for the first time on Italian soil, on the 2nd ult., at Bologna, and was received throughout with enthusiasm, a fact which is the more noteworthy considering the uncompromising character, both musically and dramatically, of the work. The translation of the book was by Signor Arrigo Boito, and Signor Martucci conducted the most carefully prepared performance.

At the Weimar Hof-Theater a three-act comic opera by M. Gevaert, the Director of the Brussels Conservatoire, has just been brought out with much success. The opera is entitled "Quentin Durward," the libretto being founded on Sir Walter Scott's novel of the same name, and the music is described in German papers as most fascinating and melodious. It may be added that the work, though written thirty years ago, has never been performed outside the composer's native country before.

The following paragraph, which appeared in a recent number of the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, is scarcely calculated to increase that journal's otherwise well founded reputation for the general accuracy of its statements. "The Royal Opera of Berlin," our esteemed German contemporary informs its readers, "has accepted, for performance at no distant date, Dr. Mackenzie's Opera 'Nadeshda.' The composer, who, in the room of Sir Arthur Sullivan, is now the director of the London Conservatorium, is a brother of Sir Morrell Mackenzie, the physician of our Kaiser." The Neue Zeitschrift would be well advised in submitting similar random paragraphs concerning English matters to its able London representative before publication.

The first performance, at Munich, of Richard Wagner's early opera "Die Feen," had been fixed for the 29th ult.

It is announced in Dutch papers that the well-known musical society going by the name of Felix Meritis, at Amsterdam, founded in 1788, has ceased to exist.

Encouraged by the undisputed success of his completed version of Carl Maria von Weber's operatic fragment of "Die drei Pintos," Herr Mahler has resigned his position as second Capellmeister at the Leipzig Stadt-Theater, and is now devoting his efforts entirely to the composition of a grand German opera, constructed on the lines indicated by Weber in his operatic masterpiece "Euryanthe."

An Austrian nobleman, Count Eberhard of Württemberg, a well-known patron of musico-dramatic art, has written an opera "Der Schalk von Castilien," which has been accepted for performance at the Theater an der Wien, in the Austrian capital.

Signor Arrigo Boito, the successful composer of "Mefistofele," has at length completed his long-expected new opera, entitled "Nero," which is to be the great novelty next season at the Theatre Della Scala, of Milan.

M. Camille Saint-Saëns has nearly completed a new opera which is to be entitled "Benvenuto," the libretto, by M. Louis Gollet, being founded upon a novel from the pen of Paul Meurice.

Liszt's oratorio "Saint Elizabeth" is to be performed this month by the Sing-Akademie of Jena.

M. Gounod celebrated his seventieth birthday on the 17th ult.

A one act vaudeville by Gluck, entitled "Les amours champêtres," was recently revived at the Vienna Opera in connection with the unveiling of the Maria Theresa statue. The interesting work was composed in 1756, when Gluck was Capellmeister in the Austrian capital, and is said to be full of melodious charm and gracefulness.

The Swedish Parliament has refused to grant in the future the annual subvention hitherto accorded to the Royal Opera at Stockholm.

Madame Johanna Jachmann-Wagner, the eminent dramatic singer and niece of Richard Wagner, has resigned her professorship at the Musikschule of Munich, and will shortly establish a training school for dramatic vocalists at Berlin.

Dr. Gustav Gunz, for many years the leading tenor at the Royal Theatre of Hanover, and highly esteemed also as a Concert singer (he being especially an unrivalled interpreter of the Evangelist in Bach's Passion Music), has quitted the lyric stage for a professorship at the Hochschule Conservatorium at Frankfurt, an institution which, despite of active and legitimate competition, continues to flourish.

The death was announced last month at Leipzig of Hermann Hirschbach, composer and musical critic, aged seventy-six. The deceased artist was a friend of Robert Schumann to whose journal, the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, he largely contributed in his younger days, wielding a most able and severely critical pen. In addition to some fifty published compositions, Hirschbach has left behind him a surprising number of manuscript works, amongst them two complete operas, numerous overtures, concertos and chamber works, as well as fourteen grand symphonies, none of which has ever been publicly performed.

Constantin von Holler, musical author and composer of some merit, died on May 27, at St. Petersburg.

Professor Carl Riedel, the highly esteemed Conductor of the famous Leipzig Gesangverein bearing his name, and for many years president of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein, died at Leipzig, on the 3rd ult.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HENRY LITTLETON.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Will you allow me to add to Mr. Bennett's sympathetic notice of the late Mr. H. Littleton that appeared in this journal last month, an anecdote which displays the perseverance and frank character of the man whose premature death is indeed a loss to music.

Mr. Littleton was a member of the Executive Committee of the "Sir John Goss Memorial Fund." In that capacity he showed much zeal, and gave valuable advice as to the course to be pursued in sundry difficulties that came up. Among other troubles we had that unusual one, an embarras de richesses. The question as to the disposal of this surplus excited much contention; various schemes were put forth for the solution of the unexpected difficulty. Eventually these became narrowed down to two, both of which, it was contended by the respective partisans, would satisfy the subscribers to the Fund as doing honour to the memory of that distinguished organist of our Metropolitan Cathedral. Mr. Littleton identified himself with one of these plans. With much persistence and skill he argued for its adoption, and he had on his side several influential members of the Committee. But after much discussion and consideration this scheme was rejected, and the Committee determined by a majority of votes to recommend to the general body of subscribers that the surplus, amounting to about £120, be paid over to the Trustees of the Goss Scholarship Fund at the R.A.M. to augment the annual interest available for the students' fees. The difficulty was thus regarded as settled, and the confirmation of the Committee's recommendation looked upon as a matter of course. But Mr. Littleton, though fairly beaten, was not satisfied; like some other famous Englishmen, he quietly determined to persevere, and not rest contented with the defeat in Committee. As Honorary Secretary to the scheme the whole matter had considerably exercised me, and I was glad that a decision had been arrived at. On a Sunday afternoon, the day before the unveiling of the Memorial in the Cathedral, and subsequent to the general meeting of subscribers, Mr. Littleton paid me an unexpected visit. To my surprise he said, "Mr. Southgate, I am not satisfied with the vote we came to on Friday last, and I am sure Sir Arthur Sullivan (our Chairman) thinks with me. I am going to try and upset it at the meeting to-morrow afternoon; but as I did not think it fair to take you unprepared, I have called to tell you the course I intend to take." I reminded him that I was but an executive officer and that the time was too short to let the members of the Committee know of his new opposition, but that I thanked him for his courtesousness in letting me know his intentions, and that I could not but admire his pluck and determination to take no unfair advantage. To complete my recital, I may say that on the morrow, Dr. Stainer presiding over the meeting, despite an admirable speech Mr. Littleton made, his scheme was formally rejected, and the other plan carried by a small majority of votes. At the close of the proceedings he said to me: "Well, I made a good fight for it, and still think I ought to have succeeded. I am not often beaten."

This tale may possibly help to show the inherent pertinacity, pluck, and straightforwardness of him whose loss his many friends mourn, and whose sterling English character will not readily be forgotten by those who knew him.—I am, yours faithfully,

T. L. SOUTHGATE.

THE MINOR NOTATION OF THE TONIC SOL-FA SYSTEM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I think Dr. Pole misconceives altogether the objections which Tonic Sol-faists have to Mr. Sedley Taylor's "improvements." The whole question resolves itself into one of mental relation. If it is granted—and few musicians would demur, I imagine—that there is a certain quality, or character, or individuality—call it what one will—attached to each note of the diatonic scale which distinguishes it from all the rest, then, were we able to analyse the cause of this, we should probably find out why we prefer our present tonic and the diatonic succession of notes built upon it in preference to any of the other "modes" once in vogue. But the truth is that, notwithstanding all that science has done in investigating the basis of musical expression, we are as far off as ever from a confident perception of its real nature—vibration being the result, not cause, of music. Now, in using the syllables Doh, ray, me, fah, sol, la, te, in any key, a certain mental quality, distinct for each (as has been already explained) is consciously present; but why there should be such a thing no man can tell, or why this order is most satisfying. It pleases the ear, that is all, and Doh (the tonic in all major keys) "impresses" us as ruling all the others. Immediately there is a change to the minor, we recognise the ruling power of Lah; it is minor, in fact, only because of this central relation to Lah, although the note itself need not be prominently present, any more than the major tonic is in a passage such as the following, which every ear recognises as major—

If Doh, therefore, were suddenly called upon to do duty for Lah, as Mr. Sedley Taylor insists upon, nothing could be more confusing to the perception of that mental effect referred to, or more opposed to the principles of Sol-fa. All the firmness and substantiality characteristic of Doh in such a tune as "Hearts of oak" would have to be discovered from it in, say, "John Anderson, my Jo," for it is to be observed—what both Mr. Taylor and Dr. Pole appear to have overlooked—that you may name as much as you like, but it is quite another matter to have the thing. To give the Sol-fa names written beneath to such a succession of notes as that quoted by Dr. Pole on page 268 of your May issue, and here reproduced, is simply to wrest from them their ordinary meanings and import with them others quite different—doh tah law soh fah ma ray doh.

Is there a single one of these notes which to the ear has the characteristic usually attached to it? Not one. Every name is a contradiction, and the cause of inevitable confusion when the same names are applied to the major scale. Lastly, both Mr. Taylor and Dr. Pole appear to have only the tonic minor in view. What benefit in the world could be derived from using the names in their double capacity in such a passage as follows?

SYDENHAM TOUCH REGULATOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Some weeks ago out of curiosity I purchased one of the above, and I am so delighted with its utility that I consider it a duty as well as a pleasure to direct the attention of musicians to this apparatus. It is no mere toy, but a genuine touch regulator, which, without injuring the pianoforte in the very least, is capable of producing a touch of any weight, and it is so simple that any one can apply it. Mr. Sydenham is an utter stranger to me, and my only object in writing is to call attention to an invention which cannot fail to become a great boon to all pianists and organists in the practice of their technical exercises.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

H. A. HARDING, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Sidmouth.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur. Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

BARMOUTH.—The best way is to practise the Scales with a due observance of the relation between tones and semitones.

PHILOMELOS.—1. Copyright lasts for forty-two years from the day of publication. If the author is alive at the time of expiration, then copyright is continued for the remaining term of his life, and for seven years after. 2. BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

BECKENHAM, KENT.—An amateur Concert was given in Christ Church Lecture Hall on May 31, arranged and conducted by Mr. F. W. Partridge. Solos were creditably delivered by Mrs. J. L. Partridge, Messrs. J. Gordon Langton, R. Murray Hyslop, and F. W. Partridge, whilst Miss Gertrude Fox delighted her audience with poetical and prose recitals. These were interspersed with pianoforte pieces by the Conductor and his talented colleague, Mr. Sydney Sheppard, who also accompanied the choruses. But the pièce de résistance was certainly Anderton's Wreck of the Hesperus, which was rendered in a manner which at once revealed careful training.

BLACKBURN.—At Chapel Street Congregational Church on Sunday, the 17th ult., special services were held in aid of the Schools, the Anthem in the morning being "Praise the Lord" (Dona Nobis), from Mozart's 12th Mass, and at the evening service Mendelssohn's Hear my Prayer (the solo part being sustained by Miss Thornborough) was given by the choir, consisting of thirty-six voices, under the direction of Mr. S. Thornborough, Organist and Choirmaster.

BLAINE.—An excellent performance of The Messiah was given on the 19th ult. by the English Congregational Church Choir, Mr. Thomas Williams, Conductor. The principal soloists were Miss S. A. Jenkins, Mr. R. C. Jenkins (Llanely), Mr. H. Williams, and Master R. Williams. The choir has already performed Judas Maccabæus and obtained considerable local reputation.

BRIGHOUSE.—The golden wedding of Mrs. Sunderland, once a famous soprano singer, who retired from the profession a quarter of a century ago, was celebrated at Brighouse on the 7th ult. She was presented with an address and a silver casket. A Concert was given, speeches were made, and the whole celebration, hearty and sincere, was indicative of the just pride the Yorkshire folks take in their great people.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—On the 14th ult. Dr. Stainer's St. Mary Magdalen was given, with full orchestral accompaniment, in St. Mary's Church, the principal vocalists being Madame Lita Jarrett, Miss Snape, Rev. A. W. Ivatt, and Mr. Frederick Pattie. Mr. G. C. Richardson (St. Augustine's, Highbury) presided at the organ, and Mr. T. E. Richardson (Organist of the Parish Church) conducted. The choruses were well rendered by the choir of the church, assisted by members of the Choral Society. Dr. Henry led the band with great ability.

CAPE TOWN.—At St. Paul's Church, Rondebosch, Cape Town, an Organ Recital was given by Mr. T. Barrow Dowling, Organist of St. George's Cathedral and Conductor of the Suburban Choral Union, on Thursday evening, May 3, when, besides the Fourth Organ Sonata of Mendelssohn, pieces by Sterndale Bennett, F. E. Bache, Batiste, Dr. Rinck, J. S. Bach, and Henry Smart were given in a satisfactory manner.

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z.—The large hall of the Young Men's Christian Association was well filled on April 18, on the occasion of Miss Stratton making her début in Christchurch, New Zealand, as a pianist. The compositions she selected were of a character well calculated to display her abilities and to show that she had been well taught. Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor, which, however, seemed to offer no obstacles to her facile fingers, Schumann's Fantasia in C, Presto Scherzando of Mendelssohn, Impromptu Fantasia of Chopin, and the Adagio and Allegro of Beethoven's Sonata in A (Op. 101) were all played from memory, with a crisp freedom that did not prevent accuracy. Miss Stratton's last selections were Hiller's "Alia Marcia," W. Sterndale Bennett's Andante Capriccioso, and Arthur O'Leary's Romance in E flat minor, given with dashing brilliancy.

CLECKHEATON.—Mr. S. Midgley, of Bradford, who has for two years gratuitously conducted the performances of the Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society, has been presented with a silver-mounted bâton bearing a suitable inscription, in recognition of his services. Mr. Midgley has been the life and soul of musical progress at Cleckheaton, and the members of the Society were warm in their acknowledgment of his valuable assistance.

DEMERARA.—The report of the Committee of the Musical Society for the year ending April 30, 1888, is encouraging to the cause of music. It states that the number of members has considerably increased, but the list of active members has not increased in the same ratio as that of ordinary members. The want of voices in all parts of the chorus is still noticeable, and the Committee would urge all members who are able to take a part to give their musical aid to the Society. Although it was contemplated that some complete works would be given during the year, it was found impossible, from sundry causes, to carry this out. At the Jubilee Concert in September last, through the courtesy of a Society in Trinidad, the Committee was enabled to give selections from Mackenzie's Jubilee Ode, to which were added some other new compositions specially written for the celebration of Her Majesty's Jubilee. This Concert was attended by a large and appreciative audience, and proved a great success, the Society being considerably indebted to the talented young lady who undertook the principal solos. Selections from Barnett's Cantata The Ancient Mariner, together with miscellaneous pieces, vocal and instrumental, were given at another Concert, the whole performance, especially the orchestral portion, being very successful.

DRAYTON, NEAR OXFORD.—On Thursday, the 14th ult., the new organ, built by Mr. C. Martin, organ builder, of Oxford, for the Parish Church of St. Leonard, Drayton, was opened by Dr. Roberts, Organist of Magdalen College, Oxford. There was shortened Evensong, followed by a sermon by the Rev. Canon Paget, D.D., of Christ Church, and a Recital on the organ by Dr. Roberts.

GREAT BERKHAMSTEAD.—At a special service at the Parish Church of St. Peter's on St. Barnabas' Day, the 11th ult., the Church Choral Society performed Dr. Garrett's 43rd Psalm, for contralto solo and chorus, and Mendelssohn's Motett Hear my Prayer. The solo in the former was sung by Miss Janet Tatham, and in the latter by Master Herbert Defty, of Mr. Stedman's choir. Mr. F. Gatward officiated at the organ, playing at the close Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor. The Rev. C. J. Langley conducted.

ILFORD, ESSEX.—Thursday, the 7th ult., being the Dedication Festival of the Parish Church, after the evening service Dr. John Stainer's Cantata The Daughter of Jairus was performed by the choir, under the direction of Mr. Fred. J. Brand, the Choirmaster. The solo parts were admirably rendered by Mr. Herbert Clinch (tenor), Mr. H. S. Dean (bass), and Master Defty (soprano). The choruses were very creditably performed. Mr. Henry Riding, F.C.O., presided at the organ.

KILLALOE, LIMERICK.—An Organ Recital was given in St. Flannan's Cathedral on the 15th ult., by Mr. Charles Haydn Arnold, Organist and Choirmaster. The programme included Mendelssohn's First Organ Sonata (Op. 65), Andante in G (Léfebvre Wély), Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Bach), Romanza in D minor (W. T. Best), "Hallelujah," Mount of Olives (Beethoven), "Worthy the Lamb" (Handel). The vocalists were the Misses B. and A. Twiss, Rev. J. Kempston, and the Cathedral Choir.

LEEDS.—Encouraged by the reception accorded to selections from his own compositions during the last popular holiday, Dr. Spark repeated several of these items on Saturday night, the 16th ult., before an audience quite filling the Victoria Hall. The examples performed included the Marche Triumphale in D ("Sardanapalus"), which was originally written for a full orchestra; "The Lake," composed some years ago for the purpose of illustrating the peculiarities of the beautiful little echo organ that was added to the Victoria Hall organ some years since; a Concertstück in A minor and major, written for the Leeds Musical Festival in 1874; and the old Vesper Hymn, with variations and fugue. As a tribute to the memory of the deceased German Emperor two further productions of the Borough Organist were replaced by Beethoven's Funeral March, composed on the death of a hero, and an equally appropriate selection from Chopin.

LLANGATTOCK.—A second district Festival was held on the 20th ult. at Llangattock. About 200 singers were present at Talgarth, and at the second festival that number was exceeded. The hon. secretary was the Rev. John Price, Llanvegan.

PAIGNTON.—The Ipplepen Deanery Choral Union, formed in connection with the Exeter Diocesan Choral Association, met at Paignton on the 6th ult. There were 227 voices, together with a few lady members, present, the choirs coming from Paignton (St. John the Baptist), Dartmouth (St. Saviour's and St. Barnabas), Stoke Fleming (St. Mary's), Torre (St. Saviour's and All Saints'), and Torquay (St. Mark's). There was the ordinary Evensong with anthem, the music being taken from the "Anglican Festival Service Book, 1888," of the Choral Association. Mr. Roylands-Smith, the diocesan Choirmaster, was the Conductor. Mr. F. L. Harris, of Paignton, presided at the organ with much taste and skill. The special Psalms were xvi. and cxlvii., being set to chants by Dr. Harding of Sidmouth and Dr. Edwards of Barnstaple. The music to the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis was by Mr. C. Harford Lloyd, and was written for a festival of choirs in Tewkesbury Abbey, 1882. It was carefully interpreted, as was Goss's powerful and melodious Anthem, "Stand up and bless the Lord your God."

PILTON, SOMERSET.—On the 14th ult. special Choral Services were held in the Parish Church on the occasion of the opening of the new organ, which has been built by Messrs. Norman Bros. and Beard, of Norwich. Mr. Mills, Organist of St. Andrew's, Bath, gave a Recital in the afternoon, and presided again at the organ for the evening service. The instrument stands in the chancel, and is remarkable for occupying a very small floor space. The bellows and mechanism are arranged immediately above the console, and the connection between keys and sound boards is by tubular pneumatic action.

SWANSEA.—Much interest has been taken by local lovers of music in the production of a new comic opera, in two acts, entitled The Rustic, the libretto by Mr. Albert H. Siedle, and the music by Mr. W. F. Hulley. The plot is very simple. Simon Daw, a miserly old farmer, has "one fair daughter, and no more," whom he wishes to dispose of to the highest bidder, personified, for the time being, by one Crotchety Vellum, a lawyer. This lawyer, some twenty-five years previous, had stolen or concealed a child, the heir to an earldom and great estates, and placed him with Farmer Daw, under whose roof he has resided; and, as is usual on the stage, he loves and is beloved by the farmer's daughter, Margie. Feeling noble aspirations within he determines to go out into the world to seek his parents, and departs amidst the tears and regrets of all his fellow servants, dairymaids, and farm hands. In the second act we see him settled in the family house in Grosvenor Square, in full possession of his estates and title, Earl of Fitz Altamont. His former farm companions have entered his service as flunkies and wear a handsome livery. They regret the absence of former friends, and are consequently delighted by the information that Farmer Daw and all his belongings are coming from Dawkin Farm to spend the day with the earl. They come accordingly, and the dairymaids are surprised, and in a way deceived to find the gorgeous flunkies no other than their old friends the yokels from the farm. Mr. Vellum, the lawyer, is also invited, that his villainy may be exposed in the presence of them all. He gets rather roughly handled, but is rescued by the devoted affection of Aunt Priscilla Daw, the old farmer's spinster sister. Meantime Farmer Daw, having "sold" his daughter to the earl for £5,000 down, all ends happily after mutual confessions and forgiveness. Mr. Hulley's music is bright and tuneful and, as might be expected from his knowledge of stage requirements, always appropriate to the various situations. The orchestration is rich in mass, and varied and piquant in detail; in short, the whole score bears the stamp of an accomplished and experienced musician. The opera was first performed on April 19 and 20, and was reproduced subsequently, the approval of the audiences increasing with each performance, until it reached a pitch of genuine enthusiasm. One notable and interesting feature is the fact that all persons concerned, including author, composer, principal vocalists, and chorus, and the orchestra of twenty-eight performers are all Swansea residents and principally amateurs. The leading parts were taken by Miss Eileen Flynn (Crotchet) and Miss Marian Hyde (Priscilla Daw, spinster), Mr. W. J. Murphy (Reuben), Mr. Fred. Tunbridge (Crotchety Vellum), Mr. A. H. Siedle (Simon Daw), and Mr. H. Siedle (Bob Beanstalk, principal Yekel), and all the other parts, as well as the chorus, were well and efficiently rendered. The orchestra, with Mr. J. Squire as leader, is becoming a considerable feature in all Swansea music. The production of the opera and all the rehearsals have been under the personal superintendence of Mr. W. F. Hulley, the composer, whose skill as a Conductor is well known in Wales. Altogether it has been a great success, and we hope soon to hear of its production farther afield, where its beauties and the undoubted talent of the composer will have a chance of being more widely and generally recognised.

TALGARTH.—A district Festival of the Brecon Archidiaconal Choral Union was held at Talgarth on the 13th ult. General and district festivals are held in alternate years, the former in Brecon and the latter in various parts of the Archdeaconry.

TENBURY.—An interesting extra Concert of miscellaneous music was given by the Musical Society on the 19th ult., in the Corn Exchange, under the conductorship of the Rev. John Hampton. Songs, glees, and part-songs by Bridge, Calcott, Hatton, Silas, Pinsuti, Smart, Macfarren, Sullivan, and Mendelssohn, with instrumental pieces by Handel, Gurliett, and John Hampton were given with good effect by Miss Ayscough Smith, Mrs. H. B. Hunt, Misses Matthews, Mrs. Wroth, Mrs. Hill-Lowe, the Rev. A. T. Powley, Messrs. Williams, Miles, Higginson, Morris, and Anstice. Mr. R. C. Bailey played a flute solo successfully, and the singing of the choir was marked by refinement and expression.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—Mr. J. Maughan Barnett gave his second annual Pianoforte Recital in the Pump Room on the 16th ult. His programme included Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, Variations Sérieses, Mendelssohn: Nocturne, Studies in C minor, A flat, and G flat, Polonaise in A flat, Chopin; and other pieces by Schumann and Liszt. Miss Percy Douglas contributed songs by Brahms, Cowen, and Gustav Ernest.

WALSALL.—On Trinity Sunday, after Evensong, Mendelssohn's Heary my Prayer, together with selections from Handel's Messiah, were performed at the Parish Church, the choir being largely augmented for the occasion, together with a band of instrumentalists led by Mr. Whitehouse. Miss Minor took the solos. Mr. H. W. Rogers conducted, and Mr. W. Keay, Organist of the Church, presided at the organ, each with their accustomed ability. Handel's "Occasional Overture" and "The March of the Jewish Warriors" were given by full band and organ.

WARWICK.—The Musical Society brought a very successful season to a close on May 31 with a performance of Van Bree's Cantata St. Cecilia's Day, and a miscellaneous selection. The Cantata was given with full orchestral accompaniments and was extremely well rendered, the whole being marked by true artistic refinement. The Hon. Mrs. R. H. Lyttelton (Miss Edith Santley), who resides in Warwick, and who is always ready to further the cause of music in the place, sang the solos, which seemed singularly adapted to impress the audience with the beauty of her voice and style. The chief feature in Part 2 was the playing of the band, all local amateurs, save the leaders of each division, who had been got together, drilled, and perfected by Mr. W. H. Bellamy, the talented Conductor, who has done so much for the music of this place since his appointment to the Collegiate Church here. The instrumental items were Overture to Tancredi (Rossini), Trio, piano, violin, violoncello (Mendelssohn), Intermezzo for strings "Loin du Bal" (Gillet), "Wedding March" (Mendelssohn). The rest of the programme consisted of part-songs by the Society, which gave evidence of the careful training given by Mr. Bellamy.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Stephen Richardson, Organist and Choirmaster to St. John's Episcopal Church, Perth.—Mr. F. NEW SACRED CANTATA

BY THE COMPOSER OF "A DAUGHTER OF MOAB."

HADASSAH, QUEEN OF PERSIA

WORDS BY LEWIS S. JONES

MUSIC BY

ISAAC ANDREW.

This Cantata will be welcomed as a most attractive work for Choir Festivals, Anniversaries, Concerts, &c., and is suitable for performance at any time of the year. Its bright choruses, beautiful solos, and melodious duets are certain to make it the most popular Cantata ever published.

RUTH

WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Ruth" is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"Ruth" has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilt's Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

PERFORMED IN THE TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM,
ON TWELVE OCCASIONS.

Vocal Score, paper cover, 2s.; ditto, paper boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 4s.

THE VILLAGE QUEEN

A PASTORAL CANTATA FOR TREBLE VOICES

WRITTEN BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

COMPOSED BY

CHARLES VINCENT,

Mus. Doc., Oxon.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

"Dr. Vincent has arranged his music so as to fully satisfy the dramatic needs. There are airs, duets, choruses with instrumental festal music, all of the brightest and most attractive patterns. The whole of the music is of the most interesting character, and some of it, as for example, the opening choruses 'Awake, awake,' 'Behold the day,' the Finale 'For long shall we remember,' the duet 'Yes! sleep no more,' the songs 'Let the merry fites,' 'O nightingale,' and so forth, are far above the dead level of conventional interpretation which the character of the words would seem to inspire. Altogether the Cantata is well worthy of the notice of those who are in search of novel and pleasing things of its kind."—Musical Times.

"The music is in Dr. Vincent's bright and genial style, wholly free from pretention and affectation, just original enough to avoid being commonplace, easy to sing, always fresh, and sometimes even sparkling. There are evidences of sound, serious musicianship underlying the light and merry exterior, so the Cantata claims the right of popularity on more than the score of mere tunefulness, of which important quality it can nevertheless boast its full share. For a ladies' school concert or a choir of ladies it can be warmly recommended."—Musical Standard.

"It is the simple story of the crowning of a May Queen, and the music is as simple as the story. It is one of a series of Cantatas for female voices, published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. (London). If all the rest of the series are as melodious as Dr. Vincent's contribution, they will need no other recommendation. The movements in 'The Village Queen,' while they are thoroughly English in the character of their themes, have a variety of treatment which is sufficient to sustain the interest of the listener to the very last bar of the work."—Manchester Guardian.

SHORT SETTINGS

OF THE

OFFICE FOR THE HOLY COMMUNION

(INCLUDING BENEDICTUS AND AGNUS DEI)

FOR PAROCHIAL AND GENERAL USE

EDITED BY

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price One Shilling each.

Church-music which is modern in form, interesting to a choir, and devotional in effect, whilst also of easy execution and of moderate compass for the voices, is certainly much needed in these days when choral societies are almost universal. This want is specially felt with regard to music for the Office of Holy Communion, and it is hoped that these services will be found well within the capabilities of an ordinary choir, yet not wanting in an effort to give due expression to the solemnity of the words.

CONCONE'S LESSONS

NEW EDITION

WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

50 Lessons for the Medium part of the Voice.

25 Lessons (Just Published). A Sequel to the Fifty Lessons for the Medium part of the Voice.

40 Lessons for Contralto.

40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone.

The sterling value and great usefulness of Concone's Lessons have been so long recognised and so generally admitted, that their extensive adoption caused, as a natural consequence, the issue of numerous editions in almost every country where the study of the Art of Singing is cultivated. No edition, however, which has hitherto come under my notice, seems to me as correct, complete, and reliable as it should be.

I have endeavoured to rectify this deficiency by adding in the present edition signs of expression and phrasing, where I considered it expedient to do so, completing, and in some cases altering, the breathing marks, and altogether carefully revising the whole work.—ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

TUNES FROM "THE HYMNARY"

BY

J. POWELL METCALFE.

Price Fourpence.

PREFACE.

There is an ever-increasing conviction that decency and order are better promoted by the singing than the saying of the Offertory Sentences—and that not only in our larger, but in our smaller churches as well. In the latter the adoption of the desired use is to a great extent prevented by the anthem character of the music employed in the usual offertory setting.

The following arrangements are more especially intended for the use of those choirs who, not being regularly trained in anthem-singing, are accustomed to rely on the tunefulness, form, and compactness of the hymn-tune for aid in fitly rendering the words they sing.

“I have inspected the Upright Pianofortes of Messrs. CHALLEN & SON, and have much pleasure in giving my unqualified approval of them.

“I consider that, for purity of tone, touch, and good workmanship, they will favourably compete with Upright Pianos made by any other English firm, and superior to most of those of foreign manufacture. Their cheapness should also bring them within the reach of everyone.

"GEMS OF THE OPERAS" CONCERT COM-

PANY. MR. JOSEF CANTOR, at the close of another season, begs leave to draw attention to the phenomenal success achieved by this organisation, which has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. In such musical centres as Leeds, Manchester, Huddersfield, Bradford, Halifax, Preston, Bolton, Dewsbury, Blackburn, Oldham, and at Mr. Spark's well-known Worcester Subscription Concerts, the reception accorded to this unique and interesting programme has proved gratifying in the highest degree, whilst the Press have unanimously pronounced these Concerts to be amongst the most successful and artistic of those at present before the public. The opinions of such important provincial journals as the Manchester Guardian, Leeds Mercury, Yorkshire Post, Manchester Examiner, Preston Herald, Bradford Daily Telegraph, Liverpool Mercury, &c., embolden this Concert Company in the belief that, should they be able to extend their operations over a wider area, a yet more emphatic series of successes would assuredly follow.

The répertoire embraces Selections from thirty different Operas, including "Tannhäuser," "Mefistofele," "Nadeshda," "Esmeralda," "La Gioconda," "Irene," "Carmen," "Oberon," "Talismano," "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Martha," "Lily of Killarney," &c., &c.

The personnel comprises from twenty to twenty-five Artists, all of whom are thoroughly competent Soloists. Selections are also introduced from the lighter compositions of Balfe, Wallace, Clay, Offenbach, Suppé, Cellier, Audran, and the Gilbert-Sullivan series.

Mr. Cantor is now booking dates for the ensuing Season, and will be pleased to forward full particulars, specimen programmes, &c., on application.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

PRESIDENT—THE REV. SIR F. A. GORE OUSELEY, BART.

The Musical Association was founded in 1874 for the investigation and discussion of subjects connected with the art, science, and history of Music. It is similar in its organisation to the various learned societies. The members consist of practical and theoretical musicians (professional or amateur), as well as those whose researches have been directed to the science of acoustics, the history of the art, the construction of instruments, or other kindred subjects. The meetings are held at 27, Harley Street, W., on the first Monday in each month from November to June inclusive, when papers are read and a discussion follows. At the close of each session a report is sent to the members giving a transcript of the papers and discussions.

A prospectus of the Association will be sent on application to the Assistant Secretary.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

AUGUST 1, 1888.

THE LONDON MUSICAL SEASON.

ONCE more the rolling seasons have brought about the time when, according to custom, it is necessary to pause and to review the past, with the knowledge of the present, and with high hopes for the future.

The year's musical activity began in October with the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts. At the opening meetings works by English writers were admitted to places of honour. Sullivan's "Golden Legend," George J. Bennett's Concert-Overture "Jugend-träume," which by its well-ordered melody and clever scoring showed that he had not gone back on his path since the production of his Serenade; Mr. Goring Thomas's Suite of Ballet Airs, Mr. Hamish MacCunn's Concert-Overture "Land of the mountain and the flood," his clever ballad for chorus and orchestra "Lord Ullin's Daughter," Mr. Charlton Speer's "Day dream," Mr. T. Wingham's Concert-Overture in F (No. 4), with other pieces, represented English art among the varied and attractive items of which the programmes were composed.

The Handel Festival, held at the Crystal Palace in June, was both musically and financially successful. There is little opportunity for intending patrons to judge the possible quality of the performance they are likely to get other than through rumours which may be spread concerning the character of the rehearsals of the London Choral contingent, under the competent direction of Mr. Manns. Extra rehearsals were held, and many things were done with a view to improvement. The consequence exceeded the highest expectations. The chorus singing was superb, and the band worthy of the highest praise. The solo singers were well selected, and the whole performance, not only of the familiar "Messiah" but "Israel in Egypt," was far above the average as yet attained. Many of the pieces introduced into the programme on Selection Day were new, and all were interesting, as well for their own merits as for the excellent manner in which they were given.

The work of the standard Choral Societies during the past year has been well maintained. The Royal Albert Hall Choral Society gave ten Concerts during its seventeenth season, beginning with Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and including in its scheme "Israel in Egypt," "The Creation," "The Messiah" (at Christmas, on Good Friday, and Ash Wednesday), "Faust," by Berlioz; "Elijah," and Verdi's "Manzoni" Requiem. By request of the Queen, who attended a performance of "The Golden Legend," the style and title of the Society is changed, and it is to be known henceforward as the Royal Choral Society. The Sacred Harmonic Society also made changes during the past year, not in its designation, but in its arrangements, to fit in with modern requirements. The day of meeting has been altered from Friday to Thursday, and the hour from 7.30 to 8. For many years this singular hour of assembling was kept up, and many a singer, believing that the Concerts commenced as most other Concerts did, has found himself cut off from his opening aria if it began before eight o'clock. The committee of the re-organised Society appear to be anxious to fit their ways with popular inclination, and all who have the good of music at heart will wish them heartily success. There was no lack of either spirit or enterprise in their plans for the past year. They produced Bottesini's "Garden of Olivet," Cusins's "Jubilee Cantata," Cowen's "Ruth," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Rossini's "Moses in Egypt," and "Elijah."

The performances given at Novello's Oratorio Concerts were high over the average of excellence. The chorus singing was crisp, tuneful, and intelligent, and the splendid band of the Society gave a good account of the several works produced. A particular interest was attached to the early productions during the season by the variety of readings afforded to the audience by the several conductors. Mackenzie's "Jubilee Ode" and Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" were conducted by Mr. Randegger; "Ruth," produced for the first time in London, was under the direction of the Composer, Mr. F. H. Cowen. In like manner Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," revived after a period of years, and Stanford's Irish Symphony had each the composer as Conductor. Besides these works, Sullivan's "Golden Legend," "Rose of Sharon," and Gounod's "Redemption" were performed. The three last Concerts were under the able direction of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, the composer of the "Rose of Sharon."

The Monday Popular Concerts have continued to attract large audiences, though very little of novelty has been offered by way of temptation to the outside public. It is something, of course, to be able to enjoy excellent performances of standard works by well-known players; still, it could be wished that it were possible to import an element of variety into the arrangements. There must be other executants equally competent to present intelligent versions of the examples of chamber music which form the repertoires of these Concerts as well as those who are constantly engaged. The frequent change of vocalists has been found to be satisfactory, why not an occasional change of quartet players?

The Chamber Concerts given by Messrs. Ludwig and Whitehouse, Mr. Dannreuther's Musical Evenings, Mr. Charles Wade's Chamber Concerts, the "Lothians" Orchestral Concert, at which some of the compositions of Mr. Hamish MacCunn were brought forward, all mark continued interest and possible development.

The recitals upon the newly invented instrument, the clavi-harp, though they did not wholly succeed in converting all the harp-players into a belief that the invention will supersede the time-honoured method of performance of one of the oldest forms of musical instrument in existence, at all events demonstrated that the minds of those who are bent upon improvements have not been inactive.

In the interpretation of orchestral works the Richter Concerts have maintained their acquired position. Those who have read the records from time to time in these columns know this without the fact being further insisted upon. The chorus which has been employed occasionally for works which have formed part of the plan has not satisfied any requirements. The body itself is ill-balanced, uncertain in attack, untuneful in its utterances, and in all respects the very antithesis of the character of the orchestra. The Concerts have been well patronised, and appear to be growing in favour, even though some of the Wagner extracts which appeared in the programmes have lost the glamour they may have possessed. It is a pity that the intentions of the composer could not be respected, and such things be reserved until they can be given with the necessary stage surroundings. That Wagner is at his best under dramatic conditions was proved conclusively by the reception accorded to his early Symphony, given under the direction of Mr. Henschel, at the Symphony Concerts. The right of performance in London was restricted to this institution, and it was played to empty benches. Those who expected great things from it as music, were disappointed, as it proved to be a pale reflection of Beethoven and Mozart, ornamented with aggressive instrumentation. It is not necessary to recapitulate the details of these Concerts, as they must be fresh in the memories of those who were interested in them. It will suffice to say that, artistically, they were counted successful, but financially they were unprofitable. They were undertaken as an experiment for two successive seasons. That period is at an end, but it is rumoured that a third season is to be tried. Truly, after this, it would be unreasonable to declare that there is no enthusiasm among those who believe in the destiny of musical art.

Enthusiasm for art has been shown by both rich and poor. It will be sufficient to demonstrate this by calling to mind as evidence the successful festival at Walthamstow, which took place in a building erected for the purpose of music by an ardent patron of the art, Mr. J. F. H. Read, himself a composer of no mean merit, and the Concerts given at the People's Palace at Mile End, where the chief executants are formed from among poor but most earnest lovers of music. Among the matters showing the activity of the lovers of music in various directions, mention may be made of the Concerts of the Strolling Players, the Westminster Orchestral Society, the Stock Exchange Amateur Orchestral Society, and the Royal Orchestral Society, which has the Duke of Edinburgh as President. All these are doing good work in helping to advance a knowledge of the masterpieces of musical art in their highest forms.

The Borough of Hackney Choral Association, the Highbury Philharmonic Society, the Finsbury Choral Association, and others, are to be commended for their exertions in fostering the love of music in "the outside centres of the great metropolis." The organ recitals and musical performances at the Bow and Bromley Institute have called forth followers to their example. It is no uncommon thing now to have organ recitals in churches and chapels, and the eagerness with which they are attended proves their value.

The work of the societies and associations which have formed the patterns for most of these suburban bodies may be briefly touched upon in order to complete the record of the year. The Philharmonic Society, incidentally mentioned above, continued its useful labours, this time earning enough to obviate the necessity of making any demand upon the guarantee fund. Mr. F. H. Cowen conducted the former series of the Concerts, and Johan Svendsen the latter. The season was made memorable by the appearance of Edvard Grieg, who brought some of his own clever and original orchestral works to a hearing, and demonstrated conclusively an unusual amount of skill, tact, and sympathy in conducting the orchestra.

The Sarasate Concerts have been among the best patronised of the season. The programmes have been excellent, and the performances no less so. The interpretation of Mackenzie's Violin Concerto by the gifted Spanish artist was one of the things which will be long remembered in connection with these events.

Pianoforte recitals have been numerous enough, but the public interest in them has become slackened if not severed. Miss Fanny Davies, Madame de Pachmann, and Mr. Charles Hallé have been the most successful in securing large audiences. The Beethoven Cyclus by Dr. Hans von Bülow was an admirable illustration of the player's power, but the audiences were scant and few, and not even Madame Sophie Menter was able to command full attendances at her Concerts. The list of prodigy pianists and players, including the clever Bauer family, was augmented by the addition of the name of Otto Hegner. He gave several recitals, during which his special musical qualifications were displayed to full advantage. Like young Hofmann, who was the little lion of last year, he was made much of, and was permitted the distinct honour of an appearance at the Philharmonic Concerts. He also gave one or two orchestral Concerts during the season. A young violinist, Henri Marteau, who appeared at the Richter Concerts, may be also mentioned as among the prodigies of the season. Chief among the detached orchestral Concerts were those of Mr. W. G. Cusins, whereat Señor Sarasate appeared; the Concert given by M. Ovide Musin, when a new Concert-Stück in the form of a Serenade by Leopold Damrosch delighted the audience.

The Bach Choir Concerts, under Dr. Stanford, have been continued. At one the famous Mass in B minor was repeated, and at the others miscellaneous works of some of the older writers preceding the great Cantor, and of a few of those who followed his school in later times, were given. A particularly novel feature was provided in the revival of Purcell's early opera "Dido and Æneas," which attracted much attention. These, besides others whose undertakings have been already spoken of, form a fairly good record of musical enterprise during the season.

Apparently the most hazardous speculation of all was that undertaken by Mr. Augustus Harris, supported by a syndicate of "rich men furnished with ability." The task of reviving the glories of Italian opera in its ancient home at Covent Garden Theatre, which they undertook, was a bold one even with the strong support received. Still, the result proved a justification of their hardihood. Italian opera had been mourned as dead, its obsequies had been solemnly performed, and its requiem sung. Long essays had been written to show that it could not possibly exist any more, that the conditions necessary to its life were wanting, and that it had passed into history. It appears, however, that this season it has jumped into life, like the hero in the poem when—

Somebody, one day, came to me and said
That somebody else had somewhere read
In some newspaper, as how you was dead :
"I've not been dead at all," says Jack Robinson.

The credit of the revival of opera in Italian is entirely due to the spirit in which the matter has been conducted by the clever manager, Mr. A. Harris, acting for the Syndicate. In the first place, he produced only those operas whose popularity was secured. Beginning with "Lucrezia Borgia," he passed on with "Carmen," "La Traviata," "Faust," "Don Giovanni," "Rigoletto," "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Le Nozze di Figaro," "Il Trovatore," "L'Africaine," "Les Huguenots," "Lohengrin," "Il Flauto Magico," "Fra Diavolo," "Un Ballo in Maschera," "Aida," "Mefistofele," &c.—that is to say, five French operas, four German operas, and eight Italian operas, sung by a company composed of American, French, English, Norwegian, Russian, Spanish, and Italian artists, all singing in what was accepted as the native tongue of the latter group. It is satisfactory to be able to say that the financial success has been taken as an encouragement to try the experiment once more in London next season, and to induce the manager to organise a travelling company for performance in the provinces of opera during the autumn and winter months. The revival of interest in favour of opera has been due to two causes. First, to the excellence of certain of the male vocalists of the company. This is especially to be noted, as one of the causes of the decadence of the opera as a speculative entertainment arose from the undue prominence given to certain vocalists of the gentler sex who promoted and cultivated the star system. The second has been due to the effective manner in which the operas have been placed upon the stage. Many of the old and absurd conventionalities, chiefly relating to matters of posture, action, and deportment, especially in the chorus, were banished, others have unhappily been retained, not the least of which have been the "flower and bouquet nuisance." The prime donne, especially the strange ones, who were to the most part of the audience unknown, carrying the farce to such an extent as to have baskets of flowers as big as costermonger's barrows handed up to them on the stage. These, of course, came from grateful admirers, who must, if the gifts were not got ready early in the day in anticipation, have roused all Covent Garden to prepare the spontaneous offerings. It is a pity that Mr. Harris, having had the courage to break down many of the absurd customs connected with the performance of Italian opera, did not reform this business altogether. Nobody is deceived by the act, except, perhaps, those who pay for the "floral tributes." A sense of dramatic propriety ought to prevent its recurrence in future. It is then the duty of Mr. Harris to impart a sense of dramatic propriety to the female artists, especially to the débutantes on the lyric stage under his control. He has accomplished a difficult and delicate task in resuscitating a thing which was deemed to be dead. Let him not expose his tender revival to ridicule, for ridicule is more deadly than neglect. If Mr. Harris can succeed in awaking attention to his performances, and can secure popular support, he will do much for himself and not a little towards hastening the establishment of a National Opera, and so create a demand for the labours of young native artists trained in the great music schools.

These musical academies have shown much activity during the past year. At the Guildhall School of Music a series of lectures on various musical subjects have been given by the teachers and professors, and the Principal has organised a series of representative Concerts. The numbers attending the School have largely increased since the occupation of the new building on the Thames Embankment, and the work done is likely to show good results.

The Royal College of Music Concerts by the students have been interesting, and the performance at the Savoy Theatre of Nicolai's opera "The Merry Wives of Windsor" by certain of the students was indicative of much promise. How far such performances are likely to benefit the Institution cannot be calculated at present. They certainly show a desire to qualify some of the pupils for one branch of the profession for which their services may be demanded. They may lead to the establishment of a distinct branch of work in the College, for there is no doubt that their more frequent repetition cannot be undertaken without much sacrifice of the ordinary work. A similar thing has been done privately at the Royal Academy, and has received the sanction and approval of the new Principal, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, who has entered heart and soul into the work of the school. For the first time in the history of the Academy medals were given to those who displayed the best ability in the Operatic Class. This is a step in the right direction. In his sensible and straightforward inaugural address Dr. Mackenzie showed a disposition to make new departures in healthy directions, as far as were consistent and practicable with the means at command. Some of the students may take to the stage; some may be required for the musical services of the Church. Their training should be conformable. Students should have the opportunity of learning within the walls of their school something of the work they will be called upon to do outside. That all facilities will be duly given to that end under the direction of the Principal cannot be doubted, and that the Royal Academy will send forth well qualified musicians and intelligent artists may be confidently hoped for.

It is gratifying to note that the Queen has conferred a distinguishing mark of favour on two well-known musicians—John Stainer and Charles Hallé, by investing them with the dignity of knighthood. By this act the members of the musical profession are honoured in no small degree, inasmuch as it proves the interest taken by royalty in the particular branch of the fine arts to which they are attached.

Here may be noted another matter which has taken place during the past year—namely, the retirement of Madame Christine Nilsson, Comtesse de Casas Miranda. Her career has been brilliant and honourable, and her many admirers follow her as she relinquishes public life with all possible good wishes. She is yet young in years, and may contemplate with serenity the good she has already accomplished, and rejoice in the leisure which will give her time to increase the number of her beneficent acts.

"To every day there is a night, to every joy a sorrow." So to every record of past events there must be some items of sadness. These are found in the long roll of the names of those "who breathe the fragrance of the earth no more." Those identified with English musical art who have died since the record of the London Musical Season was made last year are Sir George Macfarren, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music; William Henry Husk, librarian of the Sacred Harmonic Society; Francis Ralph, of the Royal Academy of Music; John Thomas Frye, of Saffron Walden; G. Kiallmark, George Venables, and Herr Carl Stepan, a famous baritone singer; Henry John Parry, music publisher; Chaplin Henry, bass singer of the Foundling Hospital; Walter Bache, the well-known pianist and friend and champion of Liszt in England; Henry Corri, a member of the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company; Ciro Pinsuti, Thomas German Reed, W. Fitzhenry, teacher of the violin at the Birkbeck Institute; Frederick Baker (Signor Federici), Oluf Svendsen, flute-player of Her Majesty's private band; Robert Donaldson, of Glasgow; George Gray, of Dublin, the founder of the Choir Benevolent Fund; Madame Lina Balfe, the widow of the composer; William Winn, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal and Vicar-Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral; Frank Spinney, of Leamington; and Henry Littleton, the head of the firm of Novello, Ewer and Co.

The musical literature of the year includes "A Short History of Cheap Music," as exemplified in the records of the house of Novello, Ewer and Co., which may be taken as a monumental record of the worthy labours of Henry Littleton in building up the world-famous business; a magnificent book on "Musical Instruments, Historic, Rare, and Unique," with superbly-printed coloured pictures of the instruments, and some interesting text by Mr. A. J. Hipkins; the completion of Groves's Dictionary; and a few works in musical literature of varying degrees of importance.

The record of the year thus shows a varied and chequered surface; whether it will display a distinct pattern when viewed from a distance cannot be said until that distance is reached.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

In a letter to his mother from Leipzig (June 28, 1833) we find a first reference to the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, which Schumann and a select circle intended as a whip wherewith to flog Philistinism out of the musical world:—

"Now to tell you about myself. While you have been hearing nothing of me my life has not been without brightness and charm. A lot of young men, mostly musical students, have formed a circle round me (mark the spontaneous egoism) which I have extended as far as Wieck's house. We are principally taken up with the idea of starting a new, serious, musical paper, to be published by Hofmeister, and the notices and prospectus are to appear next month. Its whole tone and style are to be fresher and more varied than the other papers, and we want particularly to break up the old conventional track, though I fear there is but little prospect of my ever agreeing with Wieck about art, notwithstanding my increasing intimacy with him. 'So many men, so many minds,' even though it should come to blows. The directors are Ortlepp, Wieck, myself, and two other musicians, almost all fine players (except myself with my nine fingers), and this will give the whole business an air of solidity since the other musical papers are edited by amateurs. Among our other contributors I may mention Lühe, Hofrath Wendt, Lyser (who is deaf), Reissiger, Krägen at Dresden, and Franz Otto in London."

Here we have, at first hand, the origin of the famous journal which, as regards music, best represented in its day the conflict of inexperienced youth with the traditions of age—a struggle which, like that for liberty, is handed down from sire to son. This battle is eternal, for the revolutionists of one generation are the conservatives of the next, and have, in turn, to encounter those whom they consider to be striking at the basis of law and order. Schumann, with all his enthusiasm for an ideal, was not quite unselfish in regard of the new enterprise. In the letter just quoted from, he wrote:—

"Perhaps I may gain something by this undertaking, which I and many other artists are longing for; indeed, I naturally hate irregularity, and therefore, perhaps, it may give me a more decided and business-like mind as a background to my character, which would be to me what the frame is to the picture, or the vase to the fluid it contains. I say nothing of the financial advantages which may follow by and by."

Schumann appears to have had some preliminary trouble with the one among his colleagues about whose art principles he was not sure. It is clear also that Wieck's whole heart was not in the new venture, or he would hardly have written to his former pupil: "If you take up the matter energetically, I promise you my help, but if you get lukewarm— . . ." Schumann promptly saw the true meaning of this, and pertinently asked Wieck, "How could any coolness on my part be an excuse for you? Do you only want to help us in a half-hearted way?" With equal directness he added: "If our structure begins to shake in this way in its very foundations, it is easy to foresee ultimate downfall. If such a complicated undertaking is to be firmly concluded its forces must support one another unconditionally." In August, 1833, Schumann was in communication with his brother Carl on the same subject. Carl, as a publisher, seems to have had doubts about the business outlook, and Robert wrote:—

"In fact, how can an enterprise come to grief which has been begun in the interests of art in its purest form, by men who make art their object in life? (Carl must have smiled at this.) Especially when it is based on well-founded opinions and experience gained by previous undertakings. I say, how can it possibly fail? There is a great deal in its favour. . . . If the undertaking cannot be made to answer, Wieck, Knorr, Ortlepp, and myself will renounce all payment. My post as editor is worth about 150 thalers, which I will also give up if the worst comes to the worst."

Four days later, Franz Otto having come from London to Hamburg on a visit, Schumann invited him to join the Dauidsündler in their crusade against the Philistines:—

"I expect Wieck has told you that a new musical periodical is coming out, which is to be the representative of poetry, and will mercilessly attack all the weaknesses of the age. Although I don't exactly know what your opinions are, still I have always felt that I could rely on you as a warm friend of all that is thorough and genuine, and having always regarded you in that light, I feel that I am quite justified in calling upon you to lend a helping hand. Of course, you help us in a passive sense as it is, by writing, but beside that we require active criticism to make victory quite certain. You must begin by being very funny with some English letters, to make a sensation in the very first numbers, which will be published on trial at the beginning of October. My dear fellow, pray sit down the moment you receive this and mend a pen with a view to writing your English letters."

Schumann goes on to suggest that Otto might supply a framework and he himself would do the dressing up, adding, "If the undertaking answers, and you keep on writing regularly, I think we may promise you a small remuneration." Schumann, inciting to the perpetration of funny letters (at musical or non-musical John Bull's expense), just to make the new paper "go," gives us hardly an ideal of an anti-Philistine champion; but none of us are ever quite what we fancy ourselves to be, and too much stress should not be laid upon the point. Schumann's next letter regarding the proposed journal was addressed to Hofmeister, whose name had, at the first, come up as prospective publisher, and now recurs:—

"A few weeks ago I sent you half a sheet of paper with all about our newspaper arrangements. May I ask you to return it to me, if it is not troubling you too much. I doubt whether my brother will undertake it now, as he is too busy with his more important publications. You are not going to neglect the right moment for an enterprise which can only bring you honour and glory. Perhaps a clever editor may turn up."

In March, 1834, the journal was still occupying Schumann's thoughts. The Neue Zeitschrift had, by that time, made a start and its sanguine founder wrote, addressing his mother:—

"Perhaps we shall burst in upon you one of these days and solicit your kind hospitality. Only perhaps—for the new musical paper requires all our energies at present. Rascher will probably bring you a prospectus. The scheme is mine. . . . A new enterprise is always full of hopes. I am glad to have given my life such a satisfactory and attractive background. Besides honour and glory, I may also expect some profit, so that now you may really be easier about my means of subsistence in the future. Of course there is plenty to do, both to learn and teach; but great difficulties will be met by great talents, and I expect much success and infinite intellectual advantages."

Meanwhile, Fink, as an old-established writer and editor, was not graciously inclined to the pert new arrival. Again addressing his mother, Schumann said:—

"It is a bad job about Fink. He is frantic as it is and will not tolerate anyone except himself. I am sorry that an old man, who is otherwise so highly respected, should lower himself in such a contemptible way. In any case, there will be a tussle in consequence, however dignified the spirit of it shall be. Depend upon it I shall insist on maintaining the word in italics. If it should come to intellectual blows, five backs (especially with youth on their side) can stand more than one which is old and very much bent."

Subsequent letters contain references to the Zeitschrift, from which we learn that, owing to various causes, the burden of conducting the paper fell largely upon Schumann, that the enterprise met with public favour, and so on.

Going back to the first of the letters mentioned above, a paragraph concerning Schumann's injured finger attracts attention. The young man had placed himself under Hartmann, a homœopathist, who, of course, told him that no allopath could cure the hurt, that he would be well in three months, and so on. Schumann adds:—"He produced a tiny little powder, and prescribed me a strict regimen, very little beer, and no wine or coffee. Electricity I had tried before, and perhaps it did harm, as the affected part was merely deadened by such a powerful remedy. I have not much faith in homœopathy, but was pleased with the doctor's confidence, and that was something, at all events." Nine months later the troublesome member was still uncured, and Schumann had become reconciled to a permanent disability. This is indicated by some words to his mother: "Do not worry yourself about my finger. I can compose without it, and I should hardly be happier as a travelling virtuoso. You have spoilt me too much at home for that. It does not interfere with my improvising. I have even regained my old nerve in improvising before people, and performed at Barth's the other day, where I went to dinner."

Schumann's finger was not the only source of bodily trouble at this time, some remarks in the letters making the fact very clear that the nervous weakness which embittered and shortened his life had already declared itself. Writing to his mother in the autumn of 1833, Schumann said: "You appear to have no idea of my painful disease, or you would not invite me so repeatedly. . . . I really must try and convince you that I am anything but flourishing, as every breath of air brings on an attack. I have not been allowed out for a fortnight, and may not even wash myself. Very likely I might have to go from the coach straight to bed, and perhaps never leave it again."

In November he wrote: "I still feel so nervous and upset that I cannot sleep alone. . . . Would you believe it, I have not the courage to travel alone to Zwickau for fear of something happening to me. Violent rush of blood to head, inexpressible nervousness, shortness of breath, sudden faintness, alternate in quick succession, although less just now than in the last few days. If you had any idea of the dead condition to which this melancholy has brought my mind, I am sure you would forgive me for not having written." Premonitions, all these, of the melancholy end which was to come some twenty years later, and warnings that do not stand alone, since those who look for others through these letters have no difficulty in finding them. As the spring of 1835 came on, Schumann shared in the reviving life of nature: "The delicious mild weather of the last few months has made me almost quite well. I trust that the balmy spring days we have had this winter may cheer and console you. . . . You should have seen me and my friend Ludwig Schunke walking about with lightened hearts and fresh energy."

In the year 1833, letters to Clara Wieck became numerous, and from their character it is easy to assume that the relations of the young couple were growing tender. So they were, but not yet in the sense which the term just employed usually expresses. Robert and Clara were, it would seem, held together chiefly by an artistic and mental connection than by one of the sort that tends to the matrimonial bond. An interesting passage, which would not be out of place in a love letter, is found under date July 13, 1833:—

"As there is no electric current between us to remind us of one another, I have had a sympathetic idea—namely, that to-morrow, exactly at eleven o'clock, I shall play the Adagio from Chopin's Variations, and shall think intensely, exclusively of you. Now, my petition is that you will do the same, so that we may meet and communicate in spirit. The trysting place of our respective doubles will probably be over the Thomaspförtchen. If there were a full moon, it might have been a mirror reflecting our letters. I am anxiously looking forward to your answer. If you do not do as I ask you, and a string should break to-morrow at twelve o'clock, be sure that's I."

Another letter, dated August 2, in the same year, contains a passage of peculiar interest. It would seem that Clara had dedicated to Robert a piece of music composed by herself, and he acknowledged the compliment, using among other words, these: "But I will only send you my warmest thanks, and if you were present I would press your hand (even without your father's leave). Then I might express a hope that the union of our names on the title-page might foreshadow the union of our ideas and opinions in the future. A poor fellow like myself cannot offer you more than that." The last sentence in this extract is noteworthy. A lover would certainly have made the union of names on the title-page suggest more than an artistic association, yet the closing words might easily be taken as an intimation that the "more" was held in reserve simply through force of circumstances. At the same time, other and commonplace interpretations are conceivable, and one of them, we are disposed to assume, is correct. Schumann's nature was not that of a male flirt. It was an honest nature, and had he not been heart-whole he would not, on July 2, 1834, have said to his mother:—

"Two glorious beings of the fair sex have lately appeared in our set. One of them (whom I have mentioned before) is Emily, aged sixteen, the daughter of the American Consul, List. She is a thoroughly English girl, with bright sparkling eyes, dark hair, and firm step, full of intellect, dignity, life. The other is Ernestine, daughter of the rich Bohemian, Baron von Fricken. She has a delightfully pure, childlike mind, is delicate and thoughtful, deeply attached to me and everything artistic, and uncommonly musical—in short, just such a one as I might wish to have for a wife, and I will whisper it in your ear, my good mother—if the Future were to ask me whom I should choose, I would answer unhesitatingly, this one. But that is all in the dim distance, and even now I renounce the prospect of a more intimate relationship, although, I dare say, I should find it easy enough."

In the same letter there is casual mention of Clara Wieck: "Clara is at Dresden, and her genius is developing more and more. Her letters (she writes to me occasionally) are wonderfully clever." There is no more warmth in these words than could be expected under the circumstances, but in writing to Clara herself he used expressions which, but for an apparent understanding between them, might easily have been misconceived: "Some misanthropists maintain that the swan is only a larger kind of goose. With quite as much reason one might call distance merely an extended vicinity. But it really is so, for I talk to you every day (and in a gentler whisper even than usual), and feel that you understand me." Again Schumann wrote: "Your letter was yourself all over. You stood before me talking and laughing, rushing from fun to earnest as usual, diplomatically playing with your veil; in short, the letter was Clara herself—her double. Dearest double, but what do you want?" and so on to the words "Addio, carissima Clara, cara Clarissima."

In the same month (July, 1834) Schumann wrote to Ernestine von Fricken in terms which suggest the devotion he had then no recognised right to express. Himself and Ernestine had become the god-parents of a little Wieck, and the "father" addressing the "mother" said: "I would first of all thank my good genius for letting me make your acquaintance, my honoured friend, and then for bringing us nearer together by the happy event in the Wieck family. Of course, it is only a sort of external relationship, and I am too modest to think that you would care to acknowledge a deeper, more artistic relationship. Still, however that may be, I shall never be able to repay that good genius for giving me an insight into such a glorious life as I had never dreamed of, and for bringing me among so many delightful people, who will love you so dearly and will never forget you. If ever I could wish time to stand still, I would do so now, and if ever I closed a letter with the deepest devotion I am doing so at this moment." Ernestine being a woman, could not have mistaken what lay between the lines of the epistle just quoted, and it is hardly surprising to find that, two months later, the young couple were about starting for Zwickau to receive the blessing of Robert's mother. On September 5 Schumann wrote to his "beloved and never-forgotten mother": "This midsummer romance is probably the most extraordinary episode of my life. You will hardly believe that it was you who really brought about our engagement. I will tell you all about it when we meet. . . . Mind you tell Emily, as I want to introduce her to Ernestine. They are truly a couple of angels both in heart and mind."

A little later he again addressed his mother:—"Ernestine writes long letters to me every week. Her love is a perfect god-send to me. The curious girl imagines that you cannot bear her. I am going to write to her to-day. When we meet we will talk it all over, see how things are going on, and settle how we are to communicate with one another, and all the rest of it." The settling "how we are to communicate," points to a fact established in a later epistle. Robert and Ernestine had engaged themselves to each other without the Baron von Fricken's knowledge, and for some time it was necessary to act with caution. This state of things, however, did not last long. In a letter to a friend, dated November, we read: "Ernestine has written to me in great delight. She has sounded her father by means of her mother, and he gives her to me! Henriette, he gives her to me! Do you understand that? And yet I am so wretched. It seems as though I feared to accept this jewel, lest it should be in unworthy hands. If you ask me to put a name to my grief, I cannot do so. I think it is grief itself, and could not express my feelings more correctly, but, alas! it may be love itself, and a longing for Ernestine. And I really cannot stand it any longer, so have written to ask her to arrange a meeting one of these days. If you should ever feel thoroughly happy, then think of two souls who have placed all that is most sacred to them in your keeping," &c.

The letters contain no further mention of Ernestine, who, from this point, disappears out of the story. But a short matter-of-fact footnote states: "Schumann was engaged to Ernestine von Fricken, but the engagement was broken off the following year." Thus curtly is recorded the end of a little romance, and we are left to guess the extent of suffering inflicted on one or both of the young hearts concerned. Fate, however, was cruel to be kind. She had a better destiny in store for Schumann than marriage with a girl who, however affectionate and attractive, belonged to a commonplace order of mind, and was no fit mate for him.

MATERIAL OF MUSIC.

THE pattern of the sonata form being recognised, composers made it the mould for certain movements of so-called classical type. Overtures, concertos, marches, and other works were all constructed with a regard to its rules. It is not even yet abandoned, though the efforts of composers of the present day are directed towards the attempt to eliminate new shapes out of the material in which they choose to work. Side by side with their efforts at development may be found a return to first principles. The caprice or rhapsody, in which no form is discernible or requisite, but which has probably been written in the endeavour to find new outlines out of the chaos, is often produced by the composer who provides as a counterbalance some trifle in old dance form—a gavotte, a bourrée, a rigaudon, or what not—as a concession to the love of form without which music fails to make a lasting impression.

With form comes melody. The pieces by Wagner, the avowed antagonist of form, which have obtained greatest favour with the public, are those in which the demands of form are observed. His overtures to "Tannhäuser," the "Flying Dutchman," and the "Meistersinger," which are among those most frequently repeated, are in good form. His march in "Tannhäuser," another popular piece, in short march form, trio and all, and the Spinning chorus from the "Flying Dutchman" might, as far as the outline is concerned, have been written by one of the old Italian composers of the last century, while its melody might have emanated from the fertile brains of Balfe, Wallace, or Bishop.

Form in music, like beauty and grace in nature, is of everlasting attraction, and although a period of asceticism may pass over men's minds and urge them to rebel, and to be insensible to the attractions and fascinations of comeliness and order, they must return to the obedience demanded of nature's laws, perhaps wiser and better for the experiences gained through the age of rebellion. The lessons of the past lead to the highest belief in the future, for with so many earnest labourers in the field there must be some good work a-doing. The few enthusiastic Jesuit priests of Rome, who thought to attract the careless and indifferent in religious matters, and to rouse them to a sense of their moral condition through the universal love for music, by uniting its attractions to the simplicity of earnest worship, had no thought that out of their endeavours would arise one of the grandest forms of sacred composition, which in memory of their experiments was to be called after the chapel in which they were first made.

When Filippo Neri, with unaffected piety and a genuine love for the poor, sought with kindly and cheerful disposition to promote the training of the young and uneducated by the establishment of the Congregation of the Oratory, one portion of his design was to draw the youth of the City of Rome from the questionable amusements which made them insensible to religion, and so he called in the aid of his friend Giovanni Animuccia, a native of the same city, Florence, which had given him birth, and together they devised a plan which was productive of the happiest results in the direction sought for. The service became popular, the preacher endeared himself to the multitude by his quaint dry humour and unswerving reality of purpose, and the music caught the affections of the people. The first collection of pieces of music written for this purpose was published in Rome in 1563 with the title of "Laudi Spirituali."

Animuccia was rewarded for his zeal with the appointment of Choirmaster to the Vatican, a post he held till his death in 1571, when he was succeeded by the immortal Palestrina. These "laudi," or spiritual songs, with their explanatory text—for such was the general character of the sermons delivered between the singing—gave place to sacred stories and Scriptural events, sometimes in verse, sometimes in prose, set to music. The favourite subjects were "The Prodigal Son," "The Good Samaritan," "Tobit with the Angel," the "Sacrifice of Abraham," and so forth. The first work corresponding to the more modern form of oratorio, with solos, recitatives, choruses, and instrumental accompaniments, was called "La Rappresentazione di Anima e di Corpo," which was composed by Emilio del Cavaliere, and performed in the Oratory of the Church of Santa Maria della Vallicella at Rome in the year 1600. This work is remarkable as having been the origin of the opera, as well as illustrating the development of the oratorio. Cavaliere had a special genius for this kind of work, as he had shown some ten years previously in the production of two pastoral works of a dramatic character in Florence. His oratorio was performed upon a special stage erected in the Church of Santa Maria, with scenery and costumes. There were also dances introduced in the course of the performance, so that in it all the requirements of modern opera were supplied.

There existed at that time a number of eminent men, musicians and others, who sought to add to the powers of musical declamation by restoring the use of accent, the melos of the Greeks and Romans. Jacopo Peri, who was a member of this band, supplied the recitatives of the oratorio, and he was held to be so far successful that it was claimed for him that he had completely restored the ancient forms. As this was a novelty there was an explanatory preface printed to the publication of the score. Here it states that each singer is required "to have a fine voice, perfectly in tune, and free from all defects in the delivery of it, with a pathetic expression, the power of swelling and diminishing the tones"; and he is further expected to be "particularly attentive to the expression of the words, and to have an equal respect for the composer as for the poet." By this it may be inferred that the author of the preface, who is supposed to be Rinuccini, the compiler of the libretto, was somewhat modest in his demands, but his anxiety is an excuse for his modesty.

After the flush of novelty had subsided this kind of oratorio failed to hold the public mind. The brethren of the "Congregation" did little to encourage it, preferring to retain their old "Laudi Spirituali." The works that were produced for fifty years after show a curious mixture of piety and profanity, and as they had no artistic value to recommend them they are deservedly lost. Following Stradella (one of the most prominent of the pioneers of musical art among the Italians in historical sequence), Carissimi and Scarlatti hold honourable place. A goodly representative quantity of the music of these composers may be found in the works of Handel, the most absorbing musician of his time, and the greatest, or, perhaps more correctly speaking, the most prolific composer of oratorios who ever lived. Leonardo Leo, Caldara, Hasse, and Pergolesi were the last of the school of Italian oratorio writers.

How the earlier Italian composers influenced the German writers when Germany was beginning to form a school of its own may be traced in the works of Heinrich Schütz, or Sagittarius as he was also called, of Mattheson, of Handel in his younger days and throughout his life, and of the "noblest Roman of them all," Johann Sebastian Bach. His Passions according to St. Matthew and St. John, the best known of his oratorios, are the most perfect realisation of the original intention of such things. The German Lutheran Church encouraged the performance of sacred cantatas with instrumental accompaniments, especially those which kept in sight the part which the people should take in the worship. Thus it is that the chorale forms so important an item in the oratorios of Bach. In Handel's early oratorios there are chorales, all to well known melodies. When he introduced the oratorio into England he took the chorale from its legitimate surroundings, and removed those characteristics which had given life and form to his work in Germany, and transferred it from the Church to the concert-room. It became accepted as a sort of sacred opera without scenery, dresses, or dramatic action. The one great power which Handel obtained by this device was in the extension of the chorus. For this, if for no other reason, his claim to consideration ought to be allowed. Operatic chorus singing was not made a definite institution until nearly one hundred years after the death of Handel. The general principles of the form of opera as laid down by the Italian inventors seem to have satisfied musicians for many generations. The original idea of making a choir who took no part in the dramatic action, and in fact were not always seen by the audience, sing sentences or poems which, though they were reflections on the action were independent of it, and could have been dispensed with, was nominally a reproduction of the chorus in Greek tragedy, but it was actually an expedient arising from necessity. It might be possible to get a few skilled persons who would be equal to the task of committing to memory their share of the work, but it would be impossible in those early days to find enough singers who, having ability, would be content with such a scanty amount of work as chorus singing demanded.

Another reason has been suggested which is likely to have been probable. The chorus-singers in the early oratorios, which were opera-like in style, and in the operas which were like oratorios, had their ranks recruited by ecclesiastics who might have been reluctant, or who might actually have been forbidden to appear.

The greatest triumphs of French musical art in opera were won by Gluck, a German, and there is no doubt but that much of the individuality gained by modern French composers is due to his teaching. This individuality, as found in the writings of Grétry, Méhul, Boieldieu, Berlioz, Halévy, Auber, Gounod, and others, will be seen upon examination to be of a composite character, as much Italian as German, and more Italian and German than French.

The opera in Germany actually dates from the time of Mozart only, for all the earlier composers of operas copied from the Italian or found better encouragement for the promulgation of their ideas of reformation elsewhere than in the Fatherland. Germany is only now learning to be kind to her musical children who are loyal enough to stay and practise their art to the immediate benefit of their fellow-countrymen in the land of their birth. The honours paid to Mozart ceased when he grew to manhood, Beethoven lived a life of poverty, Schubert was almost starved with neglect, and Haydn spent the greater part of his days in a condition of respectable flunkeydom. Whatever may be said of Wagner's character as a man, there is one thing for which he deserves the everlasting gratitude of musicians—namely, that by the force of his personal character he helped to make the name of the class to which he belonged honoured and respected, and so he instituted a more desirable state for musicians of his own time and of the time to come. In other respects he was one of the greatest, if not the greatest, administrative musicians Germany has produced. His theory—carried out in his later works—that the “art work of the future,” as he called operas written according to his precepts, should consist of music, poetry, and dramatic effect, and these should not be made separate objects, but should “mutually combine and aid each other,” is identical with that upon which the Florentine noblemen constructed their initial effort more than two hundred years before. The parallel between the older enthusiasts and himself is further strikingly illustrated when it is remembered that in one the dramatic effect was to be enforced by continuous recitative, but a scanty supply of orchestration, and in the other the “infinite melos,” with all the wealth of modern resources in instrumental art to support it, were the leading characteristics of each theory, or rather of the same theory differently enunciated. Wagner was a genius of no common order, and the influence of his labours over the generations yet to come will doubtless be greater than it is at present, when the weak-minded are simply content with copying his mannerisms and imitating his eccentricities without the underlying power which gave them force and character.

He has helped the development of the form of the opera to a larger extent than any known author. He was an artist in the truest and most comprehensive sense of the term, and possessed the advantage of gifts which enabled him to carry out his theories to a point of satisfactory culmination. What Gluck began and Mozart continued, Wagner completed, and the effeminate graces of the Italian school of operatic art have ceased to charm. They overloaded and choked the growth of the germ, which was planted under conditions which ought to have produced different results had it been cherished in the same spirit as that with which it was originally set. All true art is progressive, and the forms commonly used and accepted by musicians, which were the result of long and earnest endeavours to bring them to perfection, are yet in a transitive state, the outcome of which it is impossible to foresee. The operatic forms proposed by Henry Purcell were unregarded for nearly a century, yet they gave rise to the works of Arne, of Bishop, of Barnett, Wallace, and Balfe, worthy labourers in a school as yet still undeveloped. All these historical facts prove that form is Protean, and even out of its fragments may proceed shapes and forms which in their turn may become the germs of new departures. Of the other items of the subject, of the voice, of singing, and of playing, nothing more need be advanced, though much might be said. It will be enough if attention has been called to the variety which the theme presents in its various aspects, so that those who care to make researches may do so, with the certainty of being rewarded for any labour they may make in resolving into their constituent elements the many things which relate to the Material of Music.

THE “LOBGESANG.”

Allegretto, un poco agitato. The first version of the second symphonic movement was not much changed in the process of revision, and the alterations made are of comparatively little importance. At the same time, they are interesting as exemplifications of Mendelssohn's attention to small matters. The two versions exactly agree from the beginning to within a few bars of the point at which the chorale tune enters, and there the deviation is only a matter of scoring. At present the theme is thus distributed among the instruments:—

No. 1.

but originally the violins and violoncelli first stated the phrase, the oboe and bassoon repeating it.

In the orchestration of the chorale tune and its associated passages, Mendelssohn made a general alteration. His first version has the tune given to all the wind, save the oboes and bassoons, which are occasionally employed, with the strings, upon the interludes derived from the leading subject. The change effected was clearly an obvious one, and the composer, by adding the oboes and bassoons to the scoring of the chorale tune, thus leaving the interludes to the strings alone, made a natural division of the instruments which secured a perfectly contrasted effect. Some slight alterations in the harmonies of the tune are also to be noted.

At the close of the foregoing episode, and in the few bars leading to the return of the principal theme, we find a rather curious illustration of the value of second thoughts. Observe the viola part in the subjoined passage—

No. 2.
Str. pizz.

and in the same passage as revised—

Str. pizz.

Mendelssohn here gained a suggestion of the subject to which he was leading, and we may fitly wonder why he lost it in the first instance seeing that, when the passage is immediately repeated in G minor, the clarinet, even in the original version, has the very notes shown above as substituted. The only other change in the movement consists in repeating a phrase on page 60 of the Breitkopf and Härtel score—the repetition being given to the wood-wind.

Adagio religioso. Mendelssohn began his revision of the slow movement in a spirit of thoroughness. With one stroke, so to speak, he swept trumpets and drums out of the score. The MS. shows those instruments to have been there, and not idle; in the printed score they are conspicuous by their absence. They must, however, have had an impressive effect as first heard pianissimo, in the third phrase (repeated first phrase) of the theme. The last phrase of the theme underwent a change in revision—

A more important emendation appears in the course of the continuation of the subject, the passage being lengthened by four bars—

A good opportunity now occurs of illustrating the care with which Mendelssohn went over his original harmonies, and the changes he thought fit to make in them. When the strings complete the statement of theme by repeating the third and fourth phrases, they do so, according to the MS., in manner as follows—

In the printed score we have—

Another change—the only one that remains for notice in this movement—occurs when preparation is making for the re-appearance of the principal theme. Here, again, we note a decided improvement. In the first instance, the passage stood thus—

We now have—

Chorus, "All men, all things." This number, which now begins Allegro moderato maestoso, was originally marked "Con moto" only, and there was no augmentation of speed (Animato) at bar 32 as now. The direction Allegro molto on the words "Praise the Lord with lute and harp" is found in both versions. As regards textual changes, we find in the opening section that Mendelssohn substituted for somewhat tame scoring in the wood-wind parts the syncopated chords which now, by their cross accent, augment the life and energy of the music. In other respects he left the original of this section almost untouched. On the other hand, the seven bars immediately preceding the Allegro molto underwent material alteration, as shown below in a quotation of the voice parts only—

No. 8.
Original.

Revised.

It should be pointed out that the passage in bars 4 and 5 of the revised occurs in the string parts of the original, where they accompany the unison F's of the voices. Mendelssohn, in making this particular change, simply struck out the F's and doubled the string passage by the voices. How much the cadence gains by the addition of another bar is obvious at a glance.

In the Allegro molto we find that Mendelssohn treated the whole section, in one respect, as he did the first symphonic movement, that is to say, he threw two bars into one and diminished the value of the notes one half, writing crotchets for minims, &c. A textual change is found in the short orchestral passage leading to the entry of the tenor voices. At present the strings have arpeggios (two bars, equivalent to four of the original) on the chord of B flat major, but this is how the passage stood at first—

No. 9.

The horn notes, it will be observed, anticipate, as far as they go, the theme presently to be introduced by the tenors, but whatever advantage this may secure, the composer sacrificed it on second thoughts.

The fine episode on the words "And let all flesh magnify His Name and His glory" affords a striking example of Mendelssohn's extraordinary faculty for improving upon his original ideas. If the reader will turn to the passage as printed and compare it with the subjoined from the MS. he cannot fail to be impressed by the change—

Voice parts.

Between the foregoing and the majestic declamatory music which we now have there is simply no comparison, the one being as worthy as the other is unworthy of the composer. We scarcely need point out that a part of the old theme is retained in the present score.

The introduction of the leading subject also underwent revision, but the changes made are scarcely important enough for particular attention. Mendelssohn again alters his final cadence, as shown below—

No. 11.
Original.

Revised.

There is no organ part to this chorus in the original.

Solo and Chorus, "Praise thou the Lord." This number is marked in the MS., Moderato only; in the printed score, Molto più moderato ma con fuoco. The first change of text begins in bar 18, where now we have a solo passage—

No. 12.

And my in-most soul, &c.

Mendelssohn originally wrote—

And my inmost soul, &c.

V'celli.

From this point the number proceeds to the end without alteration save in details of orchestration. One of these, it may be noted, takes the chords leading into the following recitative from the wind and gives them to the strings.

Recitative, "Sing ye praise." No change.

Air, "He counteth all your sorrows." This number is an addition; the recitative, "Sing ye praise," being immediately succeeded in the MS. by the chorus, "All ye that cried."

Chorus, "All ye that cried unto the Lord." No change, a few slight orchestral details excepted.

Duet and Chorus, "I waited for the Lord." No change, save that originally this number did not come to a full close, but modulating, in the last bar but one, to the dominant of C minor, led, without a break, into the next number.

Air, "The sorrows of death." A few variations in this air claim attention. The four bars for orchestra now preceding the entrance of the voice are, no doubt, a substitute for the discarded modulation referred to above. At any rate, they do not occur in the MS. where the voice comes in on the first bar. The opening passages were much changed in revision. In the printed score they stand thus—

No. 13. SOLO.

Sor-rows of death had closed all around me, And hell's dark

Cl.

Str.

ter-rors had laid hold up-on me, with trouble and deep hea - vi - ness,

with

trou - ble and deep hea - vi - ness,

In the MS. thus—

Cl.

Str.

Celli.

And hell's dark ter-rors had got hold up-on me, with

VI.

trou - - - ble and deep hea - vi - ness,

Another alteration appears in the final cadence. Where we now have—

No. 14.

I bring thee sal - va - tion

Wind.

Mendelssohn in the first instance wrote—

This brings us to the grand recitative, "I called through the darkness," which, as all amateurs know, was added after the first performance in Germany and England. The number which in the MS. occupies the same place will be given in full next month.

SOME KINDS OF MUSIC.

III.—TRANSCENDENTAL MUSIC.

Do not be alarmed, kind general reader, at my heading: I am not going to bore you with technical profundities. You may have but little sympathy with the subject of my discourse, and yet derive therefrom a certain amount of amusement—instruction I know better than to offer you. Well, then, General, command all your forces and tell me, what do I mean by transcendental music? You don't know? Transcendental anything, then? You are not quite sure? Look it out in the dictionary, which defines the adjective as meaning "surpassing, consummate." Then transcendental music is music which seeks to soar to a surpassing level, or to possess a consummate artistic value. No, not Wagnerian music; that is the name critics give to all music which they cannot grasp at first hearing: transcendental music is intended never to be grasped at all, only admired. Not classical music: that is the name you, dear General, give to "music that hasn't got any exact tune, don't you know," but which is composed on certain simple fixed principles and is readily to be analysed by educated hearers. Transcendental music defies analysis, having, indeed, neither body nor parts—only passions; it is composed on no particular principles and it ignores all constructive artifices; it but seeks to pour like a torrent of inspiration from the spirit-depths of the composer to those of the hearer, to waken emotions such as meaner forms of art cannot stir, to touch by its very intangibility certain chords of the heart too delicate to respond to less ethereal strains, and (too utter!) to utter the glorious, untranslatable language of the soul.

Now all this is, as the elder Weller remarked of Sam's inspired flight, "werry pretty," but nearly as vague and unsatisfactory as the music it describes. Your transcendentalist has usually very advanced ideas on composition; he declares that the classical forms are effete, worn-out, unsuitable to modern thought. He points out, almost with triumph, that no one in these days has succeeded in writing an original or interesting sonata, fugue, or symphony. The Conservative musician might retort that amid the thousands of singers and pianists poured forth by our academies now, none of the former can play a Mozart Concerto, and none of the latter can sing a chromatic scale; but what does that prove? Only that we have no artists of the very highest rank—a fact which causes neither wonder nor dismay. As nearly, therefore, as we can grasp the transcenden-talist's attitude of mind, it is that if he feels an ardent impulse to compose great music, and finds himself unable to express his ideas in conventional phraseology, it is the language that is in fault and not himself. On that point let me direct his attention to the following words of a great artist, philosopher, and critic, Edgar Allan Poe:—

"What is worth thinking is distinctly thought: what is distinctly thought can and should be distinctly expressed, or should not be expressed at all. Nevertheless, there is a justifiable exception to this rule. It is where the design is to convey the fantastic—not the obscure. To give the idea of the latter we need, as in general, the most precise and definite terms, and those who employ other terms but confound obscurity of expression with the expression of obscurity."

I think that the refined and sensitive artistic mind naturally recoils from the vulgarly obvious and clear in art; it prefers the vague and suggestive shadowy visions which incite the dreamer's own mind to the work of creation, rather than hurl facts at it. This is particularly the case during the enthusiastic years of studentship, and is probably the reason why the art of composition is so hard to learn and so hard to teach. In the dissection of one's vaguest artistic imaginings into dead fragments of mathematical shape, in the building up by icy law and passionless principle a vital emotional form, there is something incongruous, something repugnant to the youthful artist. He finds it hard, even impossible to believe that his untaught efforts are quite valueless, and that ideas will only come when the language to express them has been mastered. As Browning so beautifully describes a young poet:

And first I sang as I in dreams have seen
Music wait on a lyrist for some thought,
Yet singing to herself until it came.

Transcendental music is indeed music waiting "for some thought." If the student's intellectual faculties are not—how shall I say?—on friendly terms with his artistic faculties, if he persists in believing that art is a heavenly inspiration, not amenable to gross theories of A and B, he is in danger of becoming a confirmed transcendentalist. The gift of an extremely fine ear (which is the same thing as "a talent for music") may save him, but if he has only a moderate musical capacity, and ideas do not easily present themselves, or differentiate themselves from non-ideas, he is of the stuff of which transcendentalists are made. This is the kind of man who says—having written something unusually crude—"That is how I imagined it, and I can't alter it." Why, your real or properly educated musician can put his thought in a hundred different lights, and what we call his genius lies in the swiftness and certainty with which he can decide which is the best. The young man who can't alter what he has written should be made to write variations constantly until he learns to rule his ideas—not let them rule him. People who try to work in a fine frenzy are, in fact, "duffers." Only this vulgar epithet is suitable to so vulgar a class. Not that the fine frenzy itself is a bad, or anything but a lofty emotion; without enthusiasm and poetic ardour, our compositions would come down to the ignominious level of the Exercise Cantata, than which there is no lower artistic depth; but the musician must not trust to his feelings for assistance in composition. Critics they are, none better, but nothing else. Comparison with the works of your great predecessors is your only beacon-light, yet a transcendentalist said to me once—"I don't want to hear any more music for fear of being influenced by it and so writing what is not original." It was useless to enquire of such a wrong-headed creature what his idea of original music was, but I did ask him if he thought he could have written better if he had never heard or known any music whatever, and he said "Yes." Certainly if he composed anything under those circumstances it would be more interesting than are his present works.

But, it will be argued, there are certain men who cannot be reproached for not having studied, who yet write vague or transcendental music deliberately and of malice aforethought. What shall be said of these? Truly these men may have studied, but that they have studied enough is what I absolutely deny. A person with the hand of a labourer, ill-formed and stiff, can be brought to play the pianoforte, by judicious and long training; one of the very greatest of present-day pianists is an instance in point. But others with his defect, lacking the resolution to overcome it, remain with a wooden touch all their lives. Berlioz, with all his artistic temperament, can have had but little, if any, natural gift for composition. He studied hard, but under protest. Is it not unnatural that he should never have learnt to play any instrument decently? How can a man compose who cannot improvise? He studied hard, but if he had studied ten times harder his compositions would assuredly have been at least twice as clear. Liszt, as a boy, seems to have shown considerable aptitude for composition, but he never tried to develop it, consequently his music, poetic in conception, gorgeous in colouring, is often deficient in aim and construction. To say that Liszt wrote without plan would be incorrect. He took two or three minute phrases—often someone else's—and endeavoured to build with them a large design; but how can ideas be amplified and expanded without the aid of other ideas? Wagner is sometimes obscure—never incoherent. The vaguest thing he ever wrote was a concerted piece in the third act of "Lohengrin," always omitted in performance. The wildest scenes in the "Nibelung Ring" and "Parsifal" become perfectly intelligible with a little careful study. Yes, the great masters are sometimes obscure, but there is just the difference between them and the transcendentalists as exists between, say, Browning and Blake. "Sordello" is hard to understand, but it has a simple story hidden beneath a crushing wealth of detail, like a symphony by Brahms. "The Mental Traveller" sounds like poetry, but it is the work of one writing by ear and ignoring all sense and meaning, like the tyro's first chaotic attempt to compose an oratorio. In the one case the obscurity comes from a too great amount of ideas, in the other from an almost total lack of these necessary articles. The great masters, indeed, are on rare occasions obscure; but we feel the force of Poe's words when we contemplate, say, the slow movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G, the most shadowy thing he ever wrote. The means taken to attain this intentional and exquisite dreaminess of outline are obvious; it is a glorified recitative, a poetic dialogue between the solo instrument and the orchestra. Actual shape, beyond this, it has none; but the phrases follow one another in natural sequence, as opposed to the hysterical breakings off and recombinations in another key of, say, Liszt's "Hamlet," or even "Les Préludes." Chopin shows how the utmost refinement of poetical sentiment is not incompatible with the simplest of dance forms, and his rare lapses into obscurity (e.g., the first movement of the Violoncello Sonata) are only caused by his struggling with a task beyond his powers, like a young poet trying to write a sonnet and getting hampered by the rhymes. Mendelssohn could not be vague or obscure (had he ever tried to be), any more than Mozart; both had too keen a love of order and brilliancy. Raff, like many a musical mind of not first-rate quality, when obeying his natural instincts wrote music simple and clear, even to vulgarity, but in any work in which he intended to soar, thought it beautiful and clever to plunge into a senseless train of chromatic modulations, leading no-whither. A more refined ear would have rendered such follies impossible to him. No, review the composers as you may, you will find transcendentalism in music always a sign of either an imperfect ear or an imperfect education, or both.

And now, lest my strictures should lack point, or appear but a left-handed criticism of some unnamed individuals (as is the manner of certain scribes), let me point to one of the most terrible specimens of a transcendentalist that ever lived, and hold him up as a warning. Born and educated under favourable circumstances he gave every evidence, at school and college, of superior mental endowments. He wrote songs, as a youthful amateur, which were so much admired that he adopted the musical profession and, of course, went off to Germany. This was in 1839, when some lively old fossils ruled over the principal Conservatoires. Rink at Darmstadt, Reissiger at Dresden, and Tomaschek at Prague; all these he is said to have "studied under," though for how long does not appear. What must they have thought of him! Leipzig, however, brought him acquaintance with Mendelssohn, and he also came to know Schumann and others. But whether anyone really instructed this young man, especially as to his defective ear, we cannot tell. He returned to England in three or four years, succeeded Sir Henry Bishop as Reid Professor at Edinburgh, but soon found the prosaic work distasteful and returned to Germany, where his genius was better appreciated. He Germanized his name, married a lady of his adopted nationality, published much under a romantic nom de plume (I don't know why), grew his hair long, and generally comported himself like one fanatico per la musica. His repudiated countrymen bore no malice, but, awed by his grand assumptions, commissioned him to write them an oratorio for the Norwich Festival. It was produced "with great success," and even played once again in London. A detailed analytical notice, written by the late Sir G. A. Macfarren, appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES for September, 1852, and is very curious reading. It ranks with Schumann's notice of Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique" as a rare instance of a criticism by a really able musician upon a work of which he, confessedly, understood not one single page. Our friend began a second work of the same kind, but, happily, never finished it. His first and his last large works were grand operas, produced "with great success," and relegated to obscurity after their first season. He wrote a Concert-Overture, entitled "Romeo and Juliet," which is as much worthy to be called music as are the sounds produced by one of those new hand-organs when you insert the paper circle wrong side uppermost. His principal work, however, was some music to the second part of Goethe's "Faust," described in these pages two years ago. Here he is sometimes almost intelligible, and the mistiness of the music accords aptly with the poem it illustrates. A Leipzig critic, reviewing this work after a performance, declared that when Wagner, Berlioz, and Liszt came to be considered childishly simple and primitive, then we might perhaps begin to understand this composer. He lived in retirement, the idol of a select circle, and died deeply lamented, leaving a mountain of MSS. for monument. An earnest artist—or rather, worshipper of art—he had little recognition during his life, save from his immediate neighbours; dead only fifteen years ago he is already absolutely forgotten. His name was Henry Hugh Pearson, or Henri Hugo Pierson, as he modified it, and he was the most hopeless transcendentalist on record. His songs, of which a collection of thirty is published, seem like an imitation of Schubert by an untaught hand; but his larger works are so surprising in the dignity of their intention and so confounding in the incomprehensibility of their diction, that it were only charity to suppose that their composer knew no better. But he is dead, and his works too. Peace to their ashes!

It is sad to reflect that this exasperating class of music which I call transcendental is so often the outcome of an intense, though ill-regulated, love of art. The deluded ones, like Fanny Dombey, "mean so well," and make such very brilliant failures; and when it is borne in upon them that they have failed—which is not readily the case—they are apt to believe either that there is a deep-laid conspiracy against them, or that they are before their age, in which latter case they exult in the hopes of post-mortem greatness. That their disease is incurable, unless taken in hand at a very early stage (and then only by the severest treatment), is, I fear, certain. That no composer worth his salt ever found musical form other than a necessary framework for his grandest jeux d'artifice (even including Wagner, who had to use an improved kind of scaffolding) is a simple truth impossible to impress on the mind of a musical transcendentalist. No! inspiration shall be all in all to him. Away with your grovelling laws of exposition, development, and recapitulation! His works shall spring, Minerva-like, ready-made from their inventor's head; that empty, empty head, like a conjuror's hat, shall produce quantities of ideas, though none have ever been put into it. What reck he of how the great masters worked? He is a different kind of genius—oh, so different!—and can do everything, even as do the amateurs, without learning how. Well, well, let him be. It is a pity to see so much artistic fervour go to waste, but we must comfort ourselves that nothing is ever really lost, and even the transcendentalist has his place in the scheme of the universe, though we know not where it may be.

F. C.

MR. AUGUSTUS HARRIS during the past season of Italian Opera at Covent Garden made one or two innovations in the arrangements in the front of the house, in addition to the wholesome reforms in the stage management. The chief was the body of female box openers, who to their own natural suavity of manner added that of the traditional courtesy of the male officials which has for years been one of the distinguishing features of this department. Another which was worthy of notice was the introduction of smoking in the vestibule. A placard placed in the entrance hall stated that there was to be "No smoking allowed." But night after night in the intervals between the acts the hall was crowded with beings in evening dress, who, having no regard to the feelings of others, openly indulged in the pastime of tobacco burning, unchecked by the officials of the place. Next season, perhaps, the placard will have a new inscription to the effect that "Smoking will be allowed all over the theatre." It has made its way on to the stage, and has forced its fumes into the entrance hall, "Les extremes se touchent." All that is wanting is that the void should be filled. The smoking on the stage was necessary for the purposes of realism. Perhaps the connivance at the practice of smoking in the front of the house was the pursuance of an experiment to ascertain how far the general public would stand being annoyed by the selfish few without uttering a complaint. Mr. Harris has been much complimented upon having revived the "palmy days" of the Opera. In those days few gentlemen ventured to smoke in the streets for fear of annoying some one, known or unknown. Those who were lovers of the weed and liked to smoke in their own houses, out of deference to the ladies of the establishment indulged in the practice in the stable or in some loft or garret, remote from the dwelling rooms. Now it is different. The smoker cannot refrain for too long a period from the fascinating habit and he must smoke everywhere, even in the drawing-room. Why not then in the theatre? Men have forgotten their chivalry in their so-called manliness. We have imported the manners of the stable into our drawing-rooms. It would therefore not be surprising to find that the time has come when the aroma of the stable should find its way into our places of public assembly.

THE proverb which says that "gratitude is a quality that the Teuton heart despises" was never more potently illustrated than in the kindly and neat reference to English musical art and artists as shown in the following translation of an elegant extract from the Berliner Tageblatt, No. 349, Thursday, July 12, 1888:—"One is reminded of those lines from Schiller's 'Maid of Orleans,' which run: 'Can I raise armies by stamping on the earth? Will a corn-field grow on the palm of my hand?' when one reads of the efforts to create a 'National Opera' in England, which are repeated from time to time. With the exception of the interesting compositions of the Scotchman Wallace, the Irishman Balfe, and, later, the Irishman Sullivan in the branch of comic opera, nothing but a deluge of so-called 'English ballads' have seen the light of the world, which (as one writes us from London) are poured out in 'shovefuls' in concerts, all of melancholy text and tone, so that after a martyrdom of several hours, the first thought of the nervously imaginative is not of the god of music, but of the family doctor. The Briton pays the highest terms for foreign virtuosi, but until now has not one single native to show who would be awarded the class 'Selecta' by the examiners (Schulcensur) either on the Seine, the Spree, or the Danube. With a certain melancholy sympathy one reads that under the auspices of the London City-King, the Lord Mayor of London, a meeting of the friends of music was held and passed unanimously the following resolution:—"It is desirable that an institution be established for the development and instructive cultivation of 'Operatic Art,' and in consideration of such possibility, to nominate a finance committee to report thereon within a month." From this to a newspaper advertisement would be but a step: 'Wanted, talented persons who feel within themselves the germ of a Mozart, Spohr, Donizetti, or Wagner.' Considering that the ungrateful Teuton has not been asked for his "melancholy sympathy," his offer of it is at the least an impertinence.

THE American Art Journal, the oldest established and one of the best conducted musical publications of America, has reprinted in the number for July 7 an article called "Successful Failures," without stating the source whence it was derived. It first appeared in the Monthly Musical Record of March, 1879. The writer, of course, would doubtless feel honoured at finding his work appreciated by his American brethren, and would probably be the first to acknowledge, in the absence of an International Copyright Law, their undoubted right to take whatever they pleased if it suited their purpose. The thing, however, cuts both ways. If some enterprising music publisher in England, who depends for literary contributions upon paste and scissors looted from transatlantic prints, trusting to the absence of mention of the original source, were to print the article believing it to be the work of an American writer, he would render himself liable to pains and penalties for his infringement. This in general would be a matter of small import. In the present case he would appear to be on safe ground, because certain colloquial English expressions in the original copy have been Americanised for the reprint.

ONE of the brightest, most sensible, and vigorous of the many serial publications issued from the press on the other side of the Atlantic is called America, a Journal of To-day, issued at Chicago. The articles are on general subjects, including music, chiefly furnished by native writers, expressed in hearty, commonsense speech and influenced by a tone of thought which is at once manly and cosmopolitan. It is avowedly "devoted to the advancement of distinctively American ideas." As the most of these are in accordance with the views of all enlightened men whatever may be their nationality, it is hoped that the journal may meet with all the success it desires and deserves. It has often been said that America is proud of Chicago. In this case the converse of the statement is particularly applicable, for Chicago has reason to be proud of her America.

CHESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE ancient city on the Dee entered upon another of its triennial musical celebrations on Sunday, the 22nd ult., and closed it on Friday, the 27th ult., too late for a notice of the final performances to appear in the present number of the MUSICAL TIMES. As far as the Concerts were concerned I have no special change to note. Once more the supreme artistic direction was vested in Dr. F. C. Bridge, organist of the Cathedral, who had under him an efficient orchestra of eighty-four performers, "led" by Mr. Straus, and chiefly made up of artists belonging to Sir Charles Hallé's Manchester band. The chorus included about 130 voices from Bradford and Manchester, with a strong contingent of local singers, while the solo vocalists included the following: Mesdames Williams, Nordica, Damian, and Belle Cole; Messrs. Lloyd, Nicholl, Brereton, Grice, and Santley. Again, also, the principal performances (four) took place in the Cathedral, the balance being given, as usual, in the extremely unworthy edifice known as the Music Hall. So far the arrangements corresponded, in the main, with those of previous occasions, and call for no remark. But I have to put on record a benevolent addition—that is to say, a free performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," in connection with a special cathedral service on the Sunday evening. As was, no doubt, expected, this proved to be an enormous popular success. Nearly 6,000 people are said to have attended, crowding the sacred building in every available part. With respect to the rendering of Mendelssohn's ever-welcome work, I can only speak from hearsay. Those who ought to know tell me that all went well, and that the highest praise was due to Miss Anna Williams for very careful and expressive singing of the soprano solos. It is much to be hoped that the Festival Committee, jointly with the Dean and Chapter, will make the free musical service a permanent feature. The poor are always with us, and we should sometimes think of them, even to the extent of enabling them, as far as may be, to participate in our elevating and refining pleasures. Another matter which must be touched upon is not of so pleasant a nature. Since 1885 some

"new blood" has been introduced into the caputular body, and I am sorry to say that it is not entirely favourable to these triennial gatherings. One clergyman, in particular, has distinguished himself by virulent though, no doubt, perfectly sincere opposition to the use of the Cathedral, and even the new Dean, while taking a part in the proceedings, is not supposed to favour them as a matter of principle. Under these circumstances, the friends of the Festival must be politic and patient, giving no needless offence, and seeking a peaceful arrangement, but holding firmly by the institution itself.

Monday and Tuesday having been spent in rehearsals, the first regular performance took place in the Cathedral on Wednesday morning (25th ult.) with "Elijah" as the oratorio. I cannot say that there was a crowded congregation, but it is possible to assert that there was a large one, the more expensive seats, in particular, being well filled. The solos in Mendelssohn's dramatic Oratorio were entrusted to Miss Anna Williams, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley; Miss Clara Marshall, Mrs. Andrews, Mr. Myatt, and Mr. Cuznor taking part in "For He shall give His angels," &c. Criticism of the performance will hardly be expected. On such occasions "Elijah" is as safe as "The Messiah," everybody concerned bringing to it adequate knowledge and skill. Uniform excellence was, of course, not attained, but the fluctuations were not serious, and the audience dispersed almost thoroughly satisfied, as they had occasion to be.

In the evening Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," with the composer as Conductor, attracted a crowded and fashionable gathering, eager to make the acquaintance of a work so renowned, and to look upon a musician so famous. Nothing happened to mar the success of the performance, which had been carefully prepared on the previous evening under Sir Arthur's watchful eye. This, however, is a common experience. The "Golden Legend" so commands the sympathies of all engaged upon it that its chances of a good rendering are exceptional, and the Chester version of the most popular work of recent years could compare favourably with the average figure of merit. The band and chorus were thoroughly up to their work, and so were the principal vocalists. Madame Nordica sang the heroine's music with admirable effect, due to entire sympathy with, and intelligent appreciation of the various situations. She met with unqualified favour, as, of course, did Mr. Lloyd—the first Prince Henry, and the despair of all who would wrest the character from his grip. Mr. Lloyd has now so elaborated the part that amateurs accept it, without the smallest reservation, as a finished thing, unapproached and unapproachable. Miss Damian lent the charm of her perfectly sympathetic voice to the contralto solos, and Mr. Grice, taking full advantage of a splendid opportunity, asserted his capacity to rank among the best representatives of Lucifer. The Cantata was followed by Professor Stanford's setting of Tennyson's "Revenge," which, adequately performed, made its usual effect.

The Cathedral programme of Thursday morning was one of the miscellanies which never yet have made a popular success at festivals of this kind, and, perhaps, never will, though committees, blind to obvious lessons, go on favouring them. There were many empty seats, chiefly those set apart for patrons of the second class, and altogether, the "session" can scarcely be accounted successful from a business point of view. Musically, however, it was interesting for the particular reason that the programme contained the only new work of the festival—Mr. Oliver King's music to the Psalm, "By the waters of Babylon." Mr. King had prepared two orchestral and vocal works for the occasion, but reasons appeared why one of them should be set aside, its place being taken by the first, second, and fourth movements from the composer's Symphony in F. These were played under Mr. King's guidance, with considerable ability and much of the delicacy exacted by the nature of the music. The audience could not applaud, but many of them seemed to be greatly attracted by the work, which, nevertheless, I regard as wanting in the essential elevation of symphonic utterance, save in the final movement, where the composer puts forth his full strength with satisfactory results. The Symphony was followed by the Psalm, as to which I shall not here submit a definite judgment, although it would be easy to contend that an exception to general worthiness is found in the opening chorus. Mr. King should re-write this number, while retaining its principal theme, which, as it now stands, is surrounded by music open to very serious question. Most of the other numbers are meritorious, and at least a single example shows uncommon strength. I refer to the Finale "Remember the children of Edom, O Lord"—one of the most direct, powerful, and striking of modern efforts in the line of grand sacred music. Note should also be taken of the solo and chorus, "Sing us one of the songs of Zion," which backs up the testimony of the concluding number, and deepens an impression that Mr. Oliver King's full strength is capable of higher achievement than has yet appeared. On the whole, the work advances the composer in public estimation and encourages hopes of others even better. Spohr's Motett, "How lovely are Thy dwellings fair" (solos by Miss Anna Williams, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Nicholl, and Mr. Brereton), Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, capably played under Dr. Bridge's direction, and Verdi's "Requiem" made up the rest of the programme. The last-named work had a satisfactory rendering, with Madame Nordica, Miss Damian, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Brereton as principal singers.

I can only mention the chief works in the programme of Thursday evening. They were the "Lenore" Symphony of Raff, Dr. J. F. Bridge's Overture "Morte d'Arthur," the Drinking Chorus from "Belshazzar," one or two selections from Berlioz's "Faust," and some vocal pieces, &c. The performance of all these works was generally good, and brought the last secular Concert to a fitting end. The works allotted to the concluding day were Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," and Gounod's "Redemption."

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ'S CONCERTS.

WE have to record the last two of these performances, which took place on Fridays, June 29 and the 6th ult., at St. James's Hall. The first occasion clashed with the "Israel" day of the Handel Festival, and the attendance suffered in consequence. The principal feature of the programme was a Trio in A minor, No. 4, by Rubinstein (Op. 85). Like all the composer's later works, it is lengthy, occupying quite forty minutes in performance, and the musical interest is not in proportion to the dimensions. Some of the subjects are striking in themselves, but the working out is vague, discursive, and disjointed. The best movement is the third Andante, of which the general character is dignified and almost religious. The Trio was coolly received, and is not likely to become a favourite. Brahms's charming Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 100), and Haydn's Trio in E (No. 4), completed the concerted portion of the programme. How Sir Charles Hallé plays Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 110) musicians know full well, and they are equally familiar with Madame Néruda's rendering of Handel's Violin Sonata in D. The composer wrote twelve "Sonatas for violin or German flute," but those in A and D are the only examples we are ever permitted to hear.

The final programme did not contain any novelties, but with the exception of Beethoven's last Sonata in C minor (Op. 111), played in his best manner by Sir Charles Hallé, it consisted of more or less unfamiliar works. Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 60) is unequal in interest and effectiveness to the earlier works in G minor and A. On the other hand, Gade's Sonata in B flat (Op. 59), for pianoforte and violin, is a very pleasing example of the Danish composer's genius, and, like the final item in the programme, should be heard at the Popular Concerts next season. We refer to Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet in A (Op. 81), which was performed for the second time. Like every work of genius it improves greatly on acquaintance, and we are now inclined to place it among the Bohemian composer's finest utterances in the department of chamber music, despite the great length of the first and second movements. The spirit and energy of the Scherzo, "Furiant," are irresistible, and the audience was fairly roused to enthusiasm. So the season of these admirable Concerts ended with all possible effect.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE Students' Orchestral Concert, given on the 24th ult., attracted a very large and appreciative audience. Among the many interesting works brought forward, especial mention must be made of the Concerto for Pianoforte and Orchestra, by Miss Dora Bright. It is a well designed work in classical form, and its melodious and shapely character is further increased in effect by the clever colouring of the instrumentation. The composer played the solo part with much executive ability, and received most hearty applause at the conclusion. Other young students also brought forward compositions of merit, among them an artistic barcarole, "Last night we sailed," the production of Arthur E. Godfrey, which was most gracefully sung by Miss Greta Williams and cordially welcomed.

Schumann's "Concertstück" was played by Miss Webb, Mr. Edgar Hulland took the solo part in Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, while Mr. Frederick W. Griffiths performed the Andante and Rondo for flute, from Molique's Concerto in D. Mr. Gerald Walenn achieved great success by his reading of the Allegro of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. Miss Martha Davies sang the air, "I will extol Thee, O Lord" (Costa), and Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys the aria, "Salve Dimora" (Gounod). Mendelssohn's Motett, "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out," and the quartet, "Right are the statutes," received careful interpretation from the choir. The playing of the band in a suite for orchestra, "Polka Furiant," by Dvorák, under the guidance of Dr. Mackenzie, was spirited and good.

The last meeting of the season took place also at St. James's Hall on the 25th ult. The proceedings commenced with a performance of Schubert's chorus, "The Lord is my Shepherd." After introducing the business of the meeting, the Principal, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, addressed a few words of counsel to the students. He reminded those to whom no prize had been granted that the line which divides the successful from the non-successful was often so thin as to perplex examiners compelled to arrive at an immediate decision; and he exhorted winners and losers to aim at something higher than medals or money—to follow in the footsteps of great masters, who did not ask, "What must I do to get wealth?" but "What must I do to become worthy of the art?" The Right Hon. Lord Coleridge distributed the awards. The Charles Lucas silver medal, for the composition of an Air and Variations for string quartet, was awarded to Dora Bright; the Parepa-Rosa gold medal, for singing, to Kate Norman; the Sterndale Bennett prize, for the playing of a pianoforte composition by Sir William Sterndale Bennett, to Edith L. Young; the Llewellyn Thomas gold medal, for declamatory English singing, to Kate Norman; the Heathcote Long prize, for pianoforte playing, to Edgar Hulland; the Evil prize, for declamatory English singing, to William E. Hellawell; the Santley prize, for accompaniment and transposition, to Arthur E. Godfrey; the Hine gift, for the composition of a ballad, to Avicé Boxall; the Sainton Dolby prize, for singing, to Julia Neilson; and the Joseph Maas prize, for singing, to Maldwyn Humphreys.

Certificates of merit were granted to twenty-six pupils who had previously received silver medals. Fifty-one pupils who had previously received bronze medals were awarded silver medals; and 118 received on this occasion bronze medals. Three pupils received book prizes, and eleven were highly commended. His lordship, after the awards were all distributed, delivered an address. He was reminded, his lordship remarked, that on the very spot he was now occupying he stood sixteen years ago whilst a testimonial was being presented to Sir William Sterndale Bennett, an English musician whose works had crossed the seas and became known to our Continental neighbours, and whose fame in the estimation of the world stood next to that of Purcell. It is a comfort, he continued, to know that in the Academy of which Sir Sterndale once was Principal there are at the present moment so many pupils of ability. Amidst their contest now and in after life it is necessary, the speaker said, to be ever watchful lest friendly relations be broken and lost. There were instances in the history of every branch of the arts of abiding friendships of great masters living together in good fellowship. Haydn and Mozart thus retained loving regard for each other, though the first-named was sorely tried by having such a rival as Mozart. The students were invited to follow the examples set in this way by those great masters. A vote of thanks to Lord Coleridge for presiding was proposed by Mr. Threlfall, and carried by the company with acclamation. The present holders of the scholarships and exhibitions are:—Potter exhibitor, William John Kipps; Westmoreland scholar, Greta Williams; Sterndale Bennett scholar, E. Cuthbert Nunn; Parepa-Rosa scholar, Emily Squire; Lady Goldsmid scholar, Catherine Rodbard; Balfé scholar, Reginald Steggall; Thalberg scholar, Edgar Hulland; Hine gift, Avice Boxall; John Thomas Welsh scholar, Llewela T. Davies; Liszt scholar, Grace Mary Williams Henshaw; Sainton-Dolby scholar, Amy Augarde.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

CLOSELY following the discussion relative to the establishment of a school for the training of opera singers, came the annual performance of an opera by the Royal College of Music. We shall not enter here into the question whether a new institution for this specific purpose is or is not desirable; at any rate, the school over which Sir George Grove so ably presides gives once a year ample proof of its fitness for preparing students for the operatic stage. It is said that a large portion of the academic year is taken up in coaching the young people in their respective duties; be that as it may, a thing which is worth doing at all is worth doing well, and in this respect the Royal College performances present an excellent model. That of the 11th ult. at the Savoy Theatre was in some respects the best of the series, though, of course, Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor" cannot compare with Cherubini's "The Water Carrier" or "Der Freischütz." But no reasonable people will blame the authorities for giving legitimate comic opera a turn, and the choice was justified by results. To say that the humour of Shakespeare's characters was realised in any one instance would of course be absurd, but both Mr. Arthur C. Peach as Slender and Mr. Clement Milward as Falstaff displayed the germs of talent for comedy, the former especially. Mr. Milward has a fine baritone voice, which he displayed to great advantage at the rehearsal, though at the performance he was partially incapacitated by the ungenial weather. To finish with the male students, Mr. Daniel Price as Mr. Ford was somewhat disappointing after the great promise he evinced two years ago, and Mr. Lionel Kilby is cultivating a throaty production which he should abandon before it is too late. The lady students are all entitled to praise. Miss Annie Roberts, who played the part of Ännchen last year, showed a satisfactory advance as Mrs. Ford. Her voice is bright and pleasing, and she acted in a natural and sprightly fashion. Miss Maggie Davies as Anne Page also sang remarkably well, and the mezzo-soprano voice of Miss Emily Squire is of the best quality. As before, the general performance was exceedingly praiseworthy, everything working with the utmost smoothness, and reflecting great credit on Mr. Arthur Cecil, under whose supervision it was prepared. Equal praise is due to the Conductor, Dr. Villiers Stanford, for the excellence of the orchestra and chorus, both consisting mainly of students.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE season closed on the 21st ult. at Covent Garden Theatre with a repetition performance of "The Huguenots," with Miss Russell, Madame Scalchi, Messrs. Ravelli, Jean and Edouard de Reszké, and others in the cast. At the close of the performance Mr. Harris was called upon to make a speech, despite the fact that he had caused to be distributed a leaflet containing a summary of the season and his expression of thanks for the patronage he had received. In a few words, however, he said he hoped he had given satisfaction to his numerous friends and the public. He stated his intention of venturing upon another season next year, and hoped to receive an adequate measure of support, adding that it would not be his fault if he did not succeed.

The time originally announced for the close of the season was the 7th ult., but at the request of many of the patrons of the theatre it was extended to the 21st. In this latter fortnight several operas were given. Two performances were especially worthy of note—namely, "Mefistofele" and "Aida." Each was so good that many would have been glad had it been possible to have extended the season still further, in order that they might be repeated. They were given only once, and those who were fortunate enough to witness the representations will remember them as having shed much lustre on a season already brilliant. Madame Nordica was at her best in the part of Aida, and Madame Scalchi has scarcely been heard to so much advantage as she was on this occasion as Amneris; with Edouard de Reszké as Radames, D'Andrade as the Captive Savage King, Navarrini as the Egyptian Monarch, and a mise-en-scène of great splendour, the ear and the eye were alike gratified. In "Mefistofele," departure from the customary practice was made, inasmuch as the parts of Marguerite and Helen of Troy, usually taken by the same artists, were divided between Miss MacIntyre and Miss Ella Russell. It was pleasant to note that the charming vocalisation of Miss MacIntyre was supplemented by some admirable acting. Her stage awkwardness has disappeared, and in her the audience saw a Marguerite of almost ideal perfection. The other parts were also well played. The season has been successful beyond expectation. This is particularly pleasing to those who note with satisfaction each successive step towards the establishment of opera in London as a permanent institution.

MESSRS. LUDWIG AND WHITEHOUSE'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

THE third and fourth of these excellent Concerts took place on June 28 and the 11th ult., at the Princes' Hall. It was evidently the aim of the promoters to present standard works in a creditable manner, rather than to introduce novelties, and they certainly deserve praise for their success. In order to complete the String Quartet, they secured the services of Messrs. G. Collins and A. Gibson, while Mr. Oscar Beringer was the pianist on the first of the above occasions, and Madame Haas on the last. A better ensemble could not be desired, and we do not know in what particular the best continental performers could surpass the artists named, speaking of them as a body. A mere list of the works given will suffice. They comprised at the third Concert Schubert's Quartet in D minor, Haydn's in G (Op. 17, No. 5), and Brahms's latest Trio in C minor (Op. 101), and at the final performance Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1), Beethoven's in D (Op. 18, No. 3), and Brahms's Quintet in F minor (Op. 34). The Concert-givers played some solos, but no works for pianoforte alone were included.

HYDE PARK ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THIS ably conducted institution is evidently going on in the right way. At each final Concert of the term it has been our pleasant duty to note a distinct advance in the average of merit displayed by the pupils, and under these circumstances it is not surprising to find that the numbers enrolled in Mrs. Trickett's Academy are steadily increasing. The choir of young ladies, under the direction of Mr. H. F. Frost, has been considerably augmented since last year. It is remarkably efficient, and contains some excellent voices. At the Concert given in Steinway Hall on the 5th ult., the choir was heard in a chorus by Amy Horrocks "The Return of May," Liszt's "The Reapers," the Chorus of the Messengers of Peace from Wagner's "Rienzi," and George J. Bennett's clever Part-song "Thro' dell and dingle." These pieces were given with notable refinement and regard for nuances, added to a rhythmical swing which the fair choristers evidently caught from the firm, lively beat of their Conductor. The solo in the "Rienzi" Chorus was sung by Miss Mary Willis. Miss Willis was also heard alone in Benedict's air "Prendi per me sei libero" and won a hearty recall. A few of the remaining items deserve mention. The duet,

"In His hands," from Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, was well sung by Mrs. Lindley White and Mrs. Willcocks. A Trio by G. Lillo, "La preghiera del pellegrino," received a neat interpretation from Miss Janet Tatham and the Misses Dieseldorff, who also gave their solos in capital style. A violin solo was contributed by Miss Kate Willis, and a harp-zither solo by Herr von Gumer. Miss Mary Carmichael and Signor L. Vannucini were at the piano. There was a large attendance, and the efforts of the students gave manifest satisfaction to their friends.

MR. RALPH STUART'S RECITAL.

An unknown pianist who announces a Recital consisting entirely of Chopin's music must be expected to present satisfactory credentials to justify his temerity. We cannot say that Mr. Ralph Stuart did so justify himself at his performance on the 7th ult., at the Princes' Hall, although he displayed a considerable amount of ability which, if properly directed, should eventually secure him a high position among pianists. He is, we believe, Australian by birth, and is certainly the most promising of the young performers who have come to us from the Antipodes. In a programme which included no fewer than eighteen works by the Polish composer he exhibited great command over the keyboard, and in some instances his rendering satisfied ordinary requirements, although there was nothing to show that he is peculiarly qualified as an interpreter of Chopin. His performance, unfortunately, was marred by one grave error, against which it is necessary to utter a strong protest. In certain pieces he did not hesitate to make absurd alterations in the text, quite caricaturing the original. Whether he contracted this vicious habit in Australia or under some incompetent teacher in this country cannot be said; but he should be warned that English musicians prefer to hear the works of the great composers precisely as they were written, and not with vulgar additions at the will of the player. Mr. Stuart will do well to grasp this fact at once.

MR. LUARD SELBY'S CONCERT.

An agreeable miscellaneous entertainment was given by Mr. Luard Selby, at the Princes' Hall, on the afternoon of the 4th ult. The concert-giver is an excellent musician and composer, and on this occasion he proved himself also a capable pianist. The most important feature of his programme was a new Sonata in B minor for pianoforte and violin, Op. 21. This is a work of considerable pretence and corresponding achievement. The first of the three movements, Allegro con brio, is agitated in character, and indeed somewhat restless, though perfectly clear in construction, the broad melodious second subject affording welcome contrast to the rest of the movement. The next section, Adagio in D, is extremely expressive, and has the character of an impassioned love-song. At a first hearing the finale, which resembles the first movement in its general style, appeared the least satisfactory portion of the Sonata, but this impression may be modified. At the lowest estimate, the work is one of the best of its kind that has appeared for some time. In its performance Mr. Selby was assisted by Signor Papini; and among other artists whose names appeared in the programme were Miss Anna Williams, Madame Edith Wynne, Mr. Bernard Lane, and Mr. Leo Stern.

SIR JOHN STAINER.

By the command of the Queen, Sir John Stainer attended at Windsor Castle on the 17th ult., with Sir Charles Hallé and others, to receive the accolade which was necessary to confirm them in the honours and privileges of Knighthood. In the evening of the same day, under the presidency of the Right Hon. Lord Herschell, a banquet and an address were given to Sir John Stainer, in the Hôtel Métropole, which was attended by a large number of guests distinguished in music, painting, science, literature, and law. A most influential committee had been formed, consisting of the Duke of Abercorn, Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P.; J. Barnby, J. F. Barnett, W. A.

Barrett, Mus. Bac.; J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. Doc.; J. F. Bridge, Mus. Doc.; Right Hon. Lord Charles Bruce, Earl Cadogan, A. Chappell, T. Chappell, Right Hon. Lord Coleridge, A. Coleridge, Col. the Hon. W. J. Colville, J. M. Crament, Mus. Bac.; W. H. Cummings, Vice-Admiral C. T. Curme, W. G. Cusins, H. C. Deacon, F. A. W. Docker, R. de Lacy, Rev. R. Duckworth, Right Hon. Lord Bishop of Durham, J. Ella, A. J. Eyre, W. B. Gilbert, Mus. Doc.; Eaton Fanning, Henry Gadsby, C. Gardner, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.; W. H. Gladstone, M.P.; Otto Goldschmidt, Rev. R. Gregory, Sir George Grove, D.C.L.; E. K. Hall, E. Hamilton, H. Weist Hill, W. Hodge, Rev. H. Scott Holland, R. R. Holmes, W. S. Hoyte, C. S. Jekyll, Rev. S. Flood Jones, C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Doc.; G. E. Lake, Earl of Lathom, H. Lazarus, Henry Leslie, G. Libotton, C. H. Lloyd, Rev. H. P. Liddon, Alfred Littleton, B. H. Lloyd, M.A., Mus. Bac.; Edward Lloyd, Right Rev. Lord Bishop of London, Heathcote Long, Hon. Spencer Lyttelton, A. C. Mackenzie, Mus. Doc.; W. G. McNaught, Col. V. D. Majendie, August Manns, G. C. Martin, Mus. Doc.; Dr. J. I. Menzies, Lt.-Col. E. Milman, Rev. W. H. Milman, Major W. Vaughan Morgan, Buxton Morrish, Charles Morley, Rt. Hon. A. J. Mundella, M.P.; Holman Murray, J. Murray, jun.; Walter Parratt, Mus. Bac.; Hubert Parry, M.A., Mus. Doc.; E. Pauer, Very Rev. Dean of St. Paul's, C. W. Pearce, W. Pinney, Frank Pownall, C. W. Perkins, Rev. Dr. Rogers, W. Scott Ritchie, G. T. Rose, H. R. Rose, Carl Rosa, Rev. W. Russell, W. de Manby Sergison, Rev. H. C. Shuttleworth, Rt. Hon. W. H. Smith, M.P.; T. L. Southgate, Rev. W. Stainer, C. Villiers Stanford, Mus. Doc.; C. Steggall, Mus. Doc.; C. E. Stephens, J. E. Street, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Mus. Doc.; Franklin Taylor, James Taylor, Mus. Bac.; Lord Thring, Rev. Dr. Troutbeck, E. Tuckwell, E. H. Turpin, G. C. Verrinder, A. Visetti, Fred. Walker, A. Willis, W. Welch, M. E. Wesley, Very Rev. Dean of Westminster, Duke of Westminster, F. Meadows White, Q.C., and C. Stuart-Wortley, M.P. Mr. A. H. Littleton was treasurer, and Mr. E. H. Turpin, secretary. Most of the gentlemen whose names are enumerated above were present at the banquet. Those who were unavoidably prevented sent telegrams and letters of apology. There were few toasts, the chief being, after the health of the Queen, the guest of the evening, Sir John Stainer, which was proposed by Lord Herschell, and cordially received. Sir John Stainer replied, and referring to his work at St. Paul's, said:—"I was not only fortunate in finding so good a Dean and Chapter, I had support from the vicars and the vicars-choral who gathered round me during the re-organisation. I have often thought the music in St. Paul's, when I was accompanying and listening to it myself, as it was sung by that admirable choir (for I feel I may compliment them now), there was something more than mere precision and correctness, and even than merely good style: there was something I know to be a fact, that the men who took part in that music entirely subordinated their own wills to the general effect and beauty of the music, and felt too that it was church music. It often impressed itself on me at the close of a beautiful anthem (or whatever it might be) so that I more often felt inclined to say 'Thank God' than to say 'Thank you, gentlemen of the choir.' And I am sure we all feel that that is what should be the case." The Rev. R. Gregory spoke, and stated that the Dean and Chapter proposed to found a Scholarship as a testimonial to Sir John Stainer. Sir Arthur Sullivan, in proposing the health of the Chairman, alluded to his early friendship with the guest of the evening, when he said:—"It is a great satisfaction for me to speak on this occasion, because I think I am perhaps one of the oldest friends of Sir John Stainer in this room. I recall with pleasure how our acquaintance first began in 1854, when we were choir boys—he in St. Paul's and I in the Chapel Royal. That acquaintance has since ripened through long years into the most affectionate friendship. As boys we spent a good deal of time together: we spent our half-holidays—the only time we had to spend. Both of us being of 'a musical turn,' as they say, we discussed music and musical matters, the compositions of the Great Masters, with as much judgment, experience, and discretion as I have no doubt we should have heard from his lordship had he carried out his first thought. We did not content ourselves alone with that, but turned our attention to more practical matters. And as this seems a time for reminiscences, you will forgive me if I mention one:—We were once on the brink of a very great and useful invention. We were staying at Sir Frederick Ouseley's College, and Sir Frederick Ouseley was at that time putting up a very large fine organ in his church, and he was also indulging in many costly experiments as to pipes, pedals, and many other matters. This organ was our admiration. One of us (I don't know which) conceived the brilliant notion that gutta-percha would make a cheap resonant substance for organ pipes. Our financial means were limited, but, like all true inventive geniuses, we were not to be balked, so we got together a few old gutta-percha soles (at that time very much in vogue), and set to work with ardour and enthusiasm. But here we were stopped, because the horrible smell we made poisoned all the building, and Sir Frederick Ouseley stopped us in the very initiative stages. I cannot help thinking to this day that there was a bit of jealousy in it." The Chairman returned thanks, and this most agreeable evening came to an end. A selection of music was sung by some members of the Choir of St. Paul's Cathedral, under the direction of Mr. F. Walker.

OBITUARY.

EMIL NAUMANN died on June 27, at Leipzig, where he was Music Director of St. Thomas's. He was the recipient of the famous letter of counsel which Mendelssohn addressed to his friend and pupil in March, 1845. He was born in 1827, and is best known here as the author of an extensive "History of Music," which Mr. Ferdinand Praeger translated into English for Messrs. Cassell, and which has been recently noticed in our columns.

WILLIAM HENRY BIRCH, of Reading, died on the 18th ult., after three days' illness, at the age of 62. His Cantata, "Robin Hood," achieved for him a considerable fame.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THERE has been an absolute cessation of musical activity in Liverpool during these summer months, and now the recurrence of the Chester Triennial Festival, almost at our doors, is an event which is attracting a considerable share of enthusiasm and interest. By the time these lines are in print, it will actually be a thing of the past, and there is little doubt that its well planned programme, and the evident zeal in placing before the public as many novelties as are reasonably safe, will add lustre to the success and the musical value of the undertaking. The prominent works include "Elijah," "The Redemption," and the "Golden Legend," the Cantata having only previously been once heard in this district; and amongst other "selection" items to be given in the Cathedral on the Thursday morning may be mentioned the setting of Psalm cxxxvii., composed specially for the Festival by Mr. Oliver King. The enterprise and intelligence displayed by these triennial gatherings in the old City of Chester are greatly due to the joint efforts of Dr. J. C. Bridge, the organist, and the Rev. C. H. Hylton Stewart, the precentor.

The forthcoming Eisteddfod at Wrexham will, from all indications, sustain the musical importance of these interesting occasions, which partake so much of a competitive character. Twenty choral societies in all will contend for the honour of precedence, and Liverpool should occupy a leading position with the carefully trained choir which will be represented.

The coming season of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society will have a special significance from the fact that the Society will then, after all its vicissitudes and historical experiences, celebrate its Jubilee—another Jubilee, leading us almost to think that all the good things and great events must have happened or been inaugurated fifty years ago. Whatever the programme of the Society for 1888-9 may bring forth, Dr. Mackenzie has been commissioned to compose a "Jubilee Ode," which will fitly mark the occasion. It is also expected that Mr. Cowen, fresh from his sojourn in the Antipodes, will be here to conduct a performance of his new and important Oratorio "Ruth."

The successful candidates in connection with the recent Royal Academy examinations are looking forward to a visit and an address from Dr. Mackenzie, and it is also announced that in September Mr. W. H. Cummings will deliver the certificates to the winners in the examinations of the National Society of Professional Musicians.

One of the most promising organisations of the kind established here within recent years is the "Liverpool Concert Party," which anticipates a successful season when the winter draws in. Miss Richardson is the entrepreneur, and the artists comprise, amongst others, Madame Laura Haworth, Miss Annie Richardson, Mr. T. Barlow, and Mr. Edward Grime.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE first appearance in England of a Russian Opera Company, and the promise of opportunities of hearing under favourable auspices the national works of Glinka, Rubinstein, Tschaikowski, Dargomyski, and even less familiar authors, could not fail to excite great interest, and to draw to the elegant little Comedy Theatre of this city eager audiences. The company comes among us necessarily in complete form, except that no regular ballet could be undertaken, and reliance has been placed on our own local orchestral resources. As a Manchester audience will never remain much after ten o'clock the lack of dancers is to be regretted only as causing some loss of spectacular effect; for it allows the time to be spent in tracing uninterceptedly the unfolding of a plot and the merit of its musical setting. I do not know what reputation the corps bears in its own country, but it includes several artists of great dramatic and very fair vocal ability. Foremost among them may be cited M. Tartakow, a baritone of great power and an actor of intelligence; M. Bogatrow, a tenor, not daunted even by a part so exacting as that of Sobinjen in Glinka's "Life for the Czar," wherein incessant use is made of the highest notes of the operatic range; Madame Insarowa, a soprano who, by her intelligent acting, even more than by her often skilful singing, gains the warm sympathies of the audience; Madame Puskowa, a contralto, with a wonderfully clear and resonant upper range, but apt, after the custom of contralti, to force her lower notes; and M. Liarow, a bass of profundity now found only in Russia. Other members of the company remain to be more thoroughly tested; but these have already established themselves as favourites. The choir is well drilled, and, for its numbers, extraordinarily effective; in it—as among the soloists—the lower voices of either sex are in all respects finer than the higher. And, finally, the Conductor, M. Truffi, is admirably fitted for his duties; and there are, I believe, two other gentlemen—Messrs. Schurowski and Spaczek—assisting in the direction of the music. The chief drawback to enjoyment is the incessant vibrato affected by some of the artists; a failing the less excusable because, neither on account of the size of the theatre nor the power of the orchestra, is any grating incisiveness of tone needed. Fully aware how prone our native operatic singers are to this crying evil, I refrain from saying more on this point.

During the three weeks that have passed since the arrival of the company, two of the eight promised operas have been found sufficiently to interest the public; and, as they are in style strongly contrasted, they have served well as tests of the capabilities of the company. Glinka's "Life for the Czar" has peculiar interest for us on account of the distinct nationality claimed for it. The patriotic character of its plot—illustrating a struggle between the Russians and the Poles for supremacy—makes it an agreeable relief from the loathsome subjects with which an opera-goer is so frequently regaled. The music shows a remarkable gift of melody with considerable freedom of part-writing, and that sensibility to nice distinctions of rhythmic influence which sometimes leads to command of the larger developments of constructional outline. The keen appreciation of niceties of accentuation shown in the chorus in 5-4 time for female voices ("Lustig ergiesen" in the German version; the Russian title I cannot venture to quote), and in extended scope in the design of Wanja's song "Voglein's treue Mutter," did not fail the composer in wider forms. Choral societies would welcome an English version of, among other numbers, the male-voiced "Wir geh'n zur Arbeit fort," in which the vocal and instrumental parts emulate one another in the piquancy and brightness with which a catching little phrase is tossed about from side to side and from key to key. If Glinka failed at all it was in reaching up to the dignity he aimed at in his pageant music, and in adequate expression of the more exciting dramatic situations. But it may be that greater familiarity with his school of writing and with the fashions of Russian music would clear, enhance, and brighten much that at first seems dull and insufficient.

Rubinstein's "fantastic opera"—query, phantom opera—"The Demon" is yet another version of the oft-repeated Mephistophelian legend, in which the demon himself does the love-making. The whole story is almost as perplexing as it is unwholesome. Would that composers could escape from its fascination. As in Glinka's work, the choir is very largely engaged, and the interest of the listener is thereby greatly widened and relieved. Some of the choruses, however, scarcely rise to the expectation excited by their description. Thus, the first professes to include choruses of evil spirits, of the winds, fountains, waters, trees, rocks, of all created things, and, finally, of good spirits also. The imagination pictures something immense. The student thinks of contrasted themes intertwined; but there is no such working in of distinct and varied forces as would be supposed; and throughout the work there is a lack of dramatic individuality. The good angel and the bad have melodic phrases equally chromatic and restless; and in one case the voices of tempter and tempted rove about in unison. A simple recipe of construction is very frequently followed. A two-bar phrase is repeated, then carried up the scale by uniform steps. Sometimes the à la Rossini Coda consists of the simple repetition of an entire eight-bar phrase. But as the opera progresses more earnest workmanship is exhibited. The concerted music in the second act, "Oh! day of sorrow" (I quote from Messrs. Chappell's edition), was not free from the peculiarities I have mentioned, is moving; and the call to vengeance serves to rouse the enthusiasm of an audience. The merit of the composer is, however, best shown in the long scene of the final temptation. From Tamara's "Calm and clear is the night" to her death, the interest is artistically sustained and almost painfully exalted.

MUSIC IN MONMOUTHSHIRE AND SOUTH WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE National Eisteddfod of Wales, which was held in London last year, and is fixed for Wrexham this year, returns to South Wales in 1889. The Brecon meeting was proclaimed by the Venerable Archdruid Clwydfard at a Gorsedd ceremony held on the 10th ult. in the Castle Close. A representative procession accompanied the bards to the Gorsedd circle, and after the performance of the ceremony a public luncheon was held in the Castle Hotel, under the presidency of Dr. James Williams, ex-Mayor, and Chairman of the General Committee. The prizes offered in the several sections of music, poetry, prose, and art exceed £850. Of this £384 is allotted to vocal competitions, £26 to instrumental, and £10 to compositions. No one will be inclined to say a sufficient inducement is not being offered to choral competitors; but it may be submitted that in the instrumental department of the prize list some more adequate provision might be made. There is no band contest mentioned. In the chief choral contest—first prize £150, second £50—the choirs are to consist of from 150 to 200 voices, and the test pieces will be (a) "Ye nations offer to the Lord" (Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang"), (b) "Lullaby of life" (Henry Leslie), and (c) "Bryn hyn chwi feibion Duw," "Twas then ye sons of God" (David Jenkins, M.B., Aberystwith). In the second competition, voices to number not less than eighty or more than 100, the first prize will be £75 and the second £25. "Hail! Prince of Wales," a composition by Dr. Joseph Parry, and "At dawn of day" (Cowen) are to be the test pieces. There are two other choral competitions, the fourth, in which a first prize of £10 and a second of £5 are offered, being restricted to Breconshire Choirs, of between twenty-five and thirty-five voices. There are eighteen sets of prizes offered in the vocal department, and eight in the instrumental—the highest in the latter case being £6 for a string quartet, Mozart in D. Over £700 have been promised by townspeople towards the guarantee fund, which will probably be increased to £1,000. The Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Musical Committee are respectively the Rev. D. Lewis Lloyd, M.A., head master of Christ Coll., Brecon, and the Rev. W. Howell.

On the 9th ult. an Eisteddfod solely devoted to musical competitions was held at Dowlais Market Place, under the auspices of the band of the 3rd Battalion of the Welsh Regiment. Mr. H. W. Martin presided and the Rev. T. Morgan was the Conductor. In the band contests the adjudicator was Mr. James Lewis, bandmaster, South Wales Borderers, and in the choral contests a like office was filled by Mr. D. W. Lewis, Brynmanan. It is intended by the promoters for Eisteddfodau to be held annually at Dowlais. The brass band contests evoked general expressions of interest. The quickest competition, which took place in the street ("Dauntless" being the test piece), was engaged in by four bands, a fifth—viz., that from Morriston (Swansea) abstaining from the contest. The prize was awarded to the Merthyr Volunteer Band (leader, Mr. R. Jones). Selections from "Maritana" formed the test for brass bands. Prize £12. The prize was awarded to Morriston. A prize of £20 was offered for the best rendering, by choirs of not less than fifty voices, of "Then round about the starry Throne" ("Samson"). Five choirs competed. The Pen-y-darren Choir had not proceeded far with the performance, when they confused the rendering of the score. They were allowed another chance, but the same thing happened at the same point on the second occasion, and the choir broke up and dispersed. The prize was divided between "Lovers of music" (Mr. Evan Thomas) and "Hebron" (Mr. A. Lewis).

Among the forthcoming events of local interest are the Sol-fa Conference, to be held at Aberdare in October, and a Conference of members of the National Society of Musicians.

MUSIC IN THE WEST.

THE past musical season in Exeter can hardly be considered a satisfactory one, as the older musical societies seem to be both (let us hope only temporarily) under a cloud. The Madrigal Society has suspended operations, owing to want of voices in some of the parts, and also to laxity of attendance on the part of the members, for which reasons the Committee decided not to give the customary performances.

The Oratorio Society, though continuing its work, has given its Concerts to subscribers only, "as the amount of support from the outside public is not sufficient to compensate for the expense of advertising the Concerts and engaging a larger room." The Concerts have, therefore, been given in the Public Rooms, and with less complete orchestra than usual. The singing of the chorus, however, at the last Concert, was very good, and it is to be hoped that an accession of members in the one case, and increased pecuniary support in the other, may enable both Societies next season to attain to at least their former standard of excellence.

To turn to the more pleasing side of the picture, we are glad to note steady progress on the part of the Orchestral Society, both in their performances and in the support accorded thereto. The annual Concerts of the Western Counties' Musical Association were in many respects the best yet given by that Society. The production of a new work, "The Ascension," by Dr. Edwards, of Barnstaple, was a step in the right direction, and it is understood that the Committee mean to follow it up by producing Dr. Bridge's new Cantata for the Birmingham Festival,

"Callirhoë," at their next Festival, which, by the way, is to consist entirely of English music, Bennett's "Woman of Samaria" and "May Queen" being the other works chosen by the Annual Meeting of local conductors. The Secretary reports a balance of over £60 on the year's work, which will materially reduce the debt incurred in previous years.

Mr. Farley Sinkins's Subscription Concerts, which are conducted in a most spirited manner, and for which many of the best artists, both instrumental and vocal, are engaged, have been well supported.

A movement has been started, and is being well taken up, for the restoration and improvement of Exeter Cathedral Organ. The work is estimated to cost over £3,000, and, when completed, the organ will again be, as it was in former years, one of the finest Cathedral organs in the country. Mr. Willis is to be the builder.

On the 2nd ult. a private Conference, convened by the Lord Mayor, was held at the Mansion House, on the subject of the foundation of an institution for the further development and teaching of operatic art in this country. The Lord Mayor presided, and among those present were Dr. A. C. Mackenzie (Principal of the Royal Academy of Music), Sir George Grove (Principal of the Royal College of Music), Mr. H. Weist Hill (Principal of the Guildhall School of Music), Viscount Folkestone, M.P., the Earl of Dysart, Lord Charles Bruce, Sir Frederick Leighton (President of the Royal Academy of Arts), Mr. C. Hubert Parry, Mr. A. Goring Thomas, Mr. Alberto Randegger, Dr. C. Villiers Stanford (Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge), Mr. Carl Rosa, Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, Mr. Thomas Chappell, Mr. R. S. Gardiner, Dr. Hans Richter, Mr. C. A. Barry, and Mr. W. H. Cummings. Letters expressing interest in the subject of the Conference, and regret at being unable to attend, were read from Lord Revelstoke, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir Julian Goldsmid, M.P., Mr. F. C. Burnand, and Mr. T. Threlfall. In the course of the discussion it was elicited as the unanimous opinion of the meeting that a National Institute for the teaching of all that belonged to operatic art was urgently wanted in this country. London, unlike every capital in Europe and many continental cities, does not possess a training school for national opera. What is desired is not merely the education and edification of the community in matters musical, but the training and culture of those who perform before the public. At present there are in the metropolis three large schools of music: the Royal Academy, the Royal College, and the Guildhall School, besides a number of smaller institutions. These are creating a plentiful supply of trained musicians, both vocalists and instrumentalists, many of whom would be capable of being educated for the exposition of operatic art in the English language. Such an institution as is proposed will, therefore, not clash with the great musical schools of the country, but will be a bond of union between them in the particular direction in which it will work. It will, so to speak, create a sphere of action in which English vocal and operatic talent may be employed to the advantage of the artists themselves and to the credit of the nation, which has not hitherto possessed such a public institution. It will not only encourage artists, but composers of English operatic music, who now do not devote their time to such compositions owing to the uncertainty that their works will ever be performed before a British audience. It was the opinion of the meeting that this was in no sense a speculative enterprise, but an effort to create a purely national institution for the development of operatic art. The financial side of the question was not overlooked in the discussion, and it was eventually resolved unanimously:—"That it is desirable that an institution for the further development and teaching of operatic art be established, and that in order to consider the practical possibility of its being founded a committee be formed, consisting of the following gentlemen:—The Lord Mayor, Viscount Folkestone, Lord Charles Bruce, Sir G. Grove, Dr. Mackenzie, Mr. Weist Hill, Mr. Carl Rosa, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Chappell, Dr. Villiers Stanford, and Mr. Littleton, such Committee to report to the Conference on the subject within a month." Meanwhile, the Lord Mayor will be happy to receive communications from any who take an interest in the matter.

A CORRESPONDENT of a Canadian paper called Books and Notions, Mr. F. C. Howe, thus writes of the new Copyright Bill as affecting Canadian interests:—"It has been assumed that the Copyright Bill which was introduced by the Government last session, and withdrawn on the eve of prorogation, was inimical to the printing, publishing, and bookselling interests of this country. As the readers of this journal are aware, the bill was shelved in response to an appeal from members of these trades, on the ground that sufficient time had not been given to the consideration of the various questions involved and the probable effect of the provisions of the measure when inscribed upon the statute book. There is every probability that the bill will be re-introduced next session, so that it cannot be considered inopportune if some reasons are adduced showing that the various trades affected by the bill will be benefited instead of injured should the measure become law. Since 1850, foreign reprints of British copyrights can be legally imported into the Dominion upon payment of 12½ per cent. royalty to the owner of the copyright (which, by-the-by, has been honoured more in the breach than in the observance), in addition to the ordinary customs dues, except Canadian copyright has been obtained through the Act of 1875, which stipulates that the work must be printed and published here. The new bill would alter all this and would in effect repeal the measure which permitted foreign reprints to be imported, and at the same time do away with the condition for works to be printed here in order to secure copyright. The impression amongst some members of the printing trade is that this provision would prevent books being printed here, but it is submitted that the apprehension is groundless, and that, on the contrary, when the American reprint is shut out more books would be printed here than under existing conditions. In the first place, most new books by popular authors, issued in England, are too expensive to have any large sale in this market, and it will be to the interest of the English publisher to have a special cheap edition for this market, and it will further be to his interest to have the book printed here, otherwise the edition could be re-exported to England and he would be undersold in his own market; whereas, if the book be printed here, it cannot be imported into Great Britain, as such works are prohibited under section 4 of the Imperial Act of 38 and 39 Vict. c. 53. If it were found necessary, sufficient pressure could be brought to bear on the Canadian Government to increase the duties on books, which would be in accord with the National Policy, and would further tend to increase the production of books in this country. Hitherto, Canadian publishers have found it difficult to buy the right to produce English books here because the American publisher when buying advance sheets of new and popular works stipulates that he shall have the privilege of supplying the Canadian market. This difficulty would be abolished by the proposed Act, as it would prevent the importation of all American editions of such works. With this disability removed, the Canadian publisher should have no difficulty in making arrangements to publish here. He knows the market and is on the spot; the Canadian right must be worth more to him than to the English publisher, and the question therefore resolves itself into the economic one of demand and supply, with the usual result. If English publishers find it worth their while to license Baron Tauchnitz, of Leipzig, to print editions for the European market, what possible reason can they have for refusing to make a similar arrangement for Canada? Hitherto, the Canadian publisher has had to compete with the enormous output of cheap literature from the States; his prices have been of necessity low and profits correspondingly small; but if the bill passes he can issue better editions at 50 cents and 60 cents with more profit to himself and to his printer, who admits that he is able to make both ends meet with difficulty under existing conditions. It is mooted that an endeavour will be made to introduce an amendment to the bill, making it analogous to the Chase Bill now before Congress, which makes it a condition to obtain copyright that the book must be printed in the country. This may be no hardship in the States, but in a country with the population of Canada it really means confiscation, because it will not pay one author in twenty to produce his book in this country, and it will simply be a misnomer to call any such measure a Copyright Act when it is saddled with a condition which, while conferring protection on the few, would confiscate the rights of the large majority. The whole tendency of modern legislation in civilised countries is to protect authors' rights, and the action of Canada on such a question will surely not be retrograde. So far in this article the bill has been viewed as affecting the printer and publisher; but when it is considered from the bookseller's point of view, there is everything to be said in its favour. Retailing books at 20 to 35 cents may be profitable, but will prices stop there? When American reprints are sold in dry goods houses at 10 cents, as at present, what is to become of bookselling? Without the American reprint is shut out, the book trade as such will cease to exist, and enterprising dry goods houses will sell books at 5 cents for the sake of the advertisement. The trade may possibly be inconvenienced for a time if the proposed bill becomes law, but before long the various trades engaged in the manufacture and sale of books, including the paper maker, printer, binder, publisher, and bookseller will certainly be benefited by it. The Canadian author will likewise reap an advantage by the passing of the measure, as his productions become entitled to copyright in all countries parties to the Berne convention. He will also secure more attention in his own country when his comparatively expensive book is no longer in competition with the cheap reprints which at present inundate this country."

The annual prize Festival of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, situated at Upper Norwood, was held at the Crystal Palace on the 25th ult., when a Concert, supported by the blind pupils and by Mr. August Manns's band, was succeeded by the presentation of prizes and certificates. The Daily Telegraph, in referring to the event, says: "To anyone not accustomed to seeing the students perform in public, the confidence and sense of security of their movements were indeed astonishing. More than one extremely skilful musician has started from the Normal College, and one of these, Mr. Alfred Hollins, may be particularly mentioned. This gentleman has been very successful as a pianist in the United States, and it may be remembered that during the last season of the Philharmonic he played Beethoven's E flat Concerto in a style that commanded warm applause from an audience accustomed to hear executants who have reached the very pinnacle of their profession. Of no commonplace materials did yesterday's programme consist. The band, with Mr. Harry Turner at the organ, gave Sullivan's Overture 'In Memoriam,' Bach's Concerto in D minor for three pianofortes and string band followed, each of the three movements for the 'instrument of the household' being interpreted by different players. Messrs. Charles Broan, Harry Greenwood, and Gilbert Hardebeck gave the Allegro maestoso; the Misses Mabel Davis, Constance Davis, and Annie Longhurst the alla Siciliana; and Messrs. Alfred Hollins, Augustine F. Lander, and Harry Turner the Allegro. In Grieg's Cantata 'At the cloister gate,' for solo voices, female choir, and orchestra, the vocal parts were taken by the Misses Amelia Campbell and Emily Lucas and the Westminster Glee Club, whilst Mr. Augustine F. Lander presided at the organ. Miss Marian Hyde sang with delicate sentiment Spohr's romance, 'Rose softly blooming,' and a very good effect was made by Mr. Thomas White in Mr. W. H. Cummings's song, 'The love of long ago.' Mr. Alfred Hollins played Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto (No. 1) in E flat, and was loudly applauded. The Misses Ada Smith and Marian Hyde gave the solo portion of Bishop's glee, 'Blow, gentle gales,' and were supported by the choir. The latter body also gave Pearsall's 'Who shall win my lady fair,' and the Concert ended with Berlioz's arrangement of the 'Rakoczy' March. Preparatory to the prizes and certificates being distributed to the successful students, Viscount Middleton (who was in the chair) delivered a short address on the work of this very useful institution, which is eminently worthy of assistance from the general public."

THE Sixth Triennial Bristol Musical Festival will be held on October 16, 17, 18, and 19, at the Colston Hall. The principal works to be performed are: "Elijah" (Mendelssohn), "Iphigenia," Act I. (Gluck), Pianoforte Concerto in A minor (Schumann), Introduction and Closing Scene, "Tristan und Isolde" (Wagner), Two Légendes, Nos. 9 and 10 (Dvorák), and orchestral and vocal selections, &c.; Fourth Mass (Cherubini), "The Rose of Sharon" (Mackenzie), "Romeo and Juliet," Dramatic Symphony, solos and chorus (Berlioz); Ballet Music, "Polyeucte" (Gounod), "Huldigung's March" (Wagner), and vocal selections, &c.; "The Golden Legend" (Sullivan), "Walpurgis Night," (Mendelssohn). A grand evening Concert, including "Pastoral" Symphony (Beethoven), "Träume," Study for Orchestra (Wagner), "Lustspiel" Overture (Smetana), Orchestral Suite in D (Dvorák), and vocal selections, &c., concluding as usual with "The Messiah" (Handel). The principal vocalists engaged are Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Madame Trebelli, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Charles Banks, Mr. Watkin Mills, and Mr. Santley. The choir, numbering 362 voices, has been in constant training since the last Festival, under the direction of Mr. D. W. Rootham. Sir Charles Hallé will be the Conductor, and will bring with him his band of ninety-five performers.

THE deeply lamented death of Mr. George I. Venables has called forth many expressions of sympathy and condolence, which have been very gratifying to the family, and have testified to the esteem and respect in which he was held by all who knew him. For twenty years he carried on his self-imposed task, work connected with the South London Institute of Music, with indomitable energy, courage, and perseverance. During the whole of this time his services were entirely honorary. His noble devotion to music generally has called forth an earnest desire to give tangible expression to their admiration of his sterling character. It has been decided that the most appropriate method of evincing appreciation of his labours is the establishment of a memorial fund to assist in educating his children—seven girls and two boys, the eldest being only fourteen years of age. The sum collected at present amounts to £254. Donations will be gratefully received by the Hon. Secretary, Mr. H. Knight, at the South London Institute of Music, Camberwell New Road; or may be paid into the London and South-Western Bank and its branches, to the account of the "George I. Venables Memorial Fund."

ALTHOUGH called a Pianoforte Recital, it was rather a Chamber Concert that Mdle. Jeanne Douste gave at Princes' Hall on the afternoon of June 30, inasmuch as the programme included a Trio for pianoforte and strings by Saint-Saëns. In this work Mdle. Douste had as coadjutor Mr. Josef Ludwig and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse, and a highly satisfactory interpretation resulted. In her unaided efforts the young pianist was not less successful. Bach's Italian Concerto served at the outset of the Concert to demonstrate a decided advance in her technical facility since we last heard her in public. Albeit still lacking in power, her touch has gained in crispness and elasticity and her tone in sympathetic charm. The latter quality was made especially manifest in Chopin's G minor Ballade, while in the same composer's E flat Study Mdle. Douste executed the difficult extensions with accuracy and ease. Among the smaller modern pieces comprised in her selection were an Intermezzo-Scherzo by Hans von Bülow, and a movement entitled "Religioso" from a Suite by Francesco Berger, both of which Mdle. Douste played with admirable expression and grace. A numerous and appreciative audience attended the Concert.

OPERA Concerts, that is to say, Concerts sustained by the leading artists of Covent Garden Theatre, and consisting of fragments from the most popular lyric dramas, were once extremely popular. With the resuscitation of Italian Opera, the revival of the style of entertainment once associated with the Floral Hall is, perhaps, a matter of consistency, as there are many worthy people who conscientiously decline to enter a theatre, but who are perfectly willing to listen to opera singers away from the objectionable footlights. It was, therefore, not surprising that certain portions of St. James's Hall were overcrowded at Mr. Augustus Harris's Concert, at St. James's Hall, on the 4th ult. The programme was carried out by most of the leading performers of the present season, MM. Jean de Reszké and Lassalle being the principal exceptions. It was of portentous length, and some half-dozen items had to be sacrificed near the close. To enter into detailed criticism would be mere waste of space. Enough that the greatest applause was won by two male artists, Signor Ravelli in Méhul's fine air, "Vainement Pharaon," and M. E. de Reszké in Meyerbeer's "O lieti di."

THE Wagner Festival performances at Bayreuth commenced on the 22nd ult. with "Parsifal," which will be represented nine times in all—that is to say, on every Sunday and Wednesday until the 20th inst. This work will be alternated by "The Meistersinger," which is to be given eight times within the same limit, Monday and Wednesday being the days set apart for the representations. The orchestra consists this year of 106 exécutants, many of whom are artists of the first order, and solo players. The chorus comprises some 100 vocalists, including interpreters of leading operatic parts at the theatres of Munich, Carlsruhe, Cologne, Weimar, and Rotterdam. The director of the chorus is Herr Julius Kniebe, of Breslau. Herr Felix Mottl conducts the "Parsifal" performances, and Dr. Hans Richter those of "Die Meistersinger." We shall reserve space for a complete report of the proceedings in our September number, the event taking place too near the time of going to press to ensure a satisfactory account in the present issue.

AMONG the most promising of the many young instrumental performers who have appeared during the past season must be numbered Mdles. Marianne and Clara Eissler, who gave a Violin and Harp Recital at the Princes' Hall on the 2nd ult. The elder of the two sisters plays the violin with much skill and expression, and is the fortunate possessor of a very fine instrument. In Bach's well known Aria in C for the fourth string the tone produced was almost equal to that of a violoncello. The youngest sister is almost equally proficient on the harp and played various solos beside taking part in a movement from Spohr's Duet Sonata in C (Op. 113). Mdle. Frida Eissler, yet another member of this clever family, played some pianoforte solos in a manner that betokened the making of an excellent artist. The programme was rather too long, and some of the songs might have been omitted with advantage.

THE guitar was once a very fashionable instrument in the drawing-room, and of late it has again come into vogue to a partial extent. There was consequently a good audience at the Recital given by Señor Antonio Gimenez Manjon at the Princes' Hall, on the 14th ult. The performer used a specially constructed instrument with two extra bass strings, and he was thereby enabled to display his astonishing skill in music utterly unlike that ordinarily associated with the guitar. We cannot say that the effect of Corelli's Violin Sonata, and the opening movement of Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata rendered in this way, was altogether satisfactory, but we cannot withhold admiration from Señor Manjon himself for the technical perfection of his performance. Some variety was given to the programme by the songs contributed by Miss Carlotta Elliot and the pianoforte playing of Miss Esther Barnett.

AMONGST the prizes and certificates distributed at the Mary Datchelor School, Camberwell, on the 24th ult., by the Lady Mayoress, the honours awarded for musical ability held an important place. Sixteen of the pupils obtained certificates from the Royal Academy of Music in the local examinations, five of them obtaining honours in their respective divisions. The Datchelor Scholarship, for advanced pianoforte playing, was awarded to Miss Lily Wheaton, pupil of Miss Fitch, the superintendent of music in the school, and that for solo singing to Miss Millie Burch, the possessor of a fine contralto voice, and a pupil of Miss Bessie Cox, professor of singing in the school; in this department Miss Florence Henshaw and Miss Minnie Kitching obtained smaller prizes. The examination of the musical work of the school was conducted by Mr. Weist Hill, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music.

MR. F. WEBER, Organist of the German Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, gave, at the German Athenæum, on the 4th ult., a most interesting Lecture on the music in the Old Testament, and its development in the Christian era. The lecturer illustrated his subject by performing on the pianoforte some original Hebrew melodies, and with his son, Mr. Carl Weber, played the Overture to Turandot, by C. M. von Weber, which is based on a Chinese air. A second Lecture followed on the 18th ult., at which Mr. Bernhard sang the Hebrew songs—Jebarecha, Baruch and Abinu malkenu; French troubadour songs by Thibaut de Navarre, Adam de la Halle, Guillaume Marchant; and German Minnelieder by Spervogel, and one by an unknown writer. Well deserved applause greeted Mr. Weber at the conclusion of each of the Lectures.

THE half-yearly Higher Examinations at Trinity College, London, took place during last month, when the following gentlemen acted as Examiners:—Mr. G. E. Bambridge, L.Mus.; Mr. Henry R. Bird, Mr. Frederick Corder, Mr. A. E. Drinkwater, M.A.; Professor James Higgs, Mus. B.; Dr. E. J. Hopkins, the Rev. Dr. Bonavia Hunt, Mr. W. M. Malsch, Dr. A. H. Mann, Mr. J. A. Matthey, Mr. M. Maybrick, Signor Papini, Dr. C. W. Pearce, Mr. W. Pinney, Mus. B.; Mr. Ridley Prentice, Professor Gordon Saunders, Mus. D.; Dr. Armand Temple, Professor Bradbury Turner, Mus. B.; and Mr. C. E. Willing, L.Mus. The Public Distribution of the Certificates, &c., by the Warden, the Rev. Dr. Bonavia Hunt, took place on Tuesday evening, the 17th ult., at the College.

THE 233rd Consecutive Monthly Concert of the St. George's Glee Union was given by its members in the Pimlico Rooms, Warwick Street, on the 6th ult. Miss Amy Sargent, Miss Clara Myers, and Mr. Arthur Weston were the solo artists, each of whom gave pleasing contributions, and were well received. Mr. E. Stoeger was also warmly applauded for his rendering of the pianoforte solos—Rhapsodie Hongroise (No. 8), Liszt; Etudes Berceuse, Chopin; and Valse Caprice, Stoeger. The part-singing, which was very good throughout, included compositions, by Mendelssohn, Pearsall, Horsley, Eaton Faning, Pinsuti, and Handel. Mrs. Edmonds and Mr. F. R. Kinke were the accompanists; and Mr. Joseph Monday conducted.

THE degree of Bachelor of Music was conferred on the following twenty-four English candidates on June 27, at the annual convocation of the University of Trinity College, Toronto: First Class—James Bryant, John Charles Brettell Tirbutt, Julius Edward Arcscott, Herbert William Botting, John Edwin Senior, John Acton, Franklin James Mountford, Tom Percival West, George Havelock, Thomas Richard Ryder, William Blakeley, George John Halford, Alexander James Phipps, and Thomas Picton. Second Class—William Sumner, Henry Deakin, George Bates, Andrew James Beard, Frederick William Cooke, and Mary Elizabeth Beale-Cooper. Third Class—Henry Faulkner Henniker, Frank Mott Harrison, John Palmer, and Henry William Rogers.

AN excellent Concert of its kind was given by Mr. Wilhelm Ganz at Dudley House, on Thursday, the 5th ult. The programme was, to a certain extent, miscellaneous, several eminent vocalists taking part in it, but it included such works as Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor, in which the orchestra was represented by a Quintet of strings, and Hummel's Pianoforte Quintet in E flat minor, a work that has fallen into neglect like Hummel's compositions generally. In both of these Mr. Ganz sustained the pianoforte part, and proved that he is capable of higher things than pretty drawing-room pieces. The refined singing of Miss Georgina Ganz, who is rapidly improving, was one of the most pleasing features of the Concert.

THE organ in St. Anne's Church, Thorburn Square, S.E., built by H. Jones and Sons, was opened on Thursday, the 5th ult., by Mr. E. Renshaw and Mr. F. W. Norris. The service Bunnett in F was used, and the Anthem, "The Lord is loving" (Garrett), was well rendered by the choir. An Organ Recital by Mr. E. Renshaw followed. The services were continued on Sunday, the 8th ult., the Anthem being "O taste and see" (Goss). After the evening service an Organ Recital was given by Mr. F. W. Norris, Organist of the Church. Programme:—Mendelssohn's First Prelude and Fugue in C minor; Batiste's Andante in D minor; Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G; Handel's "Hallelujah" Chorus.

THE Concert given by Miss Bessie Cox at the Princes' Hall on Friday, June 29, was for the special purpose of introducing some of her pupils to the public. Miss Cox has been an esteemed professor of singing at the Guildhall School of music since its foundation. If we may judge by the efforts of the young vocalists who took part in the programme, she is in possession of the valuable secret of correct voice production, among the most promising being Miss Lucie Adkins, soprano, and Miss Lucie Johnstone, contralto. The rendering of some part-songs for female voices was less praiseworthy owing to lack of finish and attention to the marks of expression. Mr. F. Cliffe and Mr. Carrodus rendered valuable assistance.

IN the great Hall of Dulwich College on Tuesday, the 3rd ult., Mr. W. H. Cummings gave a Concert in aid of the building fund of All Saints' Church. Mr. Cummings sang Blumenthal's "Message," Dibdin's "Tom Bowling," and "Sally in our Alley" with all possible artistic effect. His son, Mr. Norman Cummings, who has just returned from Germany, played Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor, Schubert's Impromptu, and Schumann's "Arabesque" in most promising style. Miss Esmée Woodford, Miss Constance Cardelli, Miss Dora Barnard, Miss Alice Suter, Mr. W. R. Cheesman, and Mr. Frank May also assisted, and Mr. Fountain Meen was the accompanist.

AT Trinity Church, Marylebone, one of the Organ Recitals now being given on behalf of the Organ Fund was given on the 12th ult. before a large and attentive audience. Pieces by Mendelssohn, Haydn, Spohr, Niels W. Gade, H. S. Tregó, J. S. Bach, Schumann, and Smart were played by Mr. H. Stafford Tregó, Mus. B. (Oxon.), F.C.O., and songs by Mendelssohn and Benedict were sung by Mr. James Bayne. The Recital on the 19th ult. was undertaken by Mr. E. F. Barker, A.C.O., the Organist of the Church. The programme included pieces by Tours, Smart, J. B. Calkin, Mendelssohn, Lemmens, Dr. C. J. Frost, and Wély.

MISS LINA ST. IVES and Miss Ethel K. Capel gave their first morning Concert at Messrs. Collard and Collard's Rooms on the 6th ult. These promising vocalists were heard together in a charming duet ("Violets") from the pen of Mr. F. H. Cowen, and in duets by Rubinstein and Gade. Their ensemble singing proved very artistic and effective, and evoked loud applause. Miss Eleanor Rees, Messrs. Herbert Reeves, Frank Broadbent, Walter Wells, Henry Bracy, and Arthur Cecil also sang; Signor Di Giambattista played the pianoforte, and Miss Esmé Griffin, violin solos; Mr. J. M. Capel accompanied, and Mr. Gilbert Trent recited.

ONE of the best of the numerous benefit Concerts given during the summer season was that of Miss Thekla Friedländer at the Portman Rooms on Wednesday evening, June 27. The Scandinavian vocalist, whose merits are too well recognised to need reference, sustained most of the programme, singing three Lieder by Schubert, three by Schumann, two each by Brahms and Rubinstein, and five by other composers. English song-writers were not represented. Miss Friedländer had the valuable assistance of Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Signor Piatti, these artists playing Mendelssohn's Sonata in D, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 58), besides solos.

THE first of a series of choral festivals by a confederation of fifty-six of the leading Nonconformist choirs of the metropolis was held in the City Temple on June 26. The singers, about 1,400, were placed in the gallery. The 98th Psalm, "pointed" by Mr. Ebenezer Prout, and sung to Boyce's familiar chant, Smart's "Te Deum" in F, with Stainer's "What are these," and Farrant's "Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake," for anthems; and Barnby's "Hark, the sound of holy voices," the "Old Hundredth," and Sullivan's "Onward, Christian Soldiers" for hymns, made up the programme. Messrs. Minshall and F. G. Edwards were the Conductors.

At a special evening service held at the Parish Church of St. Barnabas, Homerton, on the 4th ult., the Church Choral Society gave a performance of Hiller's "A Song of Victory," the solo part being taken by Miss Florence Monk, whilst the choruses were admirably rendered, the third and last being especially deserving of notice. The performance of the Cantata was preceded by a short miscellaneous selection, the solos in which were pleasingly given by Miss Eva M. Edell and Mr. B. T. Bartrum, M.A. Mr. Edwin Farthing conducted, the organ accompaniments being played by Mr. Harold B. Osmond, Organist of the Church.

At the Highbury Athenæum, Highbury New Park, N. (close to Canonbury and Highbury Stations), the Highbury New Park School of Music gave a Students' Concert (second meeting of professors and students) on Wednesday evening, the 4th ult. The hall was crowded, many having to stand. The young performers showed considerable improvement since their first Concert in December last. Alike in the singing as in the instrumental playing there was evidence of good and earnest work done at the school alike by the students as by the professors.

AT St. Columba's (Church of Scotland), Pont Street, S.W., the first of two Organ Recitals was given by Mr. John Lowe, Organist and Choirmaster of the Church, on Tuesday, the 10th ult. Pieces by Kinross, Corelli, Bach, Haydn, Dussek, Mendelssohn, Berthold Tours, Wagner, Roeckel, Henry Smart, Pinsuti, and Lemmens were performed, with the assistance of Miss Ethel Bowra and Mr. Arthur Taylor. The proceeds of the collection, after defraying expenses, were devoted to the completion of the organ.

THE Daily Chronicle (Demerara) of the 6th ult. says: "The boy pianist, eight years of age, named Carlito Blanco, accompanied by his father, Carlos Blanco, arrived at Demerara on the 2nd inst. by the s.s. "Moruca" from Trinidad. The little fellow, who is a native of Caracas, Venezuela, has won golden opinions and a good name from the Trinidad press for the masterly manner in which he performs classic and operatic pieces on the piano. A Recital will be given in the Philharmonic Hall on Saturday evening, when the little stranger will make his début."

A SPECIAL Jubilee Coronation Festival Service, consisting of sacred vocal, organ, and orchestral music, was held in the church of St. Andrew Undershaft, E.C., on Thursday, June 28, at 7.30 p.m. The choir of St. Andrew's rendered the vocal items. The Church Orchestral Society, with Mr. W. J. Winter (Assistant Organist to Dr. J. F. Bridge, at the Abbey), gave the various instrumental pieces and accompaniments, under the direction of Mr. W. M. Wait (Organist and Choirmaster, St. Andrew Undershaft).

THE esteemed violinist and professor, Mr. Val Marriott, gave a morning Concert at Messrs. Collard and Collard's Rooms on the 13th ult., taking part himself with Messrs. A. H. Fox and Prosper Burnett in Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Trio (Op. 26). A pupil, named Miss Dora Lindsay, displayed promising ability in a Berceuse of Mr. Marriott's composition, and the vocalists of the Concert comprised Miss Ada Patterson, Miss Florence Venning, Mr. Sidney Tower, and Mr. R. E. Miles.

A CONCERT was given at the Holborn Town Hall on the 2nd ult., for the benefit of Mr. A. C. Fowler, an aged professor of Music of Canonbury. The performers were Miss Adela Duckham (solo violinist), Miss Lily von Kornatzki (solo pianist), and Miss Clara Dowle, Miss Clara Robson, Miss Burrell, Miss Alice Patten, Mr. Miles Mole, and Mr. Charles Lee (vocalists); and the pianoforte accompanists were Miss Adela Duckham, Miss Lily von Kornatzki, and Mr. Kift.

THE Dedication Festival of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, was brought to a very effective conclusion, musically speaking, by a performance of "The Creation," on Friday evening, the 6th ult. The choir was augmented for the occasion, and there was a full orchestra. The solos were excellently rendered by members of the regular choir, and Mr. W. de Manby Sergison, who conducted, may be congratulated on the merit of the performance generally. There was a very large attendance.

THE ninety-fourth weekly Organ Recital at St. Barnabas', Kentish Town, was given on the 14th ult., by Mr. Herbert J. L. Gresham. The programme included a Toccata of Bach, and selections from the works of Smart, Mendelssohn, Hesse, and Guilman, with one or two lighter pieces by Wély and Batiste. The vocalist, Mr. Osbaldeston, sang Gounod's "There is a green hill," and "If with all your hearts," from "Elijah."

THE members of the Grosvenor Choral Society gave their 197th monthly Concert at the Grosvenor Hall, on Friday evening, the 20th ult. The first part consisted of a miscellaneous selection, and the second of Gade's Cantata "The Crusaders." Miss Jeanie Rosse, Mr. T. P. Frame, and Mr. Chas. Victor were the soloists. Mr. Tonking presided at the organ, Mrs. Frame at the pianoforte, and Mr. David Woodhouse conducted.

THE Musical World, the oldest of the musical serials published in London, has once more changed hands. It was understood to be offered for sale first to the College of Organists, whose eight pages form no inconsiderable item in the weekly pabulum. It was, however, bought by Mr. E. F. Jacques, the musical contributor to the Court and Society Review, for a little over £200, and now enters upon a new phase in its old age.

THE choir of St. Luke's, Brompton Hospital, after evening service, on the 15th ult., presented to their Organist and Choirmaster, Mr. F. Gilbert Webb, a handsome silver-mounted ebony bâton, with an illuminated address, as a token of their esteem and value of his services, and of their hearty good wishes on the occasion of his marriage, which was celebrated in the Chapel Royal, Savoy, on the 19th ult.

THE COMTESSE DE BRÉMONT gave a successful Matinée Musicale at Messrs. Collard and Collard's Rooms, on the 11th ult., before a large and fashionable audience. She was assisted by Mdlle. Leila Dufour, Signor Carpi, Mr. Isidore de Lara, Mr. Templar Saxe, Herr Czeke (violin), Mr. Alfred Allen (pianoforte), and Signor Denza, the latter sharing with Mr. Allen the duties of accompanist.

MR. F. W. COOKE, Mus. Bac. (Organist of the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham), gave the Organ Recital at the Abbey Church, Malvern, on the 19th ult., his programme including works by Bach, Mozart, Smart, Batiste, Dubois, and Widor. A collection was made on behalf of the Organ Fund. These Recitals are given on alternate Thursdays during the season.

MR. H. W. WESTON, F.C.O., gave a Recital at St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey, on Tuesday, the 17th ult., when the programme included works by Bach, Rheinberger, Guilman, Eugene Thayer, and an Overture by Dr. Greene (1695-1755); Miss Tunnicliffe also gave two vocal solos. Mr. H. W. Weston has also given Recitals on the Great Organ at the Crystal Palace during the last month on Mondays.

THE Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "The Messiah," on the 18th ult., in St. Silas's Church, Pentonville. Soloists, Mrs. Bartholomew, Miss Gertrude Moberly, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Albert Orme. Mr. E. H. Turpin accompanied on the organ.

A CONCERT was given at the People's Palace, Mile End Road, E., on Tuesday, the 24th ult. The performers were Mdlle. Naomi Lorenzi, Miss Clara Dowle, and Mr. McCall Chambers (vocalists); and Miss Adela Duckham was the pianoforte accompanist. Selections were played by the Thames Ironworks Band.

ON Wednesday, the 18th ult., Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" was successfully performed at St. Saviour's Church, St. George's Square, by the Choir. Mr. George Winny was at the pianoforte, and the organ was taken by the Rev. L. E. Lewis. The Conductor was Mr. David Woodhouse (Organist and Choirmaster of the Church).

AN Organ Recital was given, on the 8th ult., after Evening-song, at Holy Trinity Parish Church, Rotherhithe, by Mr. Ernest R. Foster, with the following programme:—Andante in A flat, Hillman; Toccata con Fuga, D minor, J. S. Bach; "Hear my Prayer," Mendelssohn; Andante (Grand Sonata), Kalkbrenner; Festival March in F, Westbrook.

THE thirty-third series of the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts will commence on October 13, ten Concerts being given before Christmas and ten after. The second half of the series will begin on February 9 and end on April 13, 1889. Mr. Manns's Benefit Concert is fixed for April 20.

SIR HERBERT OAKELEY has received the honour of unanimous election to membership of the "Accademia Filarmonica" of Bologna.

DR. VINCENT is no longer Warden and Examiner of the Guild of Organists, having resigned these appointments in March last.

REVIEWS.

Gipsy Songs. First and Second Series. Composed by Karel Bendl. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

KAREL BENDL, the composer of these extraordinary and beautiful songs, is a compatriot of Antonín Dvořák. He was born at Prague in 1838, and has composed masses, choruses, and about 200 songs for a single voice. These, which are essentially national in style, are popular throughout the length and breadth of his native country. His compositions are not confined to the classes indicated in the above brief list, but he has written operas; one called "Lejlo," the subject of which was taken from Bohemian history, achieved a great success upon its production in 1868 at Prague; another, entitled "Bretislav," is also named among his dramatic works.

In England little or nothing is known of his labours, but judging from the twenty-six songs just given forth in an English edition, amateurs are not likely to rest satisfied with this tithe of his known labours in one direction. They are perfectly individual in character, and while there is a similarity of style which is of recognisable quality, there are no two songs alike. They cannot be judged by the ordinary canons which guide the generality of modern song-writers, but their merits must be assessed in, of, from, and by themselves. For example, the very first song, "I am a free-born Romany," though nominally in the key of D minor, starts with a part of the chord of the minor ninth of E leading to A major. The melody of this song is wild and dashing, and perfectly enthusiastic in its form and rhythm. The second song, "One old song my mother taught me," is especially lovely for its dreamy tender treatment. There are other variations from the ordinary style of composition in most of the songs. They are all designed with consummate art, yet have all the freedom of daring impromptu which set all laws at defiance. "Gipsy boy," with its fiery accompaniment and reckless disregard of tonalities; "What plaintive dirge," "When the Gipsy heareth music sounding o'er him," "One pure drop of water from the Nile," a song in praise of the virtues of hospitality; "Sound the harp and cymbal," "Sweet is our farewell song," "How silent is the forest grove," in which the stillness of the night is represented most picturesquely by novel harmonies on a pedal bass; the tender expression of the song "O my lost rosebud," the quaint character of the Invocation to the Dulcimer, the freshness and fascinating music to the song "Play, O Gipsies," the mournful melody "The end is night," contrasted with "Happy, free, and careless" in the first collection, tell of the extraordinary variety of melody and harmony which the music of the Czigani suggests in several aspects. The second collection is no less interesting than the first. Rhapsody, passion, soft sentiment, enthusiasm, melancholy, patriotism, which in the gipsy means love for his tribe and admiration for the country generally, rather than for any particular national abode; the joy of freedom even though the heart beats under a covering of rags, the bliss of companionship and the sorrow of separation, the gladness of true love, the grief of slighted affection, and the delight in the sights, sounds, and scenes of nature are all made the subjects of treatment by the poet and the musician. There is a most delightful sense of freshness and attraction in the wild harmonies, daring rhythms, and changes of time, which are not to be found in any of the songs of the Giorgios, as all people not of their own community are called by the Gipsies, and a perfectly new pleasure lies at the hands of all who are interested in the various phases of musical expression as represented in these songs by Karel Bendl. A large debt of gratitude is due to Mr. F. Corder for having, by means of his excellent adaptations of words to these songs, placed them within the reach of English speaking and singing musicians.

Manual of Orchestration. By Hamilton Clarke.
[J. Curwen and Sons.]

THE avowed object of this excellent little book is to assist amateurs in the intelligent following of orchestral music; description of the compass, use, and characteristics of all the instruments employed in orchestras, large and small; the proper balance of tone in combinations; what is good, bad, or indifferent in the arrangement of instruments, and a vast amount of other valuable information given in a quaint incisive style, will not only suffice for its ostensible purpose, but will be useful for educational objects. The student will gather much from its pages, and will learn enough to make the study of more elaborate works easy. He may be carried by a like enthusiasm which moves the author into the analysis of masterworks, and may acquire facility in reading a score and, perhaps, in writing one. There are many hints of great value as concerns the methods to be adopted to gain the best effects of orchestral tone. As far as can be gathered either from direct statements, or implied directions, Gounod would be the model suggested for imitation, Wagner for avoidance. Although he is not directly named, it is evident that his works and those of the modern German school are aimed at, when it is said "that throughout an entire evening's entertainment he has failed to discern a single fragment of melody or tune." He also deprecates coarse singing, and contrasts the performance of a small body of beautifully trained voices, who sang with absolute perfection a chorus from Mendelssohn's "Ædipus" music, which "was received by the vast audience in dull insulting silence," with a "Welsh rabble of some eight hundred," who "invaded the platform, and bellowed forth some barbarous national song, commencing with the orchestra in B flat, but drowning the band, and rising well up to C natural before it was finished, and at the conclusion the applause placed the roof, walls, and flooring of the enormous edifice in imminent peril." These and like statements make the book lively without lessening its instructive character. A further access of caustic quaintness is to be found all through. In the very opening sentence our author calls the word "orchestration" a coined and most unsatisfactory word; so is its companion "instrumentation," yet he uses it to describe his labour. His eccentricity may be pardoned, for he has written a good and useful work, one which deserves to be employed as a text-book preliminary to the more extensive treatises on the same subject.

An Explanation of the Organ Stops, with Hints for Effective Combinations. By Carl Locher.
[Kegan Paul, Trench and Co.]

THE author of this interesting work is the chief organist at the Catholic Church at Berne. It is an expansion of a course of lectures on the subject published at the desire of a committee of teachers, and revised and enlarged ultimately, and dedicated to Professor Dr. H. von Helmholtz. The translation, by Agnes Schauenberg, has been made with the author's permission. There is, perhaps, an advantage in arranging the subjects spoken of in an alphabetical or dictionary form, inasmuch as it presents a means of ready access. The chief claim of the work to consideration—that which makes it distinct from all others of its kind—will be found in the hints concerning effective combinations of various stops. These hints, however, are scattered throughout the book, and though valuable enough, would have been better had they been summarised separately. In this respect the book is as faulty as one without an index. For the vast amount of information it contains, it deserves to be in the hands of all organists, who, being a cosmopolitan body, familiar with the variety of names given in several countries to stops of like character, will readily overlook some of the linguistic peculiarities of the translator. These form not the only faults of the book. Little information is given concerning the inventors of certain stops which are mentioned, such as the Keraulophon, where the knowledge exists. Some of the cross references are amusing though not absolutely misleading. The translator, or the author, loses sight of the fact that the meaning of a term is of prime importance, especially in a work arranged in dictionary form. Thus, for example, under the term "Jeux de Fonds," which means "foundation stops," we are referred to "Shut off valve," wherein the term is employed, and in "Material for Pipes" to "Gamba," and so forth. The work should be read for abstract information, independent of its references. Allusions are made to many English organs, but only one of our native builders is spoken of by name, and of him frequent mention is made, while all the others are ignored, though some of their works are spoken of.

Twelve Sonatas for the Violin. Composed by Arcangelo Corelli (Op. 5)—in two books, each containing six Sonatas—the pianoforte accompaniment (constructed upon the original figured bass), with marks of expression, bowing, and fingering, by Arnold Dolmetsch. Albums for Violin and Pianoforte, Nos. 11 and 12. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

ONE of the most valuable of the recent additions to Novello, Ewer and Co.'s series of Albums for Violin and Pianoforte, will be found in these two books of Sonatas by Arcangelo Corelli (1653-1713). Every student of the violin either knows the compositions, or at all events has heard of them. They are unquestionably of the greatest value to all who would desire to form a style upon the best models. They have stood the test of time for two hundred years, and are still regarded with high estimation. Their value as compositions becomes more marked and definite with intimate knowledge. They are, it is true, old fashioned in form and phrase, but like a beautiful gothic building erected in the centuries long past, they are still the admiration and delight of all who care to make close acquaintance with them. This, the new edition now before us will help to do. The arranger has happily caught the spirit of the old master in his translation and adaptation of the original plain figured bass, and with true musical instinct has made his accompaniments partake of the right character which should distinguish them. They are artistic evolutions of the bare thorough-bass, without displaying any of the lavish ornamentation with which some modern writers have thought it necessary to surround them. In this respect they will certainly help to revive the love for Corelli's music, which was at one time in this country both great and extensive. Violinists may use the Sonatas for study and for public performance. All the difficult fingering has been made clear, and certain passages hitherto left to the discretion of the performer have been written out in extenso, a matter by itself of no mean importance. The whole arrangement is worthy of the composer, who was one of the founders of the modern school of violin playing, and creditable to Mr. Dolmetsch, his latest editor.

A Popular History of Music, from St. Ambrose to Mozart. By James E. Matthew. [H. Grevel and Co.]

IN this beautifully printed and amply illustrated book the author offers a most readable digest of the history of music in a form likely to fulfil its claim as a popular work. His style is pleasing and colloquial rather than severely critical. In pursuance of this design he has been led into making more positive statements concerning mediæval music than would appear to be warranted. The best writers of preceding times have felt doubtful about their opinions concerning these matters, and have left them in a learned uncertainty. Mr. Matthews retains the uncertainty without the qualification. In this respect his work must be read with caution and his statements accepted only for their own value. He has chiefly followed those French writers who have succeeded in casting a glamour of charm about their unrealities.

His description of instruments is more clear, though in one instance he speaks of Matthias van der Gheyn, a famous bell maker of Louvain, in a connection which would seem to imply that he lived in the twelfth century. In his description of the early organs he makes one or two mistakes, the most important of which are when he includes the "Positive" organ with the portative and regals, and when he fails to identify the organistrum with the "hurdy-gurdy." Neither in the descriptions of instruments of doubtful origin nor in those whose history may be definitely traced does he show much originality of research. He is on safer ground in the periods of history nearer to the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, though his dates are not always trustworthy. Of the character of the music of these periods little can be gleaned from the pages. There is plenty of most interesting information about old books and old writers, but little concerning their contents or the peculiarities of the compositions. Still the book of Mr. Matthew may be read by those who desire to get a general idea of the lives of musicians spoken of, and who wish to have musical matters placed pleasantly before them. The book for students, which shall satisfy educational needs, has yet to be written.

Motett for forty voices. By Thomas Tallis. Edited by A. H. Mann, Mus. Doc., Oxon. [Weekes and Co.]

In printing this Motett Dr. Mann deserves all due recognition from the lovers of the older English School of Music. He places within the reach of all who are interested in the preservation of these monuments of musical history a composition concerning which little was generally known. In his preface he gives no information concerning the original MS., or any traditions concerning its existence. He, however, mentions a list of known copies and their owners. He says that only seven scores are known. 1. In the Buckingham Palace Library. 2. In the British Museum Library. 3. In the Royal College of Music Library. 4. In the Madrigal Society's Library. 5. In the Rev. Canon Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley's Library. 6. In the possession of Mr. Reeves, Music Publisher, Fleet Street. 7. And in his own possession. He describes these in detail, and gives all the information that he has been able to collect concerning them.

The published score, arranged by Dr. Mann, has the first four choirs on the left-hand side, and the last four on the right; this is done for convenience of publication, and to obtain as good a view as possible of all the parts. Each choir consists of soprano, contralto, alto, tenor, and bass parts. The music is said to be in canon; in fact, in more than one instance when the work has been spoken of by historians it has been called Tallis's "Forty-part Canon." It is not, properly speaking, in canon, but it opens in canonic imitation, but it is not strict throughout. The ingenuity of the arrangement is such, however, as must commend it to all scientific minds among musicians, while the effect will astonish all those who know the state of music at the period at which it was written, for the distinctly advanced character it possesses.

The Months. Twelve Sketches for pianoforte solo.

Six Songs. Words by Caroline Radford.

Composed by Erskine Allon.

[The London Music Publishing Company.]

ALTHOUGH weak compositions—as we have frequently said in these columns—are often helped forward by "characteristic" titles, it by no means follows that strong compositions are to be thrown aside because they are intended to realise definite ideas. We are, therefore, inclined to notice the pieces before us rather as Sketches appealing to our love of abstract music than as illustrative pictures of "The Months," the names of which may be as much mistaken in listening to Mr. Allon's twelve pieces as in experiencing their varying effects in our daily life. The composer always writes well, and is, perhaps, at his best when unfettered by the necessity of musically depicting such decisive meteorological peculiarities as March winds, April showers, snowflakes, and other incidental varieties of our climate. Perhaps we may be inclined to select May, June, August, and November for special commendation; but as agreeable little trifles for drawing-room audiences they may all be conscientiously recommended. The Six Songs are highly favourable specimens of the composer's vocal writing. No. 1 ("Evening") and No. 2 ("A Spring Song") are charmingly adapted for expressive vocalists and intelligent pianists; and No. 3 ("Two Songs")—one treating of the singing of a girl in "tattered garments" and the other of a bright little maid who was "too happy to wonder why"—being almost pathetic in their contrast. No. 4 ("Aubade"), No. 5 ("Sweetheart"), and No. 6 ("Westleigh Bells") are in every respect vocal gems, and should be procured and earnestly studied by all accomplished singers.

The Music Class, or Sight Singer. By Sinclair Dunn.
[The Music Publishing Company.]

WE always look with especial favour upon Instruction-books by those actually engaged in tuition, because experience teaches them what is really necessary to ensure the steady progress of the pupil. It is also good, we think, to adopt the plan in vocal tutors of writing original exercises; for, as the author of this work observes, "there will be less chance of the pupil learning by ear, which would be the case if too many well-known airs were given." All Mr. Dunn's lessons are carefully written, and fairly suited for the purpose intended. But we scarcely think that a young student can derive a clear idea of the difference between a major and a minor scale, by being told that "In the Diatonic major scale from Doh to Me is a major third of two full tones," and "In the Diatonic minor scale Lah to Do is a minor third of three half tones." Neither can we agree with the examples of compound time being called 2.2, or 6.4, 2.4, or 6.8, 3.2, or 9.4, &c. It is very well to say that 9.4, for instance, is "three dotted minims"; but assuredly, then, it cannot be 3.2. Curiously enough, too, the simple signatures 2.8, 3.8, and 4.8 are used alone to express the compound times, two dotted quavers, three dotted quavers, and four dotted quavers. Many of the compositions contained in the book will, we have little doubt, become favourites with young vocalists, for although simple, they are all tuneful, and several include some good contrapuntal effects. Amongst the best of these may be mentioned the Quartet "My lady sleeps"; the Anthem "The Lord is good"; and the Glee "Awake," all the composition of Mr. Sinclair Dunn.

Six Characteristic Pieces for Pianoforte Duet.

Merrily Bounds the Bark. Three-part Song for Male Voices.

Love Wakes and Weeps. Serenade.

Composed by M. Heale.

[Augener and Co.]

THE first of the six Pianoforte Duets in the above list—a Minuet and Trio in E minor and major—is a very fair example of a good teaching trifle for young players, and well indicates the style and quality of the following pieces. No. 2 (a Gavotte) and No. 3 (a Waltz) are sufficiently melodious to interest juvenile pianists; and No. 4 (a Scherzo), No. 5 (a March), and No. 6 (a Polonaise) have some exceedingly good imitative points, apart from the attractive nature of the subjects.

As a vocal writer the composer (whose name is new to us) shows very decided talent, especially in the three-part Barcarole, "Merrily bounds the Bark," the words of which are adapted from Sir Walter Scott. Throughout this composition the hand of a cultivated artist is decisively shown, not only in the musical colouring of the poetry, but in the pianoforte part, which is charmingly interwoven with the voices. To male-voice choirs this part-song will prove a valuable acquisition. The Serenade, "Love wakes and weeps," derives much of its effect from the constant substitution of two even quavers for the group of three demanded by the time-signature, 6-8. The song, however, is well written for the voice, and with a good singer will no doubt secure a success.

Chwec'h o Gueuon Gwladgarol i Baritone neu Bass.
Gan R. S. Hughes. [Wrexham: Hughes and Son.]

THIS is a collection of six spirited and melodious songs for Baritone or Bass voice. The style of the airs is distinctly Balfean. Like most of the ballads of the famous Opera writer, they are well laid out for the voice, and such as would readily catch the ear. We have no doubt that the music has gleaned much of its character from the poetry. This, unfortunately for us, cannot be determined now. There are few musicians who are not in sympathy with the Welsh, although their language does not form part of a musical education. However, we may infer the agreement of music and words because of the consonantal character of the latter.

Among other pieces set to Welsh words which have been received from the same publishers, is a pretty setting of Longfellow's "Stars of the Summer night," by T. J. Davies, "Geiriau Cymraeg gan," which means Welsh version, by

T. C. Edwards, and a well harmonised version for male voices, by W. M. Roberts, of Wrexham, of "The banks of Allan Water." The melody of this, by the way, is erroneously attributed to C. E. Horn; it was stated to be composed by "a lady" on the original copy, with pianoforte accompaniment by C. E. Horn. There is also a spirited "Cavalier's Song," with English and Welsh words by W. M. Roberts, and music by J. T. Prichard, which will doubtless command many admirers.

Six Songs for Baritone or Mezzo-Soprano. Composed by Arthur W. Marchant. [E. Ascherberg and Co.]

THESE songs are highly favourable specimens of the composer's talent; indeed, they are so uniformly well written, melodious, and sympathetic with the poetry, that we should find it difficult to select any for special praise. No. 1, "The music of the sea," words by J. B. Doveton, and No. 2, "While she lies sleeping," words from the "Golden Treasury," have florid independent accompaniments, which will demand a good pianist for their due effect. No. 3, "After," words by J. B. Doveton, is wedded to a placid subject, charmingly accompanied; No. 4, "The stars are with the voyager," to the well-known words of Tom Hood, whilst steering clear of former settings of the poetry is expressive and owes a great portion of its effect to an obstinate syncopated accompaniment. Much of the interest of No. 5, "I will not follow the swallow," words by J. B. Doveton, is dependent upon the pianoforte part, to which, indeed, the voice is often a mere accompaniment. The song, however, is effective, and will certainly be welcomed where a sympathetic pianist and a trained vocalist are united in its interpretation. No. 6, "Bereft," words by J. E. C., is as simple in the music as in the poetry; but much true feeling is shown in the expression of the words, and the harmonies are unexceptionable throughout. We look forward with pleasurable anticipation to some works of more importance from Mr. Marchant's pen.

The Gleaner's Harvest. Cantata for Female Voices. Composed by Charles Harford Lloyd.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IN the "Gleaner's Harvest" the authoress of the words, Jetty Vogel, has in the ten numbers of her work contrived to make a most interesting libretto partly paraphrased from scriptural texts and partly original. The words are good, and the music, by its thoughtfulness of design, crystallises, as it were, the moral teaching intended to be conveyed by means of music which cannot fail to make a lasting impression upon the minds of those who study it. For the purpose of variety it is set for two sopranos and a contralto, each voice having airs or recitatives of considerable interest, and there is a chorus for three and four parts, as occasion requires. Melodiousness is the chief aim of the composer, coupled with proper expression. There is not, however, any lack of scientific contrivance in the arrangements of the parts; one of the choruses, "He blest and brake the loaves of barley bread," is set as a canon 2 in 1 at the fourth below, but this contracted contrivance does not interfere with the charm the music possesses. In its several numbers there are many beauties and the whole is not only an interesting but is a beautiful work.

Compositions by J. C. Beazley.

MR. BEAZLEY writes well and fluently whether for voices or for instruments. His song "The White Gondola" [Adams, Birmingham] is a capital song of the Barcarole type, and his little sketches called "Evening thoughts" show most favourably his power of writing engaging music for the pianoforte. In his music for the violin or violoncello he is even more happy. His "Trois morceaux" for violoncello and pianoforte [Ransford and Son] are exceeding graceful and by no means difficult pieces. They will be eagerly sought after by those who have conquered the rudimentary difficulties of the instrument, but who are most at home in the first position. He has also published, with Messrs. Augener and Co., a little book of six pieces for the violin, for the use of players who for the present prefer the first position, which are of distinct value. Of a more ambitious character and yet not overloaded with difficulties, is the Sonatina in D minor. In the second movement necessary to the form there is a considerable variety of characteristic work for both instruments, and especially for the violin, so that it is fitted to supply one part at least of the needs of students.

Antiphons, or Short Anthems. By Joseph Barnby, &c.
[Metzler and Co.]

THE two samples out of a series of six are capital specimens of simple yet effective writing. They are intended to occupy a place midway between the anthem and the hymn-tune. The setting of the familiar words "As now the Sun's declining rays" and "My God, I thank Thee," amply fulfil their avowed conditions. Mr. Jekyll's anthem, "Go forth, ye daughters of Zion," written for the Queen's Jubilee, is a musicianly and effective work; and "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace," though less elaborate, is well and devotionally written. Hamilton Clarke's Christmas anthem, "How beautiful upon the Mountains," is an admirable piece of original musical thought. Mr. Oliver King's Offertory Sentences, in unison, will minister to a distinct need. Mr. Barnby's anthem, "Praise, O praise our God and King," and his Benedictus in C, are well written and effective. The last-named are printed in octavo form, and if imitation be the sincerest form of flattery, then Messrs. Novello's famous Octavo Anthems have formed the basis of this form of sincerity.

To Myra. Song. Words by Lord Lansdowne.

Friend Sorrow. Song. Words by Adelaide Anne Procter.

The Mad Lover's Song. Words by Charles Dibdin.

Love's Memories. Song. Words by T. K. Hervey.

Composed by A. Wellesley Batson, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THESE songs are unequal in merit, but good musicianship is shown in all; and without displaying any undue ambition, they evidence a laudable desire to escape the commonplace. No. 1 ("To Myra") is perhaps the least effective of the set; No. 2 ("Friend Sorrow") has a graceful melody unaffectedly accompanied; No. 3 ("The Mad Lover's Song"), although in its nature justifying some little eccentricity, never oversteps the bounds of musical discretion; and No. 4 ("Love's Memories") forms an appropriate climax to a group of compositions which, although not remarkable for originality of thought, should ensure at least a polite welcome, even in this over-productive age.

Fifty-five single and double Chants. By John M. W. Young. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

CHANTS are now produced in such overwhelming numbers that a collection must possess some remarkable feature in order to secure any attention. Mr. Young's examples are not in themselves extraordinary; they are the work of a good musician and possess high average merit. But the author is dissatisfied with the inflexibility of the Anglican Chant, which often produces awkward effects in very long and very short verses, and also when the sentiment of the words frequently changes as it does in some of the Psalms. He would omit one or more bars in short verses, choosing, of course, such chants as permitted these curtailments, and to give the utmost expression to the words he would alter the melody or the harmony—in certain Psalms at every verse. With well trained choirs this could of course be easily done, but Mr. Young does not tell us how his system would work with congregations.

Prospero. Concert-Overture by F. Corder. Arranged for Pianoforte solo.

[Brighton: J. & W. Chester; London: Novello, Ewer & Co.]

THIS work was produced at the Crystal Palace Concerts in October, 1885, and was immediately hailed as an advance on anything the composer had previously done as regards symmetry and clearness of outline, while the freshness of the ideas won the approval of musicians who have a wholesome dread of ad captandum and commonplace compositions. The pianoforte transcription has been skilfully carried out by Mr. Corder himself, and may have the effect of calling attention to the work in its original form, and so rescuing it from the undeserved neglect into which it has fallen.

A Reverie. For Violoncello and Pianoforte. By Rosalind F. Ellicott. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MISS ELLICOTT is no novice in composition; efforts from her pen have been heard at the Three Choir Festivals, and have won approbation not only from local and friendly hearers, but from impartial musicians present at these gatherings. The Reverie is a very expressive piece and is written in the modern style, that is to say, with considerable freedom of rhythm. Miss Ellicott does not disdain a perfect cadence, but she frequently avoids it. The pianoforte part is mainly an accompaniment, but the player will find it interesting. Evidently the composer has endeavoured to avoid being commonplace and she has fairly succeeded.

Six Short and Easy Pieces in two parts, for the Pianoforte.
By E. A. Sydenham. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

NOTWITHSTANDING the declared simplicity of the design of these charming little pieces it is impossible for the author to conceal his true artistic promptings. In the six melodious compositions arranged so that the harmony is complete in two parts, and that the right hand is never carried beyond the compass of an octave, there is work which will insensibly lead forth the musical capabilities of young players, and so they will be welcome beyond the homes of Nellie, of Harold, of Mabel, of Cecil, of Lucy, and of Harry, the nephews and nieces of the composer, for whom they were written.

Trois Airs Populaires Russe, par Guido Papini.
[Ascherberg and Co.]

THERE is no deficiency in the supply of good music for the violin for the use of the many students of the instrument. These three Russian melodies, "Aurore d'Amour," "Le Rossignol," and "Le Sarafan rouge," have already won their way into popular favour for the quaint beauty of their melodies. The manner in which they have been arranged by Signor Papini will doubtless earn for them a considerable amount of favour among players of the violin, who will not despise a series of showy but not over difficult pieces.

Vocal Exercises. By F. Penna.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MR. FREDERIC PENNA has by long experience and acute observation accumulated an amount of knowledge of the most valuable character concerning singing and voice production. His pamphlet on the subject is replete with hints of high worth, and the new edition of his Vocal Exercises, with the accompanying observations, are designed to promote a good production of voice and artistic style. His remarks are sensible and to the point, and the publication may be confidently recommended as a trustworthy and excellent guide.

Six Morceaux de Salon. By Joachim Raff. (Albums for Violoncello and Pianoforte. No. 9.)
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE morceaux for violin by Raff are well-known to all amateurs of that instrument. Nothing need, therefore, be advanced in their favour as musical compositions. All that is necessary here to state is that according to this new arrangement—which includes the famous "Cavatina"—violoncello players will be enabled to rival the holders of the smaller instruments of the family to which that member of their predilection belongs.

Three Gavottes, for the Pianoforte. Composed by W. T.
Kirkwood Taylor. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

EVEN in the present over-productive age, we cordially welcome Gavottes as good as these; and although their composer's name is new to us, he must, we think, earn his right to a hearing. Perhaps Nos. 1 and 3 are the best; but they are all written in the true spirit of these old dances; and in No. 3, in C minor, with a Musette in the tonic major, we trace very much of the genuine ring of the classical masters.

Crowning of the May Queen. Trio for ladies' voices.
By Ernest C. Winchester. [Hart and Co.]

TUNEFULNESS and simplicity are the principal characteristics of this composition, and it is, therefore, within the capacity and comprehension of many youthful singers to whom more elaborate pieces would prove unintelligible and useless. Solo voices, as well as chorus, are required; but Mr. Winchester has been careful to keep within the means of elementary vocalists.

Harmony Lessons adapted for Classes, or Tuition by Correspondence. By Charles A. Trew.
[Schott and Co.]

THERE is a large amount of valuable information in these Harmony Lessons. It is a pity, however, that the author has adopted the "question and answer" form for the arrangement of his work. For all educational purposes it is valueless, for obvious reasons. If the matter had been arranged in paragraph form a more successful result might have been attained.

Grammar of Harmony. By J. Hunt Cooke.
[Alexander and Shephard.]

THE author of this concise little work has nothing new to advance, and fortunately no new theory to promulgate. The information he gives is arranged in a logical form and should be welcomed by those who desire to become acquainted with much that is useful and valuable, without having to overload their minds with needless disquisitions.

To Daffodils. Part-song. By Alfred King, Mus. Bac.
[Forsyth Brothers.]

HERRICK's charmingly quaint words are here set in a very pleasing and engaging form, which should make the composition much sought after by choral societies who desire to add to their répertoires things that are musicianly and musical.

Evening Service. By Alfred King, Mus. Bac.
[The London Music Publishing Company.]

MR. KING's setting of this Service is no less indicative of his musical powers, and while it preserves the dignity necessary, there is no apparent endeavour to be merely learned. The vocal parts are well set out, thoroughly effective, and at the same time duly reverent.

"Music, when sweet voices die." By Alfred King,
Mus. Bac. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE setting of Shelley's words as a madrigal for six voices, though not in strict madrigalian style, is an admirable composition, full of interesting passages remarkably well put together.

FOREIGN NOTES.

HERR WINKELMANN, the eminent German tenor, being prevented by illness from taking part in the Festspiele now in progress at Bayreuth, the rôle of Parsifal will be alternately interpreted by Herren Ferdinand Jäger, of Stuttgart, and Van Dyck, the Belgian Wagner tenor.

The Musikalisches Wochenblatt of Leipzig publishes in its No. 30 (the 19th ult.) excellent likenesses, accompanied by biographical notes, of the leading vocalists engaged in this year's festival performances at Bayreuth.

Wagner's early operatic work "Die Feen" has at length been produced at the Munich Hof-Theater, on June 29, and having been, it is said, magnificently mounted, could not fail to prove a success from a spectacular point of view alone. The music, wedded to a somewhat fantastic libretto, is said to have generally pleased, being, however, scarcely reflective of any distinct individuality. It is stated that Herr Angelo Neumann, the energetic impresario, has acquired the right of performance of "Die Feen" for the purpose of producing the interesting work of the immature Wagner during a tournee he is about to undertake in Germany and Italy.

A volume, comprising some thirty hitherto unknown compositions by Michael Haydn, the brother of the composer of the "Creation," has recently been discovered at Salzburg. The manuscript is dated from 1777 to 1779.

The sixtieth anniversary of the first performance, at Berlin, of Weber's "Oberon," was commemorated on the 2nd ult. at the Berlin Royal Opera, with a special representation of the work. "Oberon" was brought out here on July 2, 1828, some two years after its first representation at Covent Garden Theatre, London, under the personal direction of the composer.

Berlin, which can boast many statues and monuments, has, it appears, not as yet a single one devoted to a musician, although some of its own sons, such as Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer, and even the early teacher of both, genial old Zelter, the friend of Goethe, might seem to be certainly entitled to the distinction, such as it is. We now hear, however, that it is proposed to erect a monument, not indeed to the musicians just named, but to Beethoven, in the German capital, and that subscriptions are being successfully raised for the purpose of rendering this homage to the most cosmopolitan of the composers of the Fatherland.

Liszt's Oratorio "The Legend of Saint Elizabeth," the public performances of which are still few and far between, has recently been produced, for the first time, by the Singakademie of Jena, where it was enthusiastically received.

It is rumoured in Berlin musical circles that Herr Sucher—who quite recently accepted the post of Capellmeister at the Berlin Opera—has asked to be relieved of his engagement, and that he will be replaced by Herr Felix Mottl, of Carlsruhe, who, it is stated, has just declined a brilliant offer on the part of the directors of the Hungarian National Opera at Buda-Pesth.

Herr Ignaz Brüll's new opera "Das steinerne Herz," the libretto whereof is founded on Hauff's popular story of the same title, has been accepted for performance at the Vienna Opera. The new work of the successful composer of the "Golden Cross" will also be brought out by the German Opera of New York.

Weber's comic opera, "Die drei Pintos," as completed by Herr Mahler, has now been produced at the majority of German operatic stages, Breslau, Bremen, and Coburg being the latest additions to their number.

Among the operatic works to be produced for the first time at the Vienna Hof-Theater during the approaching season will be Rubinstein's "The Demon," Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," and Franchetti's "Asraël."

Dr. Hermann Kretzschmar has been appointed to the conductorship of the celebrated Riedelsche Gesangverein, lately vacated by the death of its founder, Professor Carl Riedel, of Leipzig.

M. Benjamin Godard, the well-known French composer, has just completed an opera, "Dante et Beatrice," the libretto of which is from the pen of M. Blau. The new work will be brought out by the Opéra Comique Company.

M. Armand Raynaud's four act opera "Le Roi Lear," the libretto founded on Shakespeare's tragedy and written by M. Lapierre, has just been successfully brought out at the Théâtre du Capitole de Toulouse.

During the season 1887-1888, comprising about five months, no less than twenty-nine new operas have been brought out in Milan.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser" is in course of preparation at the San Carlo Theatre of Naples, where it is to be produced for the first time during next season.

The first performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" took place on the 2nd ult., at one of the Concerts given in connection with the International Exhibition now being held at Bologna. The performance, ably conducted by the Maestro Martucci, is said to have been a good one, and created a profound impression. Several repetitions have since taken place.

Verdi's "Otello" is to be produced during the forthcoming season at the Berlin Opera, with Herr Albert Niemann and Frau Sucher in the principal rôles.

The successful performance is reported from Venice of a new opera, "Don Pedro," by the Maestro Castegnaro, among the demonstrations of approval having been the usual excessive number of recalls of the composer before the curtain (thirty-one in the present instance) without which no success is assured in the eyes of the audiences of la bella Italia.

Verdi is just now paying his annual visit to Montecatini, taking the waters and rigorously abstaining from everything connected, however remotely, with musical art.

A new opera entitled "D'Artagnan" has been attracting full houses for some weeks past at Genoa, the composer being a young man, Signor Romeo Dionesi, whose younger brother is just now creating a furor in Italy by his violin playing. The latter is only twelve years of age.

Under the title of "Lohengrin à Florence," an interesting pamphlet has just been published at Paris (Fischbacher) giving an unbiased view of the performance in question, and containing, moreover, some able remarks concerning the personality of the poet-composer. The author is M. Georges Noufflard.

A very interesting, though concise, biography of Franz Liszt has just been published at Leipzig (Ph. Reclam, jun.), from the pen of Herr August Göllerich, and forming Vol. 8 of the series of "Musiker-Biographien," commenced some years since by the late Dr. Ludwig Nohl.

J. C. Engel, for many years the Director of the Krollische Theatre of Berlin, an establishment devoted chiefly to the performance of opera, died at Berlin on June 28, aged sixty-seven.

The death is announced on June 30, at Paris, of Claude Théodore Hustache, an able musician, and for many years the vocal instructor at the Grand Opéra, aged sixty-seven.

We have also to record the death, last month, of Herrmann Levi, the eminent conductor of Wagnerian operas, and for many years the principal Capellmeister at the Munich Hof-Theater. Levi was born at Giessen in 1804.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. GEORGE WORGAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—On Easter Monday there died in this city a musician concerning whom a few words may be of interest to some of your readers.

Mr. George Worgan was grandson of the celebrated Dr. Worgan (whose portrait, I believe, still hangs in the Hall at Christ Church, Oxford), and son of a Gloucestershire rector. He was born in 1802, and had, therefore, reached the ripe age of eighty-six. His memory was unclouded and his enthusiasm for music undimmed to the day of his death, and I have known no greater pleasure than listening to his rich store of musical reminiscences, some of which I will briefly mention.

When quite a young lad he was one day taken to see Mrs. Charles Wesley, widow of the famous preacher, and during his visit was introduced to her two sons, Charles and Samuel, who were already elderly men. A few years later he deputised at the organ (at Portman Chapel, Mayfair) for the famous Samuel Wesley, whom he succeeded as organist. Many times has Mr. Worgan spoken with enthusiasm of "old Wesley's" fugue playing, which is now famous as a matter of history.

At the pianoforte Mr. Worgan's master was famous John Cramer, and he had as fellow-pupil the celebrated John Field, whose awkward appearance and exquisite playing my old friend described most graphically. Field went to Russia, and Worgan settled in London as a fashionable pianoforte teacher, his social and professional position being greatly helped by his aunt, Lady Parsons (wife of the Chief Magistrate at Bow Street), who had been a great favourite at the Court of George III. He taught in the families of many of the leading nobility, and was at one time nearly having the honour of teaching the Princess Victoria, our present Queen. Among his pupils were the daughters of the great Clementi, whom he has often described to me, and with whom, as indeed with all the well-known names from 1820 to 1850, he was on terms of intimacy. As a member of the Philharmonic Society Mr. Worgan attended the seasons conducted by Moscheles, Spohr, Smart, Mendelssohn, &c., and I have seen him almost wild with excitement when describing the first performance by Mendelssohn of his G minor Concerto, and its electrical effect on the audience. But (to go back still earlier) he would at another time tell of Weber and "Oberon," and how he went night after night to Covent Garden to hear the fairy opera and see its great composer, who was even then in the clutches of death; while his reminiscences of Paganini, and Jenny Lind, and Braham, and all the famous players and singers and literary men and women of half a century ago were simply legion.

Mr. Worgan retired with a competence about 1850, and soon afterwards came to New Zealand, where he bought a sheep-run. Fortune was unkind to him in this rough and strange land, and after many vicissitudes and heavy losses he took up his old vocation as a music-teacher, in which he laboured until a few years back. His last appearance in public here was at a concert of my own a few months ago, when, after a performance of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, he rose and spoke words of kind approbation and encouragement to the orchestra and myself. His familiar figure and polished courtesy of manner will long be missed by his many friends in New Zealand.

I am, yours, &c.,

ROBERT PARKER.

SOL-FAING THE MINOR MODE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Allow me to point out, in reference to Dr. Pole's article in your May number, that it is a mistake to suppose that in treating Lah as the tonic of the minor mode the Tonic Sol-faists show any peculiarity. They simply follow the practice of all who employ the movable Doh. At the time that Mr. Sedley Taylor read his paper I collected a number of expressions of opinion on this point from movable dohists who were not in any way under the influence of our school of thought. M. Amand Chev , of Paris, wrote that in the Galin-Paris-Chev  system the practice was identical with our own. Hal y, he said, had published a pamphlet thirty years ago taking the same view as Mr. Sedley Taylor. But their reply had been that the Lah notation must continue, because it makes the minor spring naturally out of the major. Mr. Joseph Seymour, editor of the Dublin Lyra Ecclesiastica, and one of the leading champions of the St. Cecilia movement in Ireland, also supported our view, and the American movable dohists, from Dr. Lowell Mason downwards, were further in our support. Mr. Barnby, Mr. E. Prout, and Sir Robert Stewart wrote letters on our side, as also did such practical men as the Chorus-masters and Conductors of the Bristol and Norwich Musical Festivals, the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, the Glasgow Choral Union, the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, &c.

"The point," as Professor Helmholtz says, "can only be settled by the results of experience in vocal instruction." This, as I take it, is practically the conclusion of Dr. Pole, as it is also of Mr. A. J. Ellis. Mr. Sedley Taylor collected some weighty opinions against us. I have no desire to question the position of his correspondents as theorists, but I submit that they are men who, while they have enriched English music in many ways, have not borne the burden of teaching sight-singing on a large scale to amateurs and children.—I am, Sir, &c., J. SPENCER CURWEN.

HANDEL'S PASTORAL SYMPHONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—It always seemed to me a singular thing that in the arrangement of the "Pastoral" Symphony Handel should have doubled the second violin part only. A short time since, in looking at the autograph score published by the Sacred Harmonic Society, I discovered that he had written a third violin part to play in octaves to the first violin, so that both first and second violin parts were doubled. Upon making this discovery I wrote to Sir Frederick Ouseley, and he told me that he possessed the score from which Handel conducted "The Messiah," and this has the third violin part to the Symphony, and further, that this part is also in the copy at the Foundling Hospital.

On learning these facts I wrote to Mr. Manns, and am happy to say that at the recent Handel Festival the Symphony was performed in the way the giant intended it to be, and I hope it will never be again performed otherwise.

I am, yours truly,

Latour, Ascot.

G. J. ELVEY.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

. Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur. Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

ALTO.—Better consult a qualified teacher of singing.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

AMPLEFORTH.—A Concert was given at the Benedictine College of St. Lawrence, on the 10th ult., with a programme which could not fail to please the lovers of classical music. It included pieces by Hummel, Mozart, Smart, Abt, Pague, Sullivan, Schubert, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Benedict, and Fanning. Dr. Nisbet, of Helmsley, had been entrusted with the task of getting up the Concert, and the result proved that it could not possibly have been in better hands. He obtained the services of Herr Oberhoffer and Herr Gits, and conducted the Concert most admirably. The orchestra and chorus were from the choir of the College, assisted by the Very Rev. the Prior and other of the fathers residing there.

BOOTLE, CUMBERLAND.—On Friday, June 29, a very effective two-manual organ, with the full compass of pedals, was opened by Mr. W. H. Bates, Organist of Holy Trinity Church, Whitehaven. There was a full choral service, followed by an Organ Recital. The organ was built by Messrs. Gray and Davison.

CAMPBELTOWN, N.B.—A Concert was given in Shisken School-room, Arran, on the evening of the 7th ult., by a choral party comprised of some fifteen members of the Campbeltown Select Choir, under the direction of Mr. J. M. Brown, its Conductor, the object of the entertainment being to help to meet expenses in improving the accessibility of that delightful but somewhat remote district. Several part-songs and glees were sung by the choir with remarkably good effect. Some songs were interspersed, the pianoforte accompaniments to which were played by Mr. J. W. Allen, Organist of Castlehill Established Church, Campbeltown. A Scotch Overture also, and a selection of Highland dance music were played by an excellent party of instrumentalists from Campbeltown. There was a crowded attendance of natives and summer residents. Noticeable progress, it may be mentioned, is being made in Campbeltown in musical matters. Within the last two or three years Concerts have been given with such works as Van Bree's St. Cecilia's Day in the programme, and this season it is intended to give a performance, on a moderately large scale, of Handel's Messiah, a work which has never yet been heard in Campbeltown in its entirety. There will be a competent quartet of principals and an orchestra. The chorus will consist principally of members of the several church choirs, of different denominations, an example of combination for such occasions that might well be copied in other places where there is no large Choral Society. The performance will be under the charge of Messrs. J. M. Brown and J. W. Allen.

CAPE TOWN.—There has been a dearth of Concerts in and around this neighbourhood during the early part of this season, but of late things have assumed a livelier aspect. The Musical Society, under the conductorship of Signor Maggi, gave their second Concert of the season on May 23, when Haydn's Symphony in D, and the Overture to Meyerbeer's Huguenots were given.—On May 29 Mozart's Twelfth Mass was performed by the St. George's Choral Society, in the Cathedral, under the baton of Mr. J. Deacon, the Precentor. On the whole, the chorus was good, although the work suffered from want of good soloists. Mr. T. Barrow Dowling was the organist.—Mr. Walther, the leading violinist of Cape Town, gave a ballad Concert in the Mutual Hall, on May 30, when he was assisted by Mr. T. Barrow Dowling and Mr. Henry Clements. The programme contained works by Casorti, Batta, Wieniawski, Chopin, and Gounod.—Remenyi, the violinist, gave three grand classical concerts here in the first week in June. The programmes contained Mozart's Quartet in C major, Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor, Spohr's Duet for two violins (Op. 67, No. 3), Schubert's Rondo Brilliant in B minor, Studies by Bach, Paganini, Tartini, &c. These make a total of twenty-seven Concerts given by Remenyi in this neighbourhood within the past six months.

CAVAN.—The ninth Annual Festival of the Kilmore Diocesan Church Choir Union was held in Cavan Church, on Thursday, the 19th ult. A new feature in this festival was the placing of portions of the choirs in the north and south galleries, which greatly enhanced the antiphonal singing. The whole service was well rendered, particular attention being given to the pointing of the Psalms and expression of the hymns. Great credit is due to the Choir Inspector, Mr. Matthews, Organist of Cavan Church, who conducted and accompanied the service. The choirs present were: Cavan, Kilmore, Kildallon, Killeshandra, Cotehill, Drung, Larah, Lavey, Killersherdiny, Ashfield, Ballyconnell, Ballighaise, and St. Andrew's.

CHELTENHAM.—Cheltenham College is one of the first of public schools which has attempted the representation of a Greek play. The play chosen for performance, the Electra of Sophocles, was given on June 28, and repeated on the two following days. It is a play which, though not deficient in incident, yet presents many difficulties in the way of representation. In dignity of character or language Electra is not comparable with Antigone. A comparatively small proportion of the play is occupied by the chorus, this makes the play, from a dramatic and musical point of view, one of the least promising for representation. It is gratifying, therefore, to be able to say that this first attempt was most encouraging. Mr. A. S. Owen performed the trying part of Electra. Mr. C. Woodhouse took the part of Orestes, Mr. H. O. Brooke of the Padagogus, and Mr. G. Hibbert Ware of Chrysothemis. The declamation was throughout good, and the emphasis accurate and distinct. The palm, however, must be awarded to Mr. Vans Best, as leader of the chorus, who showed real dramatic capacity, and to Mr. Ware, whose Chrysothemis, a vacillating but amiable and truly feminine character, were well within the range of a boy's powers of voice and action. The scenery was simple but effective, and the dresses were the product of local taste. To Mr. Hawtrey is due the credit of training the boys, and he has every reason to be gratified with the result. The music was composed by Dr. A. E. Dyer, who conducted an orchestra of which the principal and some of the boys formed part. The chief features of the music were the orchestral prelude, in which the principal themes are announced and developed. These are, the theme of Vengeance, the wail of Electra, the sympathetic theme of the chorus, and the martial strains allotted to Orestes. After the prelude comes a short orchestral piece in 3/8 time, entitled "Daybreak," introducing a duet for clarinets with an episode formed by a metamorphosis of the Orestes theme. Especially effective was the final ode, which was encored, and in which the chorus marches round the stage, while vengeance is enacted on Clytemnestra within. It is to be hoped that the experiment made at Cheltenham will be repeated by the other great schools of the country. It will add a vivid interest to classical teaching, and to that part of it especially which, though possessing the highest literary value, has hitherto appeared, as compared with the historic and political writings of antiquity, to be more remote from the needs and interests of our own day.

CHEPSTOW CASTLE.—By the permission of the Duke of Beaufort, K.G., a most successful Concert was given on the 4th ult. in the magnificent ruins of this ancient castle. The Cardiff Orchestral Society, at their annual pic-nic, gave some selections of operatic and other music under the able conductorship of Mr. S. G. Fifoot. Several hundreds were present, who thoroughly enjoyed the musical treat provided. Mr. W. A. Morgan was particularly successful with the solo flute in "Pique Dame" (Suppé). The March, "Turkish patrol" (Michaelis), was encored. Glees were sung by a choir of fifty male voices, under the direction of Mr. A. E. Kingsford.

CROOKHAM, FARNHAM.—By request of the Incumbent, Mr. W. H. Bates gave an Organ Recital in Crookham Church, on Wednesday evening, the 12th ult. A large number of persons from the neighbourhood was present, and listened attentively to the choice selection of organ music.

DENTON, ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—An Organ Recital in connection with the opening of the new organ at Trinity Wesleyan Chapel, was given on Thursday evening, the 19th ult., by Mr. J. Buckley Thompson, of Ashton. The programme included works by Mozart, Guilman, Guiraud, Morandi, Bach, Turpin, Smart, &c., and the Recital was a great success. The vocalist was Miss Herod, who sang "The King of love" and "Hark, my soul," by Gounod, and "I will extol thee," from Costa's Eli.

ENNISKILLEN.—The first of a series of Oratorio performances was given in the Parish Church on June 27, by the church choir. Robinson's Cantata, God is Love, was the work chosen, the solos being sung by Misses McKeege, Benson, Weaver, and Locknane; Mr. Benson, Corporal Fuller, and Rev. C. Ovenden. Mr. Arnold conducted.

HERNE BAY.—Mr. Ernest A. Cruttenden gave his annual Concert at the Town Hall on the 12th ult. The vocalists were Madame Dukas (Miss Louisa Van-Noorden), Miss Clara Palmer, and Mr. Richard Green. The instrumentalists were Mr. Henry W. Panrucker (violin), Miss Clara Palmer (harp); accompanists, Miss Concanon and Mr. Cruttenden. The Concert was successful and highly appreciated.

JERSEY.—Three successful Concerts were given in the Royal Hall, Peter Street, on the 23rd, 24th, and 26th ult., by a London Concert party, comprising Miss Adelaide Mullen, Miss Mary Willis, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Frank May, assisted by Mr. Julius Arscott (Conductor of the Jersey Choral Society) as solo pianist, and M. J. Lucotte as solo violinist. An interesting miscellaneous programme was given with much satisfaction, but the chief feature was the production of Balfe's Operetta The Sleeping Queen on the first two evenings. Miss Mullen and Mr. Beaumont represented the Queen and her lover Philippe, and renewed the highly favourable impression they created here some time since, Miss Mullen singing with refinement, and Mr. Beaumont's experience with the Carl Rosa Company serving him to good purpose. Miss Mary Willis was a very piquant and graceful Agnes, her artistic rendering of the charming air "Twas only a ribbon" being heartily encored, and Mr. Frank May won the favour of the audience by his humorous impersonation of the old Regent. On the third evening the last act of Travatore took the place of the operetta, Miss Mullen taking the part of Leonora, Miss Mary Willis that of Azucena, Mr. Beaumont, Manrico, and Mr. Frank May the Count.

LEAMINGTON.—Organ Recitals were given in the College Hall and Chapel on June 29 and the 1st ult. The selections were ably performed by the College Organist and Choirmaster, Mr. O. O. Brooksbank, F.C.O.

LEEDS.—There was a large gathering at the Town Hall on the 3rd ult., to listen to a selection of the pieces given last week at the Handel Festival in the Crystal Palace, performed by Dr. Spark, who was the recipient of frequent applause. The Recital opened with the chorus "Hallelujah," from the Oratorio Time and Truth, and fittingly concluded with the great "Hallelujah" Chorus (Messiah). The other selections were the "Nightingale" Chorus, "May no rash intruder"; Recit. and Air, "Lascio ch'io pianga"; Chorus, "He comes" (Esther); Contralto Air, "Thou shalt bring them in"; double Chorus, "The horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea" (Israel in Egypt); and the Air, "I know that my Redeemer liveth" (Messiah).—On Sunday, the 8th ult., the Praise Service, which is given annually by the Choir of Salem Chapel, consisted of A. R. Gaul's Sacred Cantata The Holy City, and Mendelssohn's Motett Heary my Prayer. The Choir was largely augmented. The solo parts were taken by Mrs. Dixon, Miss Amy Summersgill, Mrs. Carew (Miss Ada Sutcliffe), Mr. G. M. Hinds, and Mr. John Browning (principal bass at the Leeds Parish Church), whose services gave great pleasure to the large congregation assembled. Mr. W. A. Hudson played the organ accompaniments, and Mr. W. Toothill conducted.

NEW BARNET.—A Concert was given on Thursday evening, the 19th ult., at the Lecture Hall, Plantagenet Road. The part-songs and choruses throughout were rendered most creditably. The soloists, too, deserve a word of commendation—Mrs. Simpson, Miss Laura Brown, Miss Raven, and Miss Dowd. Mr. Stuttaford was the Conductor.

NEW ROSS.—The ninth annual meeting of the choirs in the dioceses of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, took place in St. Mary's Parish Church on June 30. A special steamer brought a large contingent from Waterford, and a larger gathering still arrived by the excursion train from Dublin. The Rev. Canon Wilcocks, of Bagnalstown, presided at the organ. The service commenced with the singing of Hymn 222, "Melita." The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Turle's music in D. The Anthem was "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem," by the Rev. E. V. Hall, in E, the solo being sung by Miss Preston, of the Enniscorthy choir. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Canon Robinson, of Delgany, and the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Canon Le Hunt, the esteemed rector of New Ross.

PETERBOROUGH.—The Epping Forest Church Choir Association held its eighth annual Festival in the Cathedral on Saturday, the 14th ult., numbering over 300 voices. The rendering of the service was hearty and accurate. Mr. Uilyett was the Conductor. The Organist to the Association (Mr. Riding, of Chigwell Parish Church) assisted Dr. Keeton at the organ. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were by Mr. J. H. Stammers, Organist of St. Agnes' Church, Liverpool. "O give thanks unto the Lord" (Goss) was the anthem, and Sir Arthur Sullivan's setting of "The strain upraise" the Offertory Hymn. Smart's Te Deum in F followed, and the Dean pronounced the benediction, which was followed by Sir John Stainer's seven-fold Amen.

ST. AGNES, CORNWALL.—A very successful Organ Recital was given in the Wesleyan Chapel by Mr. W. John Reynolds, Mus. Bac., Lond., on the 4th ult., to a large and appreciative audience. The selection included the following:—"Heaven and the Earth display" (Athalia); Mendelssohn; Invocation in B flat, Guilman; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Grand March in E flat minor, Schubert; a Jubilant March, Stainer; "The lost chord" Sullivan; Triumphant March (Naaman), Costa. Two Anthems were very effectively sung by the choir, the two selected being Sir John Stainer's "Ye shall dwell in the land" and Barnby's "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works."

TENBURY.—The Musical Society gave its first subscription Concert of the season on the 5th ult., the work selected being Mendelssohn's Oratorio, St. Paul. Mrs. Mason, Mrs. T. Monnington, Mr. W. Anstice, and Mr. Ineson gave the solo work respectively in admirable style, and the subscribers are much indebted to them for their valuable services. It is not too much to say that the choruses throughout were rendered with great spirit and clearness, the points in some of the more difficult numbers being taken up with astonishing accuracy and precision. A small band accompanied very satisfactorily. The oboe part (Mr. F. Elgar) in the bass song "O God, have mercy," and the violoncello (Mr. J. R. Symonds) in the tenor air "Be thou faithful," were given with great feeling and perfect tone. The Rev. J. Hampton, as usual, conducted, and must have been highly pleased at such a successful result after all his labour.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—A Concert of vocal and instrumental music was given in the Royal Concert Hall, on Monday evening, the 23rd ult. The performers were Madame Clara West, Miss Rose Dafforne, Mr. Walter Howard, some local singers, an orchestral band, and a young ladies' choir. A special feature of the Concert was Madame West's effective singing of the song "Berceuse," by John E. West.

WELLS, NORFOLK.—An Organ Recital was given, in the Parish Church, on the 25th ult., by Mr. Loraine Holloway. The programme was selected from the works of Raff, Bach, Smart, Handel, Hainworth, Batiste, Mendelssohn, Lemmens, Chipp, and Guilman.

WESTERHAM.—A Concert of Sacred Music was given at the Public Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 10th ult., by the Church Choir, assisted by several ladies and gentlemen of the neighbourhood. Mr. Ernest H. Smith, F.C.O., the Organist of the Parish Church, was the Conductor. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Rooke, and Messrs. Wright, Grover, and Fuller, and Master Warne. Instrumentalists—organ, Miss Streetfield; pianoforte, Miss K. Warde and Mr. E. H. Smith; violoncello, Mr. P. Smith; and violin, Miss Thompson. The choruses were admirably rendered, and the Choirmaster won golden opinions from his audience for the excellent manner in which he had trained his choir. The part-songs for female voices were effectively rendered by Mesdames Rooke, F. Streetfield, and Misses Colquhoun, Watney, and Streetfield. The violin solos of Miss Thompson, especially the Andante in F, were much applauded, and the programme was excellently carried out.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. H. G. Williams, Organist and Choirmaster to St. John the Evangelist, Horsleydown.—Mr. James M. Preston, Organist and Choirmaster to St. George's Church, Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Mr. P. C. Barrett, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Seaford.—Mr. Ernest E. Vinen, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Augustine's, Honor Oak Park.—Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., Organist and Choirmaster to Wandsworth Parish Church, S.W.—Mr. James W. Pallister to All Saints', Mile End New Town.—Mr. Wm. J. Maidment to St. Barnabas's Church, Sheffield.—Mr. John S. Brown, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Peter's Parish Church, Drogheda.—Mr. J. G. Cooper, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Kilworth, Leicester.—Mr. John E. Fimister, Organist and Director of the Choir to Victoria Chapel, St. John's Wood.—Mr. I. L. Jopling, L.R.A.M., to Kirkby Wiske, Yorks.—Mr. M. S. Wright, Organist and Choirmaster to Hornsey Parish Church.

DEATH.

On the 1st ult., suddenly, MARIE ÉLISA, aged 32 years, the beloved wife of Frederick James Thresher.

Now ready.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION, with various improvements and many additional Chants, of THE PSALTER, arranged for Chanting. With appropriate English Chants. Edited by the Rev. Sir F. A. THE

CAPTIVES OF BABYLON

AN ORATORIO COMPOSED BY

GEO. SHINN, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

(SUITABLE FOR CONCERT ROOM OR CHURCH.)

Price 2s. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

During the few months the Work has been published it has been taken up at the following places: St. Margaret's, Westminster (Canon Farrar's); Christ Church, Lambeth (Rev. Newman Hall's); St. Luke's, Bermondsey; East Dulwich; Peckham; Camberwell (two performances); Islington; Walworth (three performances); Brixton; Streatham (two performances); Southwark; Liverpool; Brighton; Leeds; Hastings; Luton; Whitby; Bilston; Coleford; Bradley; Halton; Maldon; Chesterfield.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the author of several Cantatas and other compositions, all of which are written in a style at once musicianly and popular. 'The Captives of Babylon' may be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas. The work contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"The music is appropriate, interesting, melodious, and but of moderate difficulty. The work is one of Mr. Shinn's best efforts, and we all know that Mr. Shinn has written some charming music. We heartily recommend this Oratorio to Choral Societies."—Essex County Chronicle.

"'The Captives of Babylon' will be found a welcome addition to the repertoires of Choral Societies and Church Choirs."—The Musical World.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the writer of many popular pieces for choral societies; but this is certainly the best thing he has produced."—Nonconformist Musical Journal.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"The libretto is well chosen, and forms a good base whereon to compose a first-rate work. With regard to the music we feel we can hardly do it justice. Mr. Shinn's composition is a veritable picture, following the details of his subject minutely. Where all is so good it is difficult to mention any special numbers."—United Service Gazette.

"It is cleverly written, and in an attractive style. The music is of a varied and pleasing character, so that it is likely to become very popular."—The Portsmouth Evening Mail.

"An effective work."—Musical Opinion.

"Contains many very interesting numbers, and will doubtless be much appreciated by those in search of something new."—The Newcastle Daily Journal.

"Mr. Shinn is well known, and deservedly so for his musical talent. Continuity of design and freshness of conception are apparent throughout the work. It contains many effective solos and choruses, and the music is not difficult. There is no doubt that the Oratorio will become very popular."—South London Press.

Easy Harvest Music.

EIGHT HARVEST HYMNS

WORDS BY

REV. S. CHILDS CLARKE

MUSIC BY

DR. DYKES, DEAN ALFORD, MR. LANGRAN, and the Editor, MR. A. H. BROWN.

Price 2d.; Words only, 1s. per 100.

"The hymns, which include a fine Processional, are excellently written, and as suitably set; and, if music is ever to win its way, will assuredly become great favourites at harvest festivals. They vary considerably in metre; but gladness and thanksgiving are the twin keynotes of all."—Western Morning News.

"A very excellent set of hymns, and most suitable for country parishes."—Church Times.

"The tunes are much in the current vein of thought, pleasant, tuneful, and having a part-song flavour. Nos. 1 and 3, by the Editor, are fresh and effective, and No. 5, by the same composer, is elegant in its melody and smooth in its harmony. No. 6, by that man of many accomplishments, Dean Alford, has a not unpleasant flavour of mixed antique and modern thought. Mr. Langran's (No. 4), a plain note against note tune, will be found to sing well. Dr. Dykes's (No. 2) is elegant and melodious, and set in the quasi-ecclesiastical measure, six-four, a time borrowed by the Church from an early period of modern dramatic music. The tunes will not fail to please modern choirs."—Musical Standard.

"We would specially draw attention to the unusually good common metre tune 'St. Angelus,' No. 5, which might well pass for a composition of 250 years ago."—Church Herald.

NARCISSUS. A Dramatic Cantata. For Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra. Words and Music by SAMUEL BUTLER (Author of "Erewhon," &c.), Op. 2 (Mus.), and HENRY FESTING JONES, Op. 4.

Characters: Amaryllis (Soprano), Narcissus (Tenor), Messenger (Alto or Baritone), Chorus (S.A.T.B.)

ARGUMENT.

PART I.—Narcissus, a simple shepherd, and Amaryllis, a prudent shepherdess, with companions, who form the Chorus, have abandoned pastoral pursuits and embarked in a course of speculation upon the Stock Exchange. This results in the loss of the hundred pounds upon which Narcissus and Amaryllis had intended to marry. Their engagement is broken off, and the condolences of the Chorus end Part I.

PART II.—In the interval between the parts the aunt and godmother of Narcissus has died at an advanced age, and is discovered to have been worth one hundred thousand pounds, all of which she has bequeathed to her nephew and godson. This removes the obstacle to his union with Amaryllis; but the question arises in what securities the money is to be invested. At first he is inclined to resume his speculations and to buy Egyptian bonds, American railways, mines, &c.; but yielding to the advice of Amaryllis he resolves to place the whole of it in the Three per cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, to marry at once, and to live comfortably upon the income. With the congratulations and approbation of the Chorus the work is brought to a conclusion.

Orchestral Parts can be hired.

London: WEEKES and Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.

RUTH

WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Ruth' is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musically—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"Ruth' has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

A PASTORAL CANTATA FOR TREBLE VOICES

WRITTEN BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

COMPOSED BY

CHARLES VINCENT,

Mus. Doc., Oxon.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

"Dr. Vincent has arranged his music so as to fully satisfy the dramatic needs. There are airs, duets, choruses with instrumental festal music, all of the brightest and most attractive patterns. The whole of the music is of the most interesting character, and some of it, as, for example, the opening choruses 'Awake, awake,' 'Behold the day,' the Finale 'For long shall we remember,' the duet 'Yes! sleep no more,' the songs 'Let the merry fives,' 'O nightingale,' and so forth, are far above the dead level of conventional interpretation which the character of the words would seem to inspire. Altogether the Cantata is well worthy of the notice of those who are in search of novel and pleasing things of its kind."—Musical Times.

"The music is in Dr. Vincent's bright and genial style, wholly free from pretension and affectation, just original enough to avoid being commonplace, easy to sing, always fresh, and sometimes even sparkling. There are evidences of sound, serious musicianship underlying the light and merry exterior, so the Cantata claims the right of popularity on more than the score of mere tunefulness, of which important quality it can nevertheless boast its full share. For a ladies' school concert or a choir of ladies it can be warmly recommended."—Musical Standard.

"It is the simple story of the crowning of a May Queen, and the music is as simple as the story. It is one of a series of Cantatas for female voices, published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. (London). If all the rest of the series are as melodious as Dr. Vincent's contribution, they will need no other recommendation. The movements in 'The Village Queen,' while they are thoroughly English in the character of their themes, have a variety of treatment which is sufficient to sustain the interest of the listener to the very last bar of the work."—Manchester Guardian.

TUNES FROM "THE HYMNARY"

BY

J. POWELL METCALFE.

Price Fourpence.

PREFACE.

There is an ever-increasing conviction that decency and order are better promoted by the singing than the saying of the Offertory Sentences—and that not only in our larger, but in our smaller churches as well. In the latter the adoption of the desired use is to a great extent prevented by the anthem character of the music employed in the usual offertory setting.

The following arrangements are more especially intended for the use of those choirs who, not being regularly trained in anthem-singing, are accustomed to rely on the tunefulness, form, and compactness of the hymn-tune for aid in fitly rendering the words they sing.

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price One Shilling each.

Church-music which is modern in form, interesting to a choir, and devotional in effect, whilst also of easy execution and of moderate compass for the voices, is certainly much needed in these days when choral societies are almost universal. This want is specially felt with regard to music for the Office of Holy Communion, and it is hoped that these services will be found well within the capabilities of an ordinary choir, yet not wanting in an effort to give due expression to the solemnity of the words. G. C. M.

CONCONE'S LESSONS

NEW EDITION

WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

50 Lessons for the Medium part of the Voice.

25 Lessons (Just Published). A Sequel to the Fifty Lessons for the Medium part of the Voice.

40 Lessons for Contralto.

40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone.

The sterling value and great usefulness of Concone's Lessons have been so long recognised and so generally admitted, that their extensive adoption caused, as a natural consequence, the issue of numerous editions in almost every country where the study of the Art of Singing is cultivated. No edition, however, which has hitherto come under my notice, seems to me as correct, complete, and reliable as it should be.

I have endeavoured to rectify this deficiency by adding in the present edition signs of expression and phrasing, where I considered it expedient to do so, completing, and in some cases altering, the breathing marks, and altogether carefully revising the whole work.—ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

LONDON & NEW YORK: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

NOVELLO, EWER & CO.'S MUSIC PRIMERS

EDITED BY
SIR JOHN STAINER.

In issuing this series of Music Primers the Editor sees with pleasure the realisation of a desire he has long felt, to place in the hands of teachers and students of music a set of educational works of a high standard at a price so low as to render them attainable by all.

The growing interest in music generally, and rapid spread of its study, so very evident in this country, render it of the utmost importance that the student's first steps in every branch should be directed with skill and based on sound principles. The Editor has kept this object steadily in view, and he believes that each one of these Primers will prove to be as carefully constructed in detail as it is comprehensive in design.

Such a result would have been impossible but for the hearty support and sympathy of those authors, men of known ability in their special branches of art, who have embodied the results of their long and valuable experience in their respective contributions.

While gratefully acknowledging the kindness of these gentlemen, the Editor cannot but express a hope that the Primers may prove as useful to the public, and as beneficial to art, as both authors and publishers have endeavoured to make them.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS

FOR SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR, AND BASS.

The present Collection of Part-songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small Classes.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

PRESIDENT—THE REV. SIR F. A. GORE OUSELEY, BART.

The Musical Association was founded in 1874 for the investigation and discussion of subjects connected with the art, science, and history of Music. It is similar in its organisation to the various learned societies. The members consist of practical and theoretical musicians (professional or amateur), as well as those whose researches have been directed to the science of acoustics, the history of the art, the construction of instruments, or other kindred subjects. The meetings are held at 27, Harley Street, W., on the first Monday in each month from November to June inclusive, when papers are read and a discussion follows. At the close of each session a report is sent to the members giving a transcript of the papers and discussions.

A prospectus of the Association will be sent on application to the Assistant Secretary.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1888.

NEW WORKS AT BIRMINGHAM.

THE Festival performances at Birmingham on the 28th ult., and three following days, took place too late in the month for notice in our present issue, but it is possible to give some account of the novelties produced. This, however, can only be done under disadvantages, on account of which allowance may be claimed. We write of works not yet heard, and now represented before us only by a pianoforte score. Criticism, therefore, is out of the question, and even description must be, in certain respects, imperfect. The reader will note this and limit his expectations accordingly.

We turn, first, to Dr. Hubert Parry's Oratorio, "Judith; or, The Regeneration of Manasseh." The libretto of this work is by the composer himself, and consists partly of rhymed verse, partly of passages either taken from the Bible or written in Biblical diction. Its merits are, of course, open to discussion without waiting for a performance of the accompanying music, but we refrain; as we do from expressing any opinion upon Dr. Parry's authority for establishing an intimate connection between the story of Judith, the destroyer of Holofernes, and that of the idolatrous, but finally repentant King, Manasseh. At the same time, we do not hesitate to lay it down as a general principle that a librettist should enjoy all reasonable liberty in the exercise of his art. There is no virtue in binding him to chronological exactness, the precise sequence of events, or the historical relationship of characters. Nevertheless, there are limits. A librettist may, for example, bring two personages together who in real life never met, as did Mr. Wills in "Charles I.," but he may not misrepresent them, as the same dramatist misrepresented Cromwell in the same play. Dr. Parry has certainly not been guilty of this offence, nor in any other respect, it appears to us, has he abused the liberty of his craft. The book is divided into two "Acts" (frankly so-called) and an Intermezzo; the acts being sub-divided each into three scenes. When the action begins it is laid in the Valley of Hinnom, where Manasseh and the people are gathered for the worship, with fiery sacrificial rites, of the god Moloch, whose name is given to the opening scene. Here the orchestra leads off with a kind of processional March (the first phrase afterwards used in a representative capacity) combined with which are passages for the people in chorus. Some of these are unisonous, others being in imitation, and all designed to express, with extreme vigour and rugged force, the feeling of the worshippers in presence of their idol. The King (tenor) presently speaks, describing the might of the god, and urging his subjects to make whatever sacrifice he may claim. This is done in a solo à tempo, having broad and simple phrases, that easily lend themselves to declamation. The People answer in a brief chorus, noticeable for its ejaculatory character as the prayer "Have mercy, dread Moloch," passes from mouth to mouth. Next the High Priest (bass) speaks, declaring in plain, diatonic phrase, with a massive accompaniment, that Moloch demands the sacrifice of those in whose veins runs the blood of the King. The people immediately congratulate Manasseh in a brief imitative chorus, "Hail! thou art highly favoured." But the monarch does not see the matter in quite the same light. The father overcomes the devotee, and, in an agitated passage, Manasseh pleads for pity, the crowd, whose children are not in present danger, meanwhile clamouring with unisonous voice for obedience, or a semi-chorus of Priests (basses) accompanying the King's passionate strains with the low, sinister utterance of "In vain thou seekest to keep them." The People support the Priests in a set chorus, "It is the god's decree." Here Dr. Parry is nothing if not contrapuntal. He begins with a subject regularly stated in fugue form and briefly developed. A second theme is then announced and dealt with in imitation, the two subjects being finally worked together. A strenuous peroration (with more unison) is followed by another solo for the High Priest, in which he declares an intention to carry out the god's behest. The scene ends with a short chorus in praise of Moloch, which is all the more effective because of its simple (diatonic, homophonic) structure. With good judgment the composer bases his Coda upon the leading theme of the preceding fugue chorus, "It is the god's decree."

The second scene presents a great contrast. It is laid, presumably, in the Palace of Manasseh, and opens with a dialogue between the Queen, Meshullemeth (contralto), and one of her children (soprano); the subject being God's mercy to Israel in times past, and the present apostasy of His people. As this proceeds the Queen sings a formal air, "Long since, in Egypt's plenteous land," followed by a short Trio for the mother and her two boys. The music of all this is studiously simple alike in theme and accompaniment. It may be urged that the melodies, if not absolutely commonplace, lack special distinctiveness, but they have an effect of truth to the situation and circumstances such as is, perhaps, better than originality. Of one thing we may be very sure—the dialogue of the Queen and her sons will meet with instant acceptance at the hands of the general public. At its close the priests of Moloch enter with the announcement "Great Queen, the King calls for his children," singing mostly in octaves, but now and then breaking into three-part harmony. Here, as during the Queen's reply, "What mean ye, ominous messengers?" the Moloch Leitmotif appears in the orchestra, and a suggestive effect is further gained by accompanying the words of the Priests with gloomy, threatening phrases, low down in the depths of the basses. The scene is relieved by a solo for one of the children, "Let us obey our father's word," written in the unaffected style of the previous dialogue. When the Priests have departed with their innocent victims, Judith (soprano) enters to the Queen in the rôle of the consoler, and sings an air, "Though into the valley of the shadow of death," designed and worked out in a purely orthodox spirit and somewhat conventional manner. With this the scene comes to a close.

The third scene takes us back to the Valley of Hinnom, where the People are calling upon Moloch, as the Priests with the children appear. By this time Manasseh has recovered himself, and bids the crowd welcome the victims with joyous songs. This leads to a graceful three-part chorus, "Crown we the stainless victims," relieved by interpolated solos for the King, and contrasted with lugubrious ejaculations (basses in three parts) from the fanatic Priests. The musical interest of the number appears to be worthy of a dramatic situation which is happily constructed. As the children are about to be sacrificed, Judith enters with burning words of passionate reproof, ending with an announcement that the hosts of Assur are advancing upon the city to work the vengeance of the Lord. This takes the form of a largely-developed air, "Thou weak and faithless king." Here the composer seems to have put out all his strength, with the result that there is passion in the music as well as in the words, while some of the declamatory passages are of remarkable energy. Properly sung, Judith's tour de force should be a veritable "hit." The People hear the maiden to the end of her testimony, then breaking out with "Who is this that railleth at Moloch?" "Cast her into the furnace," &c. Their chorus, though short, is terribly earnest and fiercely vindictive, after the fashion of "Stone him to death" and "Let the guilty prophet perish." At this crisis a Messenger (baritone) enters to announce the near approach of the Assyrians. Manasseh utters some reassuring words to his people, and then begins the Finale of Part I., which opens with defiant passages for the tenors and basses, followed by renewed prognostications of coming woe from Judith. A bold march theme suggests the enemy's advance, whereupon the Priests and People begin to invoke their god, "Moloch, hear us now," using more measured strains than perhaps, are strictly warranted by an exciting situation. A short answering chorus of Assyrians (tenors only), "The heroes of Assur are like to a host of lions," is better in keeping, and expresses the resolute confidence of men who see nothing to fear, and when this gives way to the renewed outcries of Manasseh's people, there is no reason to complain of wanting excitement and terror. The chorus here is considerably developed and full of dramatic intensity, as well as marked by able construction, above all in regard of climax. A Coda in full harmony of six parts brings the first principal division of the work to an effective end.

The Intermezzo, which exists to show the repentance of Manasseh, now a captive in Babylon, takes the form of an air, "I will bear the indignation of God." From the pianoforte score we judge it to be somewhat elaborately accompanied, and, as its effect must depend very much upon the orchestration, an opinion of the number before performance would probably be misleading.

At the opening of the second part we have a scene laid in Jerusalem and entitled "The Return of Manasseh." It begins with a chorus, "Wail, ye solitary people," in which the Israelites lament their fallen estate. Next comes a consolatory air, "The Lord is long-suffering," sung by the Queen; and a chorus, "Our King is come again"; the return of Manasseh being now supposed to have taken place. The scene ends with solos and concerted passages for the King, Queen, and Judith. If we do not dwell upon special characteristics here, it is because a certain sameness distinguishes the music, which is throughout pitched, so to speak, in a low key, and certainly lacks the effect of strong contrast. The most striking number we take to be the Queen's air—an eloquent expression of feeling. It should be added that the second chorus is, almost throughout, more or less contrapuntal, and abounds in imitative passages.

At the opening of the next scene we hear a Herald from Holofernes demand the submission of the city in three days. The message is conveyed in sufficiently ferocious terms, and the composer (whose strength appears to lie in such work) has wedded to it some very bold and effective music, using his orchestral basses, as often before, in a happy manner. Remembering their sufferings in the past, the People break out into a chorus of lamentation, "Woe! our city's walls are broken," brief but highly expressive. Judith, on the other hand, speaks words of confidence, declaring that within the allotted time God will send deliverance by her hand, and following this up with an air, "I pray Thee, O God of my Fathers." The people respond in chorus, "The God of our fathers give thee favour"—a somewhat largely developed number of the now familiar contrapuntal character.

Its chief feature is a fugal episode, "Jerusalem, in His strength," having a broad diatonic theme.

The third and last scene, entitled "The Exploit of Judith," opens on the walls of Jerusalem, during the night of the assassination of Holofernes by the heroine, whom that unsuspecting soldier had taken to his tent. The situation here is happily conceived. We hear the sentinels questioning each other in the darkness, "See ye the camp-fires of the host of Assur? Doth any stir?" basses answering to tenors, and vice versa, while a march rhythm is sustained by the orchestra. Now and then, as the soldiers' voices die away, the anxious King recalls God's mercies in the past, and so the music proceeds till, as dawn breaks, the people of the city come forth and join in the climax. This number undoubtedly ranks among the best in the work. It is picturesque and interesting, and it shows real capacity for dramatic suggestiveness. The voice of Judith is now heard, exultantly proclaiming the success of her mission, attested by the head of Holofernes, and commanding the soldiers of Israel to fall upon their foes. Her solo is worthy of the episode it follows, none the less because Dr. Parry calls again upon the orchestral basses for conspicuous service. The people answer in jubilant strain, "Arise, O Israel, smite ye your enemies," their chorus being among the most important examples in the Oratorio. Dr. Parry here shows that he has not exhausted his power of vigorous contrapuntal writing, nor, by the way, of inventing good themes for the purpose. A bustling air (Manasseh), "God breaketh the battle," belongs to the class of which "The enemy said" is a fair type, and is a very good specimen to boot, being brilliant and stirring in the extreme. The Finale follows; opening with an air, "O Lord, Thou art glorious," sung by Judith, and closing with an elaborate chorus, "Put off, O Jerusalem, the garment of thy mourning," in which several themes are introduced and treated contrapuntally in a more or less successful manner with cumulative effect.

The librettist of Dr. J. F. Bridge's dramatic Cantata "Callirhoë, a Legend of Calydon," is Mr. W. Barclay Squire, who completed his share of the work in October, 1882. Mr. Squire took the story from Pausanias, who, in his "Itinerary of Greece," speaking of Patræ, relates how a priest of Bacchus named Coresos loved a maiden, Callirhoë, and, when rejected by her, prayed Bacchus to afflict the Calydonians with a plague. Alarmed at the consequences, the inhabitants consulted the oracle in Dodona, and heard that their affliction would cease with the sacrifice of Callirhoë by Coresos, or with the death of some one who would volunteer to perish in her stead. In due course, there being no substitute found, Callirhoë was led out to die by the hand of her priestly lover. But at the last moment Coresos slew himself as a ransom. Moved by the spectacle of so great love, Callirhoë resolved not to survive it, and at once put an end to her existence. The lovers were transformed into river gods and a stream flowed from beneath the altar near which they had perished. With this story Mr. Squire has dealt in dramatic fashion, employing full "stage directions," &c., and using throughout rhymed verse having ample variety of rhythm. The poem, though open to criticism in places as wanting dignity and elevation, is sufficiently good for its purpose, and sometimes approaches the character of poetry, as, for example, in the opening chorus, which begins—

Before the silver-footed dawn
Had risen from the purple sea,
We trod the flow'ry mead to weave
A wreath for thee.

The action of the Cantata begins in the Temple of Dionysos at Calydon what time the messengers of Coresos approach Callirhoë with the offer of his love. Doing this they sing the chorus to which reference has just been made. Dr. Bridge's music to the first number at once engages attention by the grace and smoothness—we had almost said the Greek beauty—of its themes. Regarding the orchestral effects, it is only possible to make guesses of little or no authority; but there is every reason to believe that the chorus, as a whole, is charming, and entirely appropriate to the situation with which it stands allied. Callirhoë behaves rudely to the sweetly-singing emissaries of her lover—that is to say, she turns her back on them and answers never a word. Of course, we are not surprised to see them leave the temple; crestfallen certainly; indignant probably. But the maiden finds her tongue when Coresos himself arrives on the scene. There can be no mistake about her sentiments as expressed in a recitative, "Take hence your gifts." She says she came to worship, not to prate of love, about which she knows nothing; and Coresos answers with protestations and appeals. In this answer the dialogue proceeds to a set duet, whereon the woman defies Eros, and the man vaunts the power of that all-subduing god. The music of the dialogue lends itself admirably, when needful, to declamatory effect, and contains, moreover, some happy devices. For example, Coresos dwells tenderly upon the name of Callirhoë in the course of his petition, and when she exclaims in reply, "Thou seekest love, and I have none to give," the phrase he employs is heard in the orchestra, like a still pleading voice. Here and there, moreover, effects are reached by the shortest way, as when the composer gives us the full chords (not inverted) of D major and E flat major in succession, two bars later ending the phrase in E major. The duet is melodious, but in no sense dramatically striking—a fact which, however, militates nothing against the concert-room use which probably awaits it. At its close Callirhoë leaves the temple, while Coresos, kneeling before the statue of Dionysos, offers up a prayer, "Let not the maiden rebellious be telling, The gods may be dared in thine own holy fane," and exclaiming, "Smite with thy madness and put forth thy power." The music of this solo is characterised by measured strains of a solemn cast, contrasting with the passionate expression of the words. Dionysos answers the entreaty. Like the statue of the Commendatore, his image bows acquiescence, and such prompt action is taken that hardly has Coresos quitted the temple before it is filled with a crowd upon whom the "madness" has fallen. These sing a chorus "Oh, horror! Oh, misery," which sets Dr. Bridge's power of vigorous expression in a very favourable light. The composer gets a strong grip of the situation in the opening bars, and maintains it throughout a considerable development of the musical ideas, thus bringing the first part of the work to an effective and satisfactory close.

The second part opens in the grove of Dodona, whither messengers from the afflicted inhabitants of Calydon come to consult the oracle. They enter (tenors and basses) singing a prayer, "Hear us, Zeus, for we have sought thee." The music is earnest and in all respects appropriate, but probably its general interest will, in performance, be overlooked for the special effect of an orchestral device, involving the use of small gongs, imitating the noise of the brazen vessels, which, suspended from the oaks, clashed together in response to suppliant appeals. A short dialogue for the Chief Priestess and the Messengers follows, after which the ministrants begin their rites, and the Priestess invokes Zeus to declare his will, her strains being accompanied by the leading theme of the chorus, "Oh, horror! Oh, misery!" Winds stir the trees, the brazen vessels clash together, and the scene ends with an ensemble in which the Priestess interprets the sounds, supported by the chorus of her attendants (soprano and contralto), while the Messengers express their doubts as to the performance of the god's decree, which declares that Callirhoë, or one in her stead, must go to death as a willing victim. This piece has obviously been written with great care, and abounds in details that command interested observation; but it is one that requires to be heard before an opinion upon its merit can safely be given. With it the second part of the Cantata comes to an end.

The scene of the third part is that of the first. As it opens we find Callirhoë alone, lamenting her early fate in a recitative and air, "Woe is me." The latter is certain to be accounted a successful example of the pathetic in music, and is marked by equal skill and feeling. Following it comes a processional March, played as Coresos, with priests and people, enter the temple of sacrifice, preparatory to a duet and chorus, in the first part of which the maiden freely offers her life, and the lover laments the necessity of taking it. Here, as in the ensemble, the composer is melodious and rhythmical, though, perhaps, somewhat wanting in the intensity requisite to such a situation. There is power, however, in the short solo sung by Coresos before he stabs himself. A scena for Callirhoë, "Ah, peace! for heard ye not?" also strikes us as worthy of the high-strung situation, and as being one of the best numbers in the work. Seeing Callirhoë destroy herself in turn, the people break out into lamentation, their brief chorus, "Oh! sorrow," speaking a whole volume of dramatic feeling. As the stream rises from beneath the altar and the lovers appear in their new character of river deities, the people pass from notes of woe to strains of gladness—an admirable contrast reminding us of that in the Finale of "Acis and Galatea," though emphasised by different musical means. This chorus is largely developed, and of excellent effect, bringing the entire work to an end which leaves behind it a very good impression.

With the foregoing necessarily bald and sketchy outline our remarks upon the Birmingham novelties must for the present cease. In our next we shall be able to pronounce upon their merits, and, in all probability, to accept them as welcome additions to the store of good English music.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XXV.—SCHUMANN (concluded from page 462).

ALL the letters that now remain for consideration are addressed to Clara Wieck. Between the first of these and the last of those in which reference is made to Ernestine von Fricken there is an interval of ten months—viz., from the end of August, 1834, to the beginning of November, 1835. In that time "love's young dream" with Ernestine had been dispelled, and the composer's engagement to her broken off. The exact date of this catastrophe is not revealed. We know only that it took place in 1835, but the knowledge is quite sufficient, taken in connection with the letters now before us, to prove that Schumann consoled himself with remarkable rapidity. The master was hardly off with the old love before he was on with the new. In November of the year which witnessed the Ernestine rupture he wrote to Clara Wieck from Zwickau: "In the midst of all the autumn festivities and other delights, an angel face is always peeping at me, and it is exactly like a certain Clara of my acquaintance." It may be said that these words are precisely in character with many others addressed by Schumann to the young girl in whose father's house he had lived as a member of the family. The remark is cogent if we take the just-quoted passage by itself, but how if it be read in connection with the following extract from a letter dated February 13, 1836?

"To-day I have been excited by various things; the opening of my mother's will, hearing all about her death, &c.; but your radiant image shines through the darkness and helps me to bear everything better. . . . I am quite clear about my heart. Perhaps your father will not refuse if I ask him for his blessing. Of course, there is much to be thought of and arranged. But I put great trust in our guardian angel. Fate always intended us for one another. I have known that a long time, but my hopes were never strong enough to tell you and get your answer before."

Persons interested in affairs of the heart may find pleasure in the study of the situation as revealed by the foregoing passage, especially in attempting to understand Schumann's engagement to Miss von Fricken while he knew that Fate had allotted him Miss Wieck as a wife. The explanation is, perhaps, that the musician, like a good many young people in every generation, did not know what was actually going on within him, or suspect that the feeling with which he regarded Clara was love, that for Ernestine being only admiration. In many cases discovery is made too late, but Schumann was wise in time.

The present letters to Clara Wieck extend, in point of date, from 1836 to 1840, and cover, therefore, the whole period of the artist-couple's engagement. They are not, of course, printed entire. In such communications passages intended only for one person find place, and as to these publicity is equivalent almost to profanity. Madame Schumann has suppressed them, and given to the world no more than that which may properly interest it, including a large number of references to musical men and things. At the risk of being as discursive as the letters themselves, we will take some of these in order. Remarks by Schumann upon his own music are very numerous. In one place we read: "None of my things will really do for playing in public, but among the Phantasiestücke there is one, 'In der Nacht,' and another, 'Traumeswirren'; they will be out soon, then just look at them." Again: "The 'Davidsbündler' dances and Fantasiestücke will be finished in another week. There are many bridal thoughts in the dances, which were suggested by the most delicious excitement that I ever remember. I will explain them all to you one day." Later: "Have you not received the 'Davids-tänze'?" (One copy is in silver print.) I sent them to you last Saturday week. You might patronise them a little, do you hear? They are my particular property. But my Clara will understand all that is contained in the dances, for they are dedicated to her, and that more emphatically than any of my other things. The whole story is a Polterabend (Wedding eve) and now you can imagine it all from the beginning to the end. If ever I was happy at the piano it was when composing these." Yet again on the same subject: "Do let me know how you like the Phantasiestücke and 'Davidsbündlertänze,' but tell me quite openly, and think of me, not as a lover, but as your husband. Do you hear? I should think you might play 'Traumeswirren' and 'Des Abends' in public some day. I fancy that 'In der Nacht' is too long. And tell me how my Etudes were received in Vienna. Do you hear?"

The origin of the "Kinderscenen" is thus revealed:

"I have been waiting for your letter, and consequently have composed books-full of things—wonderful, crazy, solemn stuff; you will open your eyes when you come to play it. In fact, sometimes I feel simply bursting with music! But before I forget it, let me tell you what else I have composed. Whether it was an echo of what you said to me once, that sometimes I seemed to you like a child, anyhow, I suddenly got an inspiration, and knocked off about thirty quaint little things, from which I have selected twelve, and called them 'Kinderscenen.' They will amuse you, but, of course, you must forget that you are a performer. . . . Well, they all explain themselves, and, what's more, they are as easy as possible. But, I say, Clara, what are you coming to? You tell me to write quartets, 'but please let them be very clear'; why that sounds like a Dresden Fräulein! Do you know what I said to myself when I read that? 'Yes, so clear that she shall not know whether she is on her head or her heels.' And then, 'Do you thoroughly understand the instruments?' Why, of course I do, young lady, else how should I dare attempt it? But I must praise you all the more for thinking of Zumsteeg in 'Ende vom Lied.' When I was composing it I must confess that I thought: 'Well, the end of it all will be a jolly wedding,' but, towards the close, my sorrow about you came over me again, so that wedding and funeral bells were all ringing together." Reference is made to other of his works in the same letter, beginning with a Sonata conjectured to be that in G minor: "You are pretty right about the last movement of the Sonata. It displeases me to such a degree (with the exception of certain passionate moments) that I have discarded it altogether. And I have come back to my original conception of the first movement, which you have not heard, but I am sure you will like it. The third Sonata is in F minor, and quite different from the others. I have, besides, finished a Fantaisie in three movements, which I had sketched out (all but the details) in 1836. I think the first movement is more impassioned than anything I have ever written—it is one long wail over you. The others are weaker, though nothing to be ashamed of." Further on in this remarkable letter we find a statement about the Etudes Symphoniques which cannot now be read without surprise:—"You were wise not to play my Etudes. That sort of thing is not suited for the general public, and it would be very weak to make a moan afterwards, and say that they had not understood a thing which was not written to suit their taste, but merely for its own sake. But, I confess, it would be a great delight to me if I ever succeeded in writing something which, when played by you, would make the public dance with delight; for we composers are all of us vain, even when we have no reason to be so." It is clear that Schumann was no more gifted with prescience than other people. There came to him at this time no notion of what would be the position of his works in public esteem after the lapse of fifty years.

Clara Wieck's much-sought-for opinion of the "Dauidsbünder" dances may, perhaps, be inferred from a passage immediately following that last quoted:—"You pass over the 'Dauidsbünder' very lightly; I think they are quite different from the 'Carnaval,' compared to which they are what a face is to a mask. But I may be mistaken, as I have not forgotten them yet. All I know is that they were written in happiness, and the others in toil and sorrow." One can detect a little bitterness in the tone of these remarks, and measure it, perhaps, by the anxiety with which, as we have seen, Schumann pressed for an estimate of a work that clearly stood in high favour with himself.

In a subsequent letter we have a remarkable paragraph wherein Schumann lays bare, to some extent, the workings of his musical organisation, at the same time letting us see that he had a proper estimate of his own gifts:—"I can be very serious too, and sometimes for days together; but don't let that alarm you, for it is only when my mind is at work, and I am full of ideas about music and my compositions. I am affected by everything that goes on in the world, and think it all over in my own way, politics, literature, and people, and then I long to express my feelings and find an outlet for them in music. That is why my compositions are sometimes difficult to understand, because they are connected with distant interests; and sometimes striking because everything extraordinary that happens impresses me, and impels me to express it in music. And that is why so few (modern) compositions satisfy me, because, apart from all their faults of construction, they deal in musical sentiment of the lowest order, and in commonplace lyrical effusions. The best of what is done here does not equal my earliest musical efforts. Theirs may be a flower, but mine is a poem, and infinitely more spiritual; theirs is a mere natural impulse, mine the result of poetical consciousness." From a passage in a later epistle it would appear that Schumann sometimes thought of himself as an unconscious medium of poetic fancies. It is notorious that he invented names for his pieces after they were written, but in the case now to be cited he found out that he had drawn a picture without knowing it: "After I had finished it ('Die Nacht') I found, to my delight, that it contained the story of 'Hero and Leander.' Of course you know it, how Leander swam every night through the sea to his love, who awaited him at the beacon and showed him the way with lighted torch. It is a beautiful, romantic, old story. When I am playing 'Die Nacht' I cannot get rid of the idea; first he throws himself into the sea; she calls him, he answers; he battles with the waves, and reaches land in safety. Then the Cantilena, when they are clasped in one another's arms, until they have to part again, and he cannot tear himself away until night wraps everything in darkness once more. Do tell me if the music suggests the same things to you." Most probably it did nothing of the kind, and, indeed, some of us may think that these fanciful interpretations of musical ideas—this compelling of meanings utterly foreign to the composer's thought and purpose—is more degrading than honourable to an art which has a story of its own to tell. Schumann thought far too much of music in its pictorial or illustrative capacity. Its peculiar mission is, however, far higher than that of the painter or the engraver. A passage in which comparison is made between the "Carnaval" and the "Phantasiestücke" throws some light upon the artistic tendencies of Clara Wieck at this time. She appears to have had her youthful extravagancies, which Schumann took care more than once to rebuke in gentle fashion. He does so in the present case: "Dear Clara, I trust you will allow me to make one remark. You often play the 'Carnaval' to people who know nothing at all about me. Would not the 'Phantasiestücke' be more appropriate? In the 'Carnaval' each piece always counteracts the one before it—a thing which every one does not appreciate; but in the 'Phantasiestücke' one can indulge one's self so deliciously; however, do exactly as you like. I sometimes fancy that you value the qualities which you possess as a girl too little in music. I mean sweetness, simple amiability, and natural simplicity. You would rather have continual thunder and lightning, and always something fresh, which has never been done before. But there are likewise some eternal old traditions and moods which must influence us. The romantic element does not depend upon figures and forms; it will always appear if the composer be anything of a poet." It is now possible to quote Schumann against the "sensational" in music, and against a craze for originality at any price. He, too, recognised the "eternal old traditions," and valued sweetness and simplicity, though not always an exemplifier of those precious qualities. As regards Clara Wieck, the evidence of the foregoing extract is supported by that of another in which, without knowing at what speed she took three of the "Kinder-scenen," Schumann begged her to play them just twice as slow, adding "I know you, Clärchen, and your impetuosity."

One of the letters from Vienna contains a reference to the "Humoresque" (Op. 20): "I have been all the week at the piano, composing, writing, laughing, and crying all at once. You will find this state of things nicely described in my Op. 20, the 'Grosse Humoreske,' which is already at the printer's. You see how quickly I always work now. I get an idea; write it down and have it printed: that's what I like. Twelve sheets composed in a week—you will forgive me, won't you, that I have kept you waiting a little while?" Another letter makes mention of the 'Phantasie' (Op. 17): "Mendelssohn goes to Frankfort to-morrow, and will take you the 'Phantasie.' . . . It is a real pleasure only to look at Mendelssohn; he is such a splendid artist, and he is very fond of me too. . . . You will only be able to understand the 'Phantasie' if you recall the unhappy summer of 1836, when I had to give you up. Now I have no cause to compose in such a depressed and melancholy strain." Subsequent letters contain passing remarks upon various compositions, but these we must pass in favour of passages relating to a contemplated opera, and curiously interesting as evidence that Schumann, whose genius was anything but dramatic, had no suspicion of the fact. Writing to Clara Wieck from Leipzig, in March, 1840, the master said: "I will let you have a peep at my operatic plans. Send to a circulating library for the second part of Hoffmann's 'Serapionsbrüder.' There you will find a story, 'Doge und Dogeressa.' Read it through carefully, and imagine everything on the boards; then tell me your opinion, and what objections you have to make. What I like about the novel is the simplicity and nobility that runs all through it. Julius Becker is to versify the text for me; I have sketched it all out. I am firmly resolved to give myself this treat during the summer, and I am sure you will often say a kind word to your poet. So don't forget to send for the book, but don't say anything to anybody at present." The course of the projected lyric drama, like that of his own love, did not run smooth, and Schumann presently wrote: "As to the text for my opera, I am always encountering fresh difficulties. Altogether, to tell you the truth, I miss the deep German element in it. But one ought to attempt all styles, and I mean to set to work." Again we read: "To-day I have been working hard at the text of my opera, and begin to think that, as a whole, it will be more effective, as it has acquired a deeper meaning and more continuity. You will be pleased with it. The witch must be quite transformed into a fortune-teller in the odour of witchcraft. She must be the soul of the whole story, and will be a rôle for Schröder, which it makes one enthusiastic to think of. I hope to have arranged everything with Becker by the time you come, and shall then attack the overture with a will." In the next letter the same subject crops up: "I have been busy all the morning with my opera. The first outline is quite finished, and I am dying to begin: of course I sometimes almost despair of doing justice to this great tragic story. For it has now become intensely tragic, though free from bloodshed and the usual stage effects. I am quite excited over all the characters, which I have got to mould in music, and you will be so too." Later: "The text for the opera worries me. Becker brought me a specimen the other day, and I could see that the affair has not made much progress. I have a perfect horror of setting weak verses to music. I don't want a great poet, but I must have sound language and sentiments. Well, I shall certainly not give up my beautiful plan, and I feel that I have got plenty of dramatic instinct. You will be surprised to hear some of my ensembles." At this point, as regards the opera, the letters cease, and we can only add: Alas for human wishes, which are vanity.

The letters to Clara Wieck throw light not only upon Schumann's music, but also upon his personality. Here, for example, is a significant extract: "Your father calls me phlegmatic? 'Carnaval' and phlegmatic! F sharp minor sonata and phlegmatic! Being in love with such a girl and phlegmatic! And you can listen calmly to all this? He says that I have written nothing in the Zeitung for six weeks. In the first place, that is not true; secondly, even if it were, how does he know what other work I have been doing? And, after all, where am I always to get something to write about? Up to the present time the Zeitung has had about eighty sheets of my own ideas, not counting the rest of my editorial work, besides which I have finished ten great compositions in two years, and they have cost me some heart's blood. To add to all this, I have given several hours' hard study every day to Bach and Beethoven, and to my own work. . . . I am a young man of twenty-eight with a very active mind, and an artist to boot; yet for eight years I have not been out of Saxony, and have been sitting still, saving my money, without a thought of spending it on amusement, and quietly going my own way, as usual. And do you mean to say that all my industry and simplicity, and all that I have done, is quite lost upon your father?" With this spirited defence of himself against the charge of mental slowness and indolence may be bracketed Schumann's apology, in anticipation of married life, for his shyness and reserve in society: "I like being among noble and high-born people, as long as they want nothing more of me than simple politeness. I certainly cannot be always flattering and bowing and scraping, and am quite ignorant of all tricks of manner. But where real artistic simplicity is tolerated, I feel quite comfortable, and can express myself very fairly. I merely mean to say by all this that, by-and-by, it will be a real pleasure to me to escort you here, there, and everywhere, if you should wish me to. And you will manage all the rest, for I know perfectly well that you can behave like a princess if necessary." There is another passage on the same subject: "I should like to confide a good deal more to you about myself and my character, and tell you how, sometimes, people cannot make me out, and how I often accept signs of the deepest affection with coldness and reserve, and constantly offend and repulse the very people who have the kindest intentions towards me. I have so often wondered why this should be, and reproached myself with it; for, in myself, I feel the smallest kindness, and appreciate every look, and the faintest movement of the heart; and yet I am so often wanting in words and forms. But you well know how to treat me, and will forgive me, I am sure. For I have not got a bad heart, and love all that is good and beautiful with my whole soul. Well, enough said; only sometimes thoughts of our future come upon me, and I should like our hearts to be as open as the hearts of a couple of children who have no secrets from one another." There is yet another passage which may not be omitted. It explains itself: "One thing more, so that you may thoroughly understand my character. You ask me sometimes whether I could bear household worries. We have no reason to expect any, but, even if we had, and only possessed half of what we have got, it would never make me unhappy. The only thing that could possibly make me miserable would be to owe people money that I could not pay; that really would, but nothing else. I am altogether too poetical for that, though you will not find me in the least careless, and I have proved to you how exact I am in everything for your sake. I am sure you will be pleased with all my domestic arrangements. Would you believe it, the first thing I do every morning is to write down all that I have spent the day before, and calculate it to the last penny. Are you aware that, since 1835, I have kept a great draft-book, in which I give a minute account of every letter written and received?"

The letters contain many references by Schumann to his eminent contemporaries in art, but over these we must pass. It is enough that the entire collection now made available to English readers by May Herbert's translation has served us for further insight into the character and conditions of a remarkable man. As to the rest, we must recommend the reader to the book itself, which is a source of interest even more abundant than our extracts have led him to suspect.

VISIBLE SPEECH.

It is not intended here to make more than a passing reference to Mr. Melville Bell's "Visible Speech," or System of Alphabetic Characters which represent the formation of the mouth in producing the sound of words in communication with the so-called deaf and dumb. It is an excellent system designed with a benevolent intention, and there is no doubt that it is calculated to be of inestimable benefit to those to whom the methods of ordinary speech of any kind have little or no meaning. The sound of the voice, so varied in its intonations, has no import to those who cannot hear. It is not desirable that those who are denied the use of one sense should necessarily be prohibited the employment of another, and so cut themselves or be cut off from all communication. Therefore this form of visible speech was invented as the outcome of a series of efforts to benefit the afflicted. There are also other methods which may be included in the like denomination, all more or less connected, more or less independent, but all having one object—namely, the education of deaf mutes. There are the systems, for example, generally known among the teachers themselves as "lip reading," or the "oral method." The motion of the mouth in the formation of certain words is watched by the eye of the patient and serves as a means of conversation more conformable to ordinary practice, and less barbarous than the well-known finger alphabet and manual signs. These systems are based upon the assumption that dumbness arises from the disuse of the organs of speech in deaf people, and the possibility of the rudimentary existence of those organs and their capability of development. The advocates of the principle, and they are many and enthusiastic, claim for it that it can be formulated into a perfect plan. They refer with pride to experiments which have been made under peculiar and exceptional circumstances. Deaf mutes already initiated into the art of reading from the lips, have been placed in front of a sheet upon which the profile of the speaker is sharply shadowed. The words he is supposed to utter are read and recorded. The writing of the pupils is compared with the sentences enunciated, and the result has been asserted as satisfactory. So far this form of visible speech. The readers of the delightful Christmas story "The Battle of Life," by Charles Dickens, may remember an instance where "visible speech" was not altogether triumphant in its results. When Michael Warden returns home incognito, after a long absence, he calls at an inn kept by Britain and Clemency, two former servants of the family. He makes enquiries as though he were a stranger, but Clemency recognises him, and tries to make her husband understand by "visible" though not audible speech the name of their stranger visitor. The scene being thus described by the great novelist:—"She made some eager signs to her husband, and pointed to the bill, and moved her mouth as if she were repeating, with great energy, one word or phrase to him, over and over again. As she uttered no sound, and as her dumb motions, like most of her gestures, were of a very extraordinary kind, this unintelligible conduct reduced Mr. Britain to the confines of despair. He stared at the table, at the stranger, at the spoons, at his wife—followed her pantomime with looks of deep amazement and perplexity—asked in the same language was it property in danger, was it he in danger, was it she?—answered her signals with other signals expressive of the deepest distress and confusion—followed the motions of her lips—guessed half aloud 'milk and water,' 'monthly warning,' 'mice and walnuts'—and couldn't approach her meaning."

Except then in the case of those who follow a pre-arranged plan, so that the particular position of the mouth may be accepted as the sign for a certain sound or word, or combination of sounds or words, visible speech, or speech that cannot be heard, and can only be seen, is capable of an ambiguous or erroneous reading. Of course it may be pleaded in the case quoted above, that Mr. Britain had not been educated in lip-reading and that his inability to catch the meaning of his wife's words is easily explained. Perhaps all known methods of speech made visible, based upon similar lines, and intended for like purposes may be liable to varied readings. The time, however, may come when the means of communication between the speaking and the silent may be perfected. The efforts being made in many directions would seem to justify such a hope. Meantime speech has been made visible to all who can see, and words which have been uttered in times past, and at distant places, under certain conditions, can be made audible. This is claimed to have been done by Edison, the great American inventor, and the effects have been duly shown.

Colonel Gouraud, who represents the inventor in England, recently issued invitations "to meet Mr. Edison" at Upper Norwood. As the invitation card stated, however, "Non presentem sed alloquentem," the guests were not disappointed because they did not see the famous inventor. Yet he was present, alike in spirit as in speech. Though far away in New Jersey he was the central figure in this interesting assembly. His own words were heard "ore rotundum," clear and distinct. The so-called "perfected" phonograph occupied the place of honour, and was the recipient of many confidences, grave and gay, in prose and verse, in several languages, and many varieties of vocal tone. Music, of course, was poured into the lifeless mechanical ear of the instrument, and its repetition of distinct and measured utterances proved the receptive power of the machine. Without seeming to labour, or to make any effort whatever, the instrument registered every sound that was breathed into it, and with a startling accuracy repeated each speech as required. Ten years ago the instrument was first submitted to the public as a marvellous discovery, but it was then little more than a scientific toy. The years that have elapsed have seen many experiments made with the intention of bringing it nearer to perfection. The phonograph of to-day, like its predecessor, is by no means a perfect instrument. It produces phonograms, or, as it were, photographs of the voice; in a word, "visible speech," as far as it goes, marking every detail. When the phonogram is finished it can either be reproduced at once in the form of identical sounds from the phonograph on which it was produced or taken off and despatched to any part of the world, where, after any lapse of time, the owner of another phonograph of like measurement can reproduce the sounds precisely as they were uttered—not only once, but again and again. The defect of the original phonograph arose from the difficulty, almost impossibility, of replacing the phonogram if once it was detached from the cylinder. The registration of the sound-waves was so subtle that the slightest displacement rendered it useless, for unless the needle could re-traverse the surface in the order exactly the repetition of that which had indented the wax or the lead paper, the recorded speech was neither visible nor audible, and only a hollow rumbling was produced. Now the difficulty has been overcome. The instrument is a shaft set in a frame capable of rotation. A wax cylinder on the shaft receives the impressions. A disc of thin material is held firmly in a metal frame standing on a sliding bed. In the centre of this metal disc a steel needle is fixed. When it is desired to use the instrument, the travelling bed is brought towards the wax-coated cylinder until the needle impinges lightly upon it, the cylinder is set in motion, the voice causes the disc to vibrate, and these vibrations are registered by the needle point upon the wax surface in a spiral line. By making the needle retrace the furrows which it caused by the agitation of the voice or other sound, the disc is made to vibrate and to repeat the impressions, as it were. In order to preserve the delicacy of the original impressions, which might be destroyed by frequent reiteration, a "repeater," consisting also of a disc and needle, is provided, which goes over the impressions with extreme lightness, but with sufficient force to set the disc in corresponding vibration. Some of the speeches, &c., so produced were stated to have been repeated many hundreds of times. There is also an arrangement by which the repetitions can be made slower or faster. The pitch of the sound so repeated is, however, changed; for when the speed is doubled the pitch is raised, because the number of vibrations is doubled. This is a matter which may not lessen the value of the instrument in its application to musical purposes, if it can ever be applied to any seriously. As the impressions have to be conveyed through a speaking tube, only single sounds are completely and effectively repeated. If it be possible to provide a resonator of increased size, a disc of larger proportions acting upon a material less subject to alteration than wax, greater results would be obtained, but it is difficult to see to what use the instrument can be applied except to show that it is possible to make speech visible by means of recorded impressions of sound waves. Still some of the efforts produced are very wonderful, and its application to practical purposes is perhaps only a question of time. At the invitation displayed already alluded to, a phonogram of the voice of the inventor, sent by post from the other side of the Atlantic, was placed in the phonograph, after having been inspected by many, and the resonant and deliberate tones of the speaker were heard with startling effect. An address of welcome was poured out of the machine in sonorous periods and rounded utterance. All the inflections of the voices of those who breathed their confidences into the willing ear of the machine, all the stutterings, coughings, and hesitations of speech were faithfully, and in some instances ludicrously, reproduced. The difficulty which was one cause of failure in the former machine—namely, its incapacity to reproduce sibillant sounds—has not been entirely overcome, though the experiments on this occasion, made haphazard by those who knew not its weak points, included many tones which those better acquainted with its powers seemed to avoid. The peculiar ghostly, hollow tones which made the reproduced phrases out of the old machines sound like words from another world, have been softened. In the improved machine a song sung by Mr. Edison in America some time back was heard; Mrs. Shaw, the American whistler, performed an air in the machine, and it was repeated in all its fulness and volume. Other songs were sung, banjo and pianoforte solos were given, and all were reproduced with absolutely thrilling faithfulness. Some of the phonograms made on this occasion were examined by those who made them, and by others who were present. The eye was powerless to trace the differences in the pattern of the sound-waves, and all abandoned the attempt to discriminate the differences of curves, lines, and dots, and contented themselves with wondering. Every guest addressed Mr. Edison through the phonograph, and united in congratulations to him on the success of his invention. This address has been sent to America, and will doubtless be duly appreciated. The whole series of experiments prepared before, and made then, shows that speech can not only be presented to the eye visible, but it can be made tangible. The next question which presents itself is that of its utility. Here is a wonderful machine, with an extraordinary power—to what practical use can it be applied? The commercial value might be greater than the telephone, though it is not so quick in its service. The agent may hear his principal's voice, and receive his instructions as from his own lips, but he will have to await the arrival of the mail by which the phonogram has been transmitted. The author may dictate to the phonograph the ideas which come streaming from his mind too fast for pen to trace, to reproduce them at periods of less inspired leisure. The amateur may form a collection of the voices of favourite orators, actors, singers, or preachers, which he can "turn on" at any time for the amusement and edification of himself and his friends. Aspiring imitators of actors or vocalists could be corrected in their intonation, or crushed by being brought face to face, so to speak, in comparison with the original speaker of the pieces they essay to mimic. All these things however will not show that the process of making speech visible has a very important value, either commercial or artistic. At present neither the inventor nor his agent are prepared to say the purposes to which the phonograph may be applied. It may be, they urge, useful in the newspaper office, in the bureau of the merchant, in the study of the literary man, and so on, so that the question is rather, Where will the perfected invention not be found useful? It is an untiring, accurate amanuensis that hears and receives everything, but tells nothing, unless ordered to do so. It is also a musical instrument that can call back the notes of the voice and of all instruments, a vocalist that never refuses an encore on the plea of fatigue, a teacher of foreign languages of faultless accent, and an orator who could address his constituents, be they ever so distant, from his own house. If it be possible to multiply copies of the phonogram, the address might be reiterated many times in many different places. Separated friends might hear each other speak, and the voices of the dead might be heard repeating words uttered during life. It might be made a powerful faction in a modern sensational drama. The villain of the piece might be confounded by the repetition, through the phonograph, of conversations, &c., peculiarly damaging to his designs.

If it be capable of doing all that is claimed for it, to the musician it would have a great potential value. The composer might extemporise upon an instrument, and indulge in flights of fancy that do not always "wing a steady and defined course" when the pen alone traces their progress. All know that the experience of the author of the "Lost Chord" is an everyday event with the player who extemporises. Some thought which strikes the player as beautiful in the course of performance of unwritten voluntaries, vanishes from the mind when the effort is made to write it down, because the phrases which led to it and the sequence which followed it, cannot be exactly reproduced, and so the idea loses its power. Various machines for recording impromptu performances have been spoken of from time to time. Some have been described as actually existing. None have been as yet brought to a practical issue. Perhaps in the phonograph the composer may see the thing he has longed for—the ideal mechanism which will help his genius to be prolific, the means by which speech can be made not only visible, but audible; not only tangible, but reproducible. With the power of producing "phonograms" at pleasure, music, paper, and type will no longer be required. Copies of compositions might be multiplied indefinitely, and so the composer would be made independent of the printer. By means of the phonograph itself, he would also be able, after the first trial, to dispense with the use of musical instruments. There is no knowing what may not be done by the aid of this "perfected" method of making speech visible, in revolutionising art, more especially as the machine has no commercial value.

THE "LOBGESANG."

SUBJOINED is the short recitative which, in the first version of the "Hymn of Praise," occupied the place now filled by the immensely superior "We called through the darkness." Mendelssohn's excellent judgment as a reviser of his own work is nowhere more convincingly asserted than in this case, which, indeed, may be taken as the supreme example. At the same time, the discarded piece is not without merit; the entrance of the wood-wind with a bold figure echoed by the trombones being a conspicuous and striking feature:—

The dramatic response of the soprano to the question "Will the night soon pass?" is, of course, not found in the original score.

Chorus, "The night is departing." Substantially this magnificent chorus stands now as it was first written, the composer satisfying himself with a few changes in the orchestration (not important enough for particular notice), the addition of an organ part, and the re-writing of a few vocal bars as below—

Choral, "Let all men praise the Lord." No change.

Duet, "My song shall be alway Thy mercy." This number was, in the first instance, a tenor solo, sixty-three bars long, having the same words and theme as the present duet, which contains ninety-nine bars. We cannot do better than present the entire solo in compressed score, so that the reader may compare it with the printed piece, and form his own opinion of the judgment which eliminated the one and substituted the other. It may reasonably be supposed that the alteration here made followed upon the prominence given to the tenor by the great recitative "We called through the darkness." Another solo for the same voice, occurring so soon, may have been thought unadvisable, wherefore, the composer, not caring to sacrifice the music he had written, arranged it in the present form—

SOME KINDS OF MUSIC.

BY F. CORDER.

IV.—PRIMITIVE MUSIC.

TURN we now from the contemplation of the Higher Music (as an æsthete would call it) to what may be ranked as the lowest and most rudimentary form of the art—namely, savage or barbarous music. The distance between the two classes is not so great as the transcendentalist would have us believe, for both ignore alike the growth and experience of ages and dispense with the laws deduced therefrom, which alone make music an art. In a recently-published history of music the learned author argues with great plausibility that rhythm was first invented, melody next, and harmony last, the chief argument being that rhythmical effects could be produced without the aid of special instruments. The idea is that our Aryan ancestor, or whoever came next to the "missing link," began by clashing two stones together, or it might be the well-gnawed bones of a defeated enemy. When several joined in doing this the sounds were made regular, so as to keep together. Thus rhythm was evolved. Our ancestor then learned to perceive the difference of pitch in large and small bones or stones, and thus acquired the rudiments of melody. I should think, however, that the first germs of the latter were rather derived from the inflections of his own voice. Voices and instruments were used in unisonous combination for thousands of years before it occurred to anyone that different sounds, a third or a sixth apart, sounded pleasant. Then, in a miraculously short space of time the whole art of polyphony arose, culminated in Palestrina and Bach, and then slowly decayed again. Three centuries sufficed for the evolution of the Mass in B minor, and less than two more for the relapse into the harmonic inanity of the post-Schumann school. Yet, though rhythm and harmony have flourished and decayed, though melody has flourished and flourishes still, in a fitful sort of way, primitive music endures and remains with us ever the same as in past ages. The aboriginal savage dies off before the advance of civilisation, the very face of the world alters, yet not art, but primitive music, is eternal; the clashing of stones and bones, especially the latter, rejoices the heart of man now even as in the pliocene epoch, the voice of 'Arry on a bank-holiday excursion is no whit more melodious than his ancestor of the bronze age when he "moaned to the moon."

And the argument concerning the origin of music has one weak place worth consideration. It does not follow that because rhythm can exist apart from melody that therefore it was the first to come into being. It is even unlikely that such was the case when we remember that even in our own day but few people are gifted with the isochronous instinct, or, in better English, have a sense of time. Of those not so endowed comparatively few succeed in cultivating the sense, even with the most strenuous efforts. And though a clear simple rhythmical flow is the most marked characteristic of Folk-Song, in the lower phase of the art, which we stigmatise as barbarous music, the rhythm is the conspicuously weak point. A person with a defective sense of time, such as the ordinary school girl, invariably cuts all the long notes short, as though striving to make them all the same length. The eighth bar of a phrase almost disappears under this treatment. I know a street harp-player who is phenomenal in this respect, making the simplest tunes almost unrecognisable by employing absolutely only one length of note. Now the most primitive form of vocal music which is worthy the name, the Chant, encourages this sort of thing. In the East, and, indeed, among savage people generally, music and poetry are within the reach of any one. You "patter" a number of general remarks on one note, and when you are within hail of a full stop set the last few syllables to a simple cadential phrase. The same thing may be observed in our method of chanting the Psalms, which, in spite of the sanction lent it by long tradition, I myself regard as flying in the face of Providence. It is, you must admit, primitive music, neither rhythm nor melody; in the case of Gregorians, not even harmony. The chant of certain barbarians is sometimes constrained to be rhythmical, from the nature of the employment to which it forms the usual accompaniment; such are the rowing songs of the Arabs, Turks, and Chinese (the Japs, I believe, have none), and those queer ditties which, as visitors to the Colonial Exhibition may remember, the Indians sing whilst weaving. Our own sailors have highly interesting chants of this description, which indeed often rise to the dignity of regular song, only the words are usually a string of meaningless doggerel, simply chosen for rhythmical purposes. There is one sailor song, used for hauling, in which the nonsensical rhyming couplets are broken by the refrain—

Yo-ho, blow the man down!

O give us time to blow the man down!

Another odd one (quoted by Charles Reade in "Hard Cash"), used in stowing cargo, or any other long job, runs thus:—

Here goes one, Owe me there one.
One, now it is gone; there's an - o - ther yet to come, And a - way we go to Flanders A-

Here is vigorous rhythm, adapted to the ramming of the soft dunnage with "wooden commanders," but where no such metronome keeps the music in order it droops, as with the fishermen of most nations, into timelessness, though never into tunelessness. No, melody dates from the time of the first mother who soothed the first baby; but rhythm—why, how do we ever come by the sense at all? Why have only three of even the great musicians—Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven—possessed an absolute mastery over this branch of the art?

But these questions carry us too high: let us descend again to the depths and fish for pearls. From an early age it has been noticed that the very crudest musical sounds, even the bones and stones aforesaid, produce a cheering and exciting effect upon the nerves not only of mere savages, but also of the higher part of brute creation. The animals have, of course, rather the purer taste, so the jangling waggon-bells of which cart-horses are so ridiculously fond, the ghostly alpenhorn so beloved of goats, and the clangour of saucepan and shovel which will lead a swarm of bees, are superior in their kind to the tom-tom of the savage, the marrowbones and cleaver of our butcher and sweep, or the toneless tambourine of the Salvationist. No well-regulated dog can stand a concertina. But it is only natural that the dull and untutored ear should respond to none but the harshest and most strident sounds. One of our most eminent men of science possesses so little development of the sense of hearing that by no endeavours on his part can he recognise the simplest tune. But he looks back, much as those of us who have been to Bayreuth dwell on that memory, to one great musical treat in his life, and what do you think that was? Why, a certain memorable brass-band contest at the Crystal Palace years ago, when upwards of 2,000 brass instruments, reinforced by the great organ in the Handel orchestra, played "God save the Queen" with such energy that it was distinctly audible at a distance of over four miles. He says he thinks he should know that tune again if he ever heard it repeated under like circumstances. Not else. He describes his sensations at the time as marvellous and unique. This I can well believe, for it is reported that the silvering of Mr. Manns's once raven locks dates from that unholy afternoon. This may be considered an extreme instance among cultured folk, but I could cite many curious examples of the passion for mere noise among the uncivilised races. An Englishman dwelling in Porto Rico was awakened during several nights in succession by a strange and unaccountable sound as of an engineer's workshop in the distance. There being no such thing within many hundred miles he fretted and fumed, and at last turned out to investigate. The phenomenon having been localised with difficulty, he tracked it down, and presently came to the seashore, where he beheld in the moonlight the old rusty boiler of a wrecked steamboat and round it joyously dancing the fantastic figure of an old negro, ever and anon dealing on this champion gong blows from a club, which caused the surrounding scenery to reel under the hideous clamour. Thus he hopped and sang to himself, and belaboured the boiler in a perfect ecstasy of delight till day-dawn, when he retired, drunk with his solitary musical enjoyment. I believe that the Englishman took steps to destroy the instrument of torment and bliss by causing it to be unriveted, and they do say that thereupon the negro pined away and died, but I fear that this ending was invented by later historians for artistic effect. More likely the musician fell to evoking the soul from something else, a pair of rib-bones, like his pseudo-brethren of St. James's Hall, or an old meat-tin, like the humble fiddler on Brighton beach. Another picture, which lives in my memory, that of a six-year old musician creeping downstairs in the dead of night to strum with his untaught little fingers upon the strictly prohibited drawing-room pianoforte may be prettier and more romantic; but it is, after all, only the same incident in another form. The end of that story had its results, but I usually omit that portion, also for artistic effect. But the negroes of the West Indies are really great at primitive music. They have a variety of dismal chants that no man can write down, and a number of awful instruments that no man dare listen to. For instance, they get a gourd of cucumber shape, clean out the contents through one tiny hole, score a number of parallel cuts on the rind with a broken shell or something, and then dry it. On rubbing a wire or any other hard substance across the scratches a shrill sound, something like the filing of a thin plate of metal, is produced. This is, apparently, as soothing to the nigger ear as the tone of a Cremona violin to ours. It is said to be a fine nerve-tonic and is recommended as a corrective after a course of too much Mendelssohn. Another curious barbaric instrument—a Chinese one this—consists of a small piece of very hard wood, just the shape which would be produced by pinching one side of a ball of wax to a wedge. This is hollowed out through sound holes, like those of a horse-bell, pierced in the round surface. The instrument is struck with a wooden hammer and emits a note about the pitch of a cricket's chirp, but inconceivably loud and ear-splitting. A number of these fiendish things are used together, tuned in some kind of scale, of which the lowest note must be higher than the top A of the pianoforte. Compared with this the sounds of the Javanese Gamelan (beautifully compared by an eminent critic to a tinker's shop with a bad viola obbligato) were truly fair and consummately precious. But still, is there not as much enjoyment derived from the lower as from the higher forms of music? Nay, taking into account the vastly disproportionate extent of the two classes of recipients, may we not say that primitive music affords the greater amount of pleasure? But even without this last consideration, and class for class has not the lower the best of it? Did the late King of Bavaria derive as much bliss from his solitary operatic dissipations as the nigger who banged the boiler? It would be unfair to judge by faces, but do you think that a Philharmonic or even Monday Popular audience enjoy themselves as much after their kind as a music-hall audience after their kind? The latter at least enjoy; we criticise, fret over a false note, and are bored. In the chant of the Arab, the yell of the Chinese coolie, the unmelodious crooning of the English maidservant over her work—nay, to go lower still—in the hymn of the Salvationist and the wild strains of a German band, there resides for the untutored ear, whether of performer or listener, a subtle solace and balm to the poor oppressed and toil-weary spirit: but for us, who vainly pride ourselves upon having attained the highest level of art and culture, what joys are there? We listen frigidly to the last new Symphony, and grumble at not being able to grasp in one hearing what took the composer weeks to conceive. We spend years over educating our ears to this desired pitch and never attain it. But even could we achieve this end, should we derive more pleasure, more real happiness from drinking in with one comprehending draught Liszt's "Dante" Symphony, than do those who devour the strains of "Two lovely black eyes" or "Queen of my heart," and encore them again and again? And see, too, how art makes us suffer! To the happy Philistine real music is a profound bore, but one which can easily be avoided by simply not going to the few places where it is performed; but to the cultured primitive music is a torture and a horror, and, like the soap advertisements, it is with us always.

ARTISTS AND AMATEURS.

THE relative position of artists and amateurs is a subject worthy of some consideration, their interests being sometimes identical and sometimes antagonistic. Their mutual dependence is undeniable, for while the amateur relies, in the main, on the professional artist for the gratification and cultivation of his artistic tastes, the professional musician has to rely upon the amateur for his daily bread. Did nobody care to hear or to learn music the artist as such would cease to exist;—and were there no professional musicians the prospect of music wholly delivered to the mercies, we had almost said the vagaries, of amateurs is one from which we turn away our eyes—still more our mental ears—with a shudder.

Before that period, which, as it were, cuts the history of social life in England in two, I mean of course the great Civil War, music was a regular part of a gentleman's education. Most country houses had their "chest of viols," and singing in parts was a common amusement at social gatherings. This proficiency in the case of amateurs implied a considerable amount of systematic professional teaching; and that a music-master was a very usual member of large households may be gathered from the fact that many others besides Henry Lawes "supported" themselves "during the Civil War by teaching ladies to sing" (Burney ii. 388). Wood indeed tells us that "Oliver Cromwell loved a good voice and instrumental music well," but, doubtless, he did not think it worth while to indulge his tastes at the risk of bringing down upon himself the wrath of the "Psalm-roaring saints." The odd thing seems to be that while the amateurs kept the artists alive during the troubles, that period was followed by a grand efflorescence of artists, or, at any rate, composers, and by a great general decadence of amateurs. So many young people had apparently been trained to consider that "cymbals and dulcimers" were "instruments of fraud; that pipes and flutes" were "to be abandoned from a sober feast," and that chromatical harmonies were "to be left to impudent malapertness in wine," as Prynne quoted from Clement of Alexandria, that if they had any musical tastes they suppressed them. The very fact that Charles II. and his court fostered music would be no recommendation to its cultivation in the sober-minded country families, who have always formed so large and influential a part of the nation. Neither would English children grow up with that weekly opportunity of hearing good music, which was afforded by the services of the Church in the old days, as it is in so many churches now. The great cathedrals could give orders for new organs to Dallans, and Smith, and Harris; but how were the country churches to replace the instruments which had been smashed, perhaps only by mischief-loving urchins taking advantage of the times to indulge their love of destruction, but which in any case were spoilt beyond remedy. The squire and his family might desire to bring back the anthem and the services for the Litany and Canticles; but we who know how "congregational singing" is cherished where it has once been planted can imagine the opposition that would at once be raised to any attempt even at "tossing the Psalms from side to side," as the Puritans called antiphonal chanting. The custom ordered by the Directory in 1644, "that the minister, or some fit person appointed by him, and the other ruling officers, do read the [metrical] Psalm, line by line, before the singing thereof," to suit those in the congregation who could not read, was much too precious a privilege for the "fit person" to abandon without powerful persuasion. The effect of this custom on a musical ear can only be realised by those who have encountered it in some Presbyterian Church in a remote part of Scotland.

And so gradually the ordinary musical amateur was killed, or died out for want of cultivation, the artist only surviving. What was the consequence? In brief, that music in England became an exotic, nourished in a hot-house, instead of being the recreation of the multitude. Addison may not have been a good judge of music in itself, but he "knew his world," as the French say, and there is no doubt that he spoke a fact in common evidence when he wrote: "At present our notions of music are so very uncertain that we do not know what it is we like; only, in general, we are transported with anything that is not English; so it be of a foreign growth, let it be Italian, French, or High Dutch, it is the same thing. In short, our English music is quite rooted out, and nothing yet planted in its stead." And this was written only fifty years after the Restoration, and in those fifty years had flourished such artists as Lock, Blow, Weldon, Pelham Humphreys, and the Purcells. The very name applied to amateurs of that period, dilettanti, showed how entirely they were devoted to Italian music,* which would have the additional charm, beyond its own merits, of all the associations connected with the "grand tour," that must have formed a delightful portion of a young nobleman's life. The opera was naturally the branch of music which most appealed to their refined tastes, and they preferred it in the language and with the artists they had learnt to appreciate in Italy. The "Beggar's Opera" and its successors might please less cultivated ears, but those who had once revelled in the pure Italian school of singing enjoyed no other.

Time, however, has always had "strange revenges," and there is none more curious than the one which Handel worked in music so long after his death. The favourite operatic composer of something like half the musical dilettanti of his day, his works in a different line have done more to create what one may call a whole world of amateurs than any other influence whatever—that, too, from seventy to a hundred years after his bones had become dust. There are few villages even which do not have their version—a curious one sometimes, it is true—of "For unto us a Child is born" at Christmas, or the "Hallelujah" chorus at the Harvest Festival—while the great musical festivals throughout England, from one end to the other, rarely separate without performing at least one of Handel's works. When we think of what this implies—of the body of amateurs, real amateurs, that is to say, people engaged all day at work of a different kind, whose love of music draws them in the evenings to choral gatherings of one kind or another—we realise the absolute value to the cause of art of the amateur in his place.

* The term Amateur is so completely naturalised in England, and its pronunciation in general is so unsuggestive of its French origin, that it cannot be looked upon as at all parallel with the old word dilettante, which implied an appreciator of music. As we use the word amateur it generally means simply an unprofessional performer; and this not in music or other fine art only.

But there is the rub, in his place. If all amateurs felt that it was possible for them not to be in their place, artists would have no cause of complaint; but we cannot say that this is the case now. "What is sport to you is death to me," as the frog in the fable said to the stone-throwing boy; and I think amateurs are much in danger of forgetting that the professional musician has to live by his art. It is very pleasant to Miss So-and-So to be asked to sing at a concert in the Shire Hall in the cause of charity, and certainly very pleasant for the charity in question to receive a substantial sum from the proceeds of the said concert, but when we find that a concert by the local artists either has to be given up or is a failure in consequence, we feel that there is something not quite right somewhere. Of course, if an audience were attracted solely by the music they were to hear, the professional concert would draw the larger number, but unfortunately this is not the case. There are still a great many persons who like to hear music, and yet "whose notions of" it, as we quoted before, "are so very uncertain that" they "do not know what it is" they "like," and so they buy tickets to please their friends, and believe that Miss So-and-So is rather superior to Albani, and Mr. Dash to Joachim, because they themselves say so. Of course there are amateurs almost as much worth hearing as artists, and to these few artists are glad to listen, but they are and always must be few. Even if they have a musical organisation, other occupations leave too little time for sufficient study, and of those who have the leisure only a small percentage have been put in proper training early enough to attain that certainty which characterises the artist. In fact, nothing is more painful to the real lover of music than the ever-widening gap between his musical perceptions and his execution. Ears take, as it were, no time to cultivate, and fingers and throats do—so as the years go by each note of music heard leads on the brain to greater understanding, while less and less time can be devoted to actual practice. When this stage has been reached, little pleasure can be gained from the performances of any but artists, and if amateurs all reached it they would give up in disgust producing themselves in public at all, except where they can be of essential service, and that is in the chorus or the band. This is a higher plane of cultivation than we have at present reached, and I think that idea is a comforting one to the professional musician. What a much more hopeful task it would be, for instance, to train young ladies to take their part in a symphony or concerto than to teach them pieces for drawing-room performance, an exertion which tends to no really artistic end, but too often ministers to the vanity of the executant, and tortures the tympanum of the listener. Were this the case, the amateur would not only provide the artist with bread, as he always must do if the artist is to exist, but with those opportunities of production which are the stimulus and nourishment of artistic life, as food is of the natural life.

M. C. C.

To be accused of being a "purist" is scarcely, perhaps, usually considered a matter to rejoice over; and yet when on hearing Beethoven's song "Adelaida" sung by a baritone in G (having long felt it to be a tenor song in B flat) we ventured to remark that the character of the composition was destroyed, the term "purist" was applied to us in derision—we remember to have felt it in the highest degree complimentary. There can be no doubt that musical conservatism—like all other conservatism—is only injurious to a cause when directed to the preservation of ideas which are protected solely by their age; but in the case above mentioned we contend that, artistically, we have no right to so distort the original conception of a composer. Key colour is a very important element in the effect of a musical work, and if it is once allowed that we are justified in tampering with it, why should we protest against "I know that my Redeemer liveth" being sung by a tenor, or "The trumpet shall sound" by a soprano? Violin solos arranged for the flute, pianoforte sonatas for the harp, or compositions specially intended for a stated number of stringed instruments played by all the strings of an orchestra, may please certain persons in an audience who neither know nor care how these works were written by their composers, but if those aggrieved critics who have the power to proclaim the truth do not at once speak out, it might be considered that they tacitly acquiesced in such vandalism. The interesting articles comparing the original and revised scores of Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," which are now appearing in our journal, shows with what care the composer has thought out the colouring of his instrumentation in every passage. One phrase, for example, we are told originally commenced with the violins and violoncelli, and was repeated by oboe and bassoon; this order was exactly reversed on more mature thought. If those who, like ourselves, duly respect this small but, to the composer, important revision are to be classed as "purists," let us at once say that not only do we cheerfully submit to, but feel really proud of, the classification.

THE news from Paris, in a recent number of a contemporary, contains a short notice of what is termed "Word-music," the discovery of a French poet, M. Ghil, the theory being fully set forth in an elaborate treatise called "La Traité du verbe." By this we are told—according to the correspondent who supplies us with the information—that "everything that is useful in the way of music and poetry may be evolved from verbal expression." In illustration of this doctrine the author gives, for example, a series of Alexandrines comprising eight lines, which he declares to be "an imitation of the stampede of elephants and other large-limbed and heavy-footed quadrupeds towards Noah's ark, just when the Deluge was about to begin." We are not informed whether other specimens of his power to supplant the necessity for the aid of musical sounds appear in the book; but as it is broadly stated that by the mere choice of words he can "play you a Pastoral Symphony," or give you a "diabolical crash of orchestration," it may be inferred that he has full faith in his novel scheme. It is difficult, perhaps, to imagine that the cultivation of the vocal organs, and of the many musical instruments which have grown up from the early times, will be no longer necessary; but should this reformer's idea be unflinchingly carried out, there can be no question that henceforth composers will select words instead of notes to express their ideas, and that executants will study elocution instead of music. It is probable that it may take some time to get accustomed to such an innovation, and that many subscribers to musical Societies may fancy that M. Ghil has robbed them of a very large amount of pleasure by the abolition of what they have so long considered to be music; but, in the cause of progress, such Conservatives must inevitably give way. "Songs without words" have long been accepted by the best musical judges, and we have now only to receive with equal favour "Words without songs."

Who are the great people who condescend to furnish provincial journals with musical news? They must be great and high in the esteem of the Editors, for their "copy" never appears to have been "sub-edited" before it is given out to the compositor. There may be some degree of delicacy on the Editorial part about dealing with obscure expressions on the ground that they may be technically right though grammatically wrong. Here are some notices culled from important west-county journals otherwise reasonably conducted. For obvious reasons the titles of the journals and the names of the singers are not given. We are told of one young lady that "her rendering of the 'Jewel Song' (Gounod's 'Faust') speaks much for her future position in the musical world." This is sweetly vague. Another is more definite: we read that Mr. So-and-So "then got up to sing 'The Anchor's Weighed,' but the anchor was too heavy for him and he soon dropt it." This is distinctly to the point, though it is scarcely the style of criticism expected in a newspaper professing to be the most important in the county. The sweetly vague mingled with the slightly idiotic is apparent in the next statements, culled from the reports of some concerts in one neighbourhood: "In the second part she gave 'You know what' in a finished and dulcet fashion, her high finale was rewarded with success, and she was accorded a well-merited encore." "She sang the recitatives with the emphasis which the numbers demand, her declamation being very affective. She delighted the audience with her clear soprano voice, and bound them as by enchantment." It is a pity that the writer and the printer were not bound like the audience, so that they could show the influence of the spell.

WHY is it that in the official classification of sections in connection with art, music is generally ignored? A National Association for the Advancement of Art and its application to industry has just been formed, and the first annual meeting of the Association will be held in Liverpool towards the end of November. Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., has consented to become the president of the new Association, and the list of vice-presidents and of members of the Committee is a long and influential one. The list of heads of the several sections is thus given:—Painting (president, Mr. L. Alma Tadema, R.A.), sculpture (president, Mr. Alfred Gilbert, A.R.A.), architecture (president, Professor Aitchison, A.R.A.), applied art (president, Mr. Walter Crane), art history and museums (president, Mr. Sidney Colvin), and national and municipal encouragement of art (president, Mr. A. J. Mundella, M.P.). Not a word about music. In the announcement of the conference shortly to be held between the Organising Committee of the Imperial Institute and representatives of the principal Chambers of Commerce and Trade Associations, with the object of discussing the suggestions for the operations of the Commercial Intelligence Department, silence is maintained concerning any musical representative on the Committee. Surely something should be done to obtain recognition for music as an art, as well as to establish its association with undertakings promoted to further the advance of industry and education, with both of which the "divine" but unclassified "art" is connected.

A FEW days only of hot weather were sufficient to reduce the daily papers to their usual state of August idiocy, and under the first rays of sunshine the annual correspondence on some vulgar social question is coming on beautifully. What a pity it is we have no daily journal devoted to music! A monthly, or even a weekly, is unsuited to this kind of debate, for which our art yet furnishes subjects in plenty. Besides the fine crusted old disputes as to the authorship of the National Anthem, the existence of key-colour and the possibility of a uniform pitch, there are numerous points the discussion of which might elicit contributions from Justitia, Paterfamilias, a British Matron, A Constant Reader, and the rest of their weird race. "Shall our daughters learn the pianoforte?" is surely a question of universal interest: "What shall we do with our Composers?" is an enquiry likely to evoke much bitterness, with possibly some accusations against certain publishers; while "Is local examination a failure?" opens up a subject on which we ourselves could make some startling revelations, and bring down on our devoted heads a mass of correspondence which would keep us in "copy" for the rest of the year. Would it not be worth while starting a paper wholly devoted to such controversies? The attention of capitalists is earnestly invited to this scheme.

It has been asserted over and over again that musicians, in the exercise of the duties of their profession, have no politics. The recent refusal of the Cork Band to play the National Anthem at the Irish Exhibition would seem to imply that a change has taken place. Without commenting upon the particular matter, it will be curious to know whether it is likely to form a precedent, and, if so, to what lengths it may be extended. Will Frenchmen, Germans, Scotchmen, or Englishmen decline to perform works which involve some antagonism to the party views they may privately hold, notwithstanding the fact that they have accepted the engagement and expect to be paid for their labour? If the good sense of the members of various bands were to vanish under any such pressure, the unexpected refusal to take part in the performance of certain works might be extended in many directions. The life of a manager or a conductor would be a burden, and orchestral and military bands would become as great a source of irritation as the nomadic musicians who make night and day hideous.

THE Boston Evening Traveller of the 13th ult. draws attention to what it calls "the most novel strike of the season." It appears that the choir boys of St. John's, the most fashionable Episcopal church in Washington, refused to sing until their wages were raised. The afternoon service begins at four o'clock, and at exactly 3.45 the choir informed Precentor Daniels that they wanted their pay raised. He was naturally much astonished. They gave him ten minutes to decide the matter. They demanded an advance of fifty per cent. "They acted just like wicked, worldly opera folks. No raise, no white robes; no robes, no music; no music, no service. It took Daniels nine minutes and forty-five seconds to see the point with perfect clearness. When he saw, he unconditionally surrendered, and granted the advance. In two minutes the choir boys were in their vestments; in three they filed into their accustomed places, and at precisely four their angel voices blended in the harmonies of the Sanctus." If the thing had happened in England the strike might possibly have terminated differently.

THE Chairman of the Copyright Committee in America, Mr. Collins, made an attempt to get a day named in December set apart for the consideration of the measure. He introduced a resolution for that purpose, but an objection was made which defeated it, unanimous consent being necessary. This objection shows that opposition has arisen which did not exist when the Bill was first reported from the Senate. This opposition, it is said, comes from two members of the Committee. Their objection will have the effect of causing a long delay, though it may not signify an ultimate defeat. There are obstructionists even in enlightened America. The excitement of the Presidential Election occupies the political mind just now, and the friends of the Bill think it better to delay the matter for a time rather than to press it forward when it might be lost. They, therefore, prefer to postpone the proposition, as they feel certain of being able ultimately to pass the measure without encountering any opposition of a serious character.

WE have been waiting a long time for someone to suggest the employment of Volapük in its most obvious and useful capacity—namely, as an international medium for opera libretti. These much-abused works are sometimes good, sometimes bad; usually couched in indifferent language, but in a few instances in really decent poetry. Fate has, however, decreed that an opera libretto shall rarely be presented to the public as originally written, but almost always translated into some other language. And this translation, for reasons not hard to discover, is uniformly execrable. English monosyllables become sore stumbling-blocks to foreign poets, while foreign verbs, with their unaccented last syllables, have to be rendered into English by present participles, in this style:

Solo. I will both gold and wine be giving.
Chorus (gratefully). Long be living!

We look forward to a time in the near future when, Volapük, or one of its congeners, being universally understood, libretti will be written in that convenient tongue. Then will the translator's occupation be gone; the book of an opera will stand on its own (metrical) feet and one element of unpopularity will be removed from the lyric drama. But what will the comic papers do then, poor things?

A STORY is going the rounds of the papers to the effect that Verdi, on taking possession of some apartments he had hired, locked up an excellent pianoforte he found there and threw the key away over an adjacent cliff. He wanted rest, and did not require to be tempted into the indulgence of musical practice. It is said that the offence of the existence of the instrument in his rooms was aggravated by the presence of the score of his own "Trovatore" placed temptingly on the desk. This is probably one of the stories to which the Italian proverb "si non e vero e ben trovato," or, as the smart paragraphist would say, "ben trovatore."

CHESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE last day (Friday, July 27) of this Festival was, in more than one respect, the most satisfactory of the three, although the weather, which had before done nothing worse than threaten, declared open war and entered upon very active hostilities. Not to this cause, however, should be attributed a rather scanty attendance at the Cathedral in the morning, since it is a fact that there was a much larger gathering in the evening when rain was doing its worst. Nor can it be said that the first programme of the day wanted attractiveness. Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" ("Engedi") and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" are stock pieces at Festivals, both are assured favourites, and both were performed on the occasion under circumstances sufficiently favouring a good result. Looking at these facts, I am driven to a conclusion before expressed—viz., that the prices of tickets were too high, especially as regards the second seats, which did not command a view of the orchestra. The Committee are understood to say that they cannot afford to quote lower figures, but they must be well aware that empty benches give no returns, and that two occupied seats with two vacant ones at seven-and-sixpence, are less profitable than four occupied ones at five shillings. Mere rows of chairs with nobody in them are always sure proof that there is need of tariff revision.

The morning performance opened with Schubert's unfinished Symphony in B minor; a good rendering of that nobly beautiful work resulting in the greatest instrumental success of the Festival. No more happy choice of a subject was made by the Committee; the music, so eloquent of human feeling in its most elevated as well as intensest form, being recognised on all hands as belonging to that which is sacred in art. Certain it is that the audience were captivated by its tender beauty, and affected by its expression of the sufferings and consolations of earthly life. A profound silence and stillness reigned till the last lingering chord had died away. The orchestra must be congratulated, together with Dr. J. C. Bridge, their Conductor, upon a performance which came not far short of the highest standard. "Engedi" followed, but the effect of Beethoven's piece was sadly lessened by the use of a libretto adapted to accommodate English punctiliousness as it once prevailed, instead of that to which the master set his music. I have nothing to say against David in his proper place. The Shepherd-King is a fit personage for oratorio, but here he and his persecution by Saul are a poor substitute for the Saviour of the world and His sufferings. The performance of "Engedi" was a fairly good one, especially with regard to the solo parts, placed in the competent hands of Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Grice. These artists, as will be taken for granted, were fully equal to their task, the honours falling to Mr. Lloyd, upon whom devolved the greatest responsibility. The chorus made their mark chiefly in the final "Hallelujah," the sublime effect of the music being, moreover, heightened by appropriate and impressive surroundings. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was, on the whole, more happy than the companion work. It "went" better—with greater spirit and more obvious sympathy between performers and theme; but this was to be expected, having regard to the special favour in which Mendelssohn's music is held. The symphonic movements gave the orchestra another chance of distinction, which was turned to good account, and all the concerted vocal numbers received a full measure of justice. Miss Anna Williams, Madame Belle Cole, and Mr. Lloyd undertook the solos, the popular tenor again making a sensation in the recitative "We called through the darkness," which he declaims with so much truth and power.

By far the largest audience of the week attended the Cathedral in the evening, when Gounod's "Redemption" was performed. This result was, no doubt, due in part to the hold which the French master's Trilogy retains upon public favour, but I may conclude with equal certainty that lowered prices had something to do with it. A reduction of one-third almost filled the aisles, where on former occasions auditors were scant indeed. This should teach the Committee a lesson. The "Redemption" was a distinct executive success, all engaged upon it putting their heart into the work, not less than their greatest skill. Special mention should be made of Madame Nordica, Miss Damian, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. Santley, the singing of these artists being all that one could reasonably desire. Mr. W. Nicholl and Mr. Levison Myatt were also of service, while both chorus and orchestra proved fully equal to their task. It is not too much to say that the "Redemption" performance came nearer to a festival standard than any other during the week; not only the execution of the music, but the largeness of the attendance and the sympathy of the audience being worthy of a special occasion.

In concluding these remarks, I must congratulate the managers of the Chester Festival upon its steady advance from a small beginning to a position not far short of that held by similar enterprises of much longer standing. Undoubtedly they have something still to learn, but their discretion in the past is a good guarantee as to the future. My thanks are due to the Honorary Secretary, the Rev. C. H. Hylton Stewart, M.A., Precentor of the Cathedral, for much personal courtesy in facilitating the discharge of my duties as a reporter of the Festival.

THE HEREFORD FESTIVAL.

THE Festival of the three Choirs, Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford is to be held this year at the last-named place, in the week beginning the 9th inst. The performances will be, as usual, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of the poorer Clergy of the dioceses, and in furtherance of this praiseworthy design the Stewards make the endeavour to present a programme which is designed to be attractive. As far as is possible pace is kept in the arrangements with the spirit of the times, but the smallness of the organisation, and the great expenses involved in the triennial celebration, precludes the possibility of enterprise such as distinguishes the conduct of festivals at great centres like Leeds and Birmingham. Therefore Hereford, the smallest of the three Cathedral cities, contents itself, for the most part, with the repetition of works which have already received the cachet of public approval. New works written expressly for the Festival have not been wanting from time to time, but here, as well as at the larger places, the new works are not always profitable at the outset. The object of the musical meeting is to benefit the cause of the charity, and the whole of the collections which are made at the doors of the Cathedral at the end of each performance are devoted to that object, with any benefit that may accrue from the sale of the tickets. All deficiencies in the expenses are made good by the Stewards, who are also guarantors; but in their own interests, as well as in those of the public, great care is taken to offer a scheme which shall please the public, and so swell the fund for the Charity. There are this year no works written expressly for the Festival, but there are several which may be considered in the light of novelties. Mr. Cowen's "Song of Thanksgiving," written for the opening of the Melbourne Exhibition, and the Centennial celebration of the foundation of the colony, will be heard for the first time in England. Dr. Parry's setting of Milton's ode "Blest pair of Syrens," and the Oratorio "St. Polycarp," the work of Sir Frederick Ouseley, Canon and Precentor of the Cathedral, and Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, will bring their own interest with them. "St. Polycarp," which was written as an Exercise for the Degree of Doctor of Music in Oxford some thirty years back, has some very fine thoughts ably expressed, and its revival cannot fail to make an impression. Among the other works to be done are several which will be heartily welcomed for their own merits and association. "Elijah" opens the Festival on the 11th inst., and "The Messiah" concludes it. Handel's "Samson," Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," Schubert's "Song of Miriam," Spohr's "God, Thou art great," the first and second parts of the "Creation," and Cherubini's "Mass in D" will be heard in the Cathedral. There are two Concerts, which will be given in the Shire Hall on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. On these occasions "The Golden Legend," conducted by the composer, Sir Arthur Sullivan, and several other vocal and instrumental works will be given.

Dr. Langdon Colborne, the Organist of the Cathedral, is the Conductor, and he will be assisted in the performance of other musical duties during the week by Mr. Done, of Worcester, and Mr. Williams, of Gloucester. Mr. Carrodus is the leader of the band, and the solo vocalists are Madame Albani, Miss Ambler, Madame Enriquez, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. E. Lloyd, C. Banks, Brereton, and Santley. Thus the Committee have endeavoured to deserve if they cannot command success.

THE BAYREUTH FESTIVAL PLAYS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE sixth series of these performances, which commenced on July 22, came to an end on the 19th ult., and may be regarded as the most successful yet given. So far from the interest in the Wagner theatre diminishing with time, it appears to be rapidly extending, at any rate outside Germany, and it is by no means improbable that the Festival will become an annual instead of a biennial occurrence. The official support promised by the Kaiser Wilhelm will be, of course, a potent factor in the future of the undertaking, and there are now sixty-two "Patrons" who are pledged to give £250 each in five years, thus forming a reserve fund of no less than £15,500. It is understood that this fund is to be used for mounting fresh works from time to time. Thus a revival of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" will not be very long delayed, and new scenery and costumes will be required, the old set having been sold to Herr Neumann for his travelling company, which visited this country in 1882. There is also a strong desire on the part of Frau Cosima Wagner to produce "Tannhäuser," a work which is only heard at Munich in the shape it finally received from the composer. Whether Wagner's scheme will ever be carried out in its entirety—that is, including the performance of other German masterpieces by Gluck, Mozart, Weber, &c., under the Bayreuth conditions—is a matter for the future. It is safe to predict that for some time to come the Franconian temple of art will only re-echo to the strains of the master who conceived and established it.

Turning to the representations just concluded, the production of "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" was of course the principal feature of interest, for although this masterpiece of comedy is a stock item in the repertory of every German opera-house, it can never be given in its entirety nor under the conditions intended by the composer. Great curiosity was therefore excited as to the effect it would produce in the Bayreuth Theatre, and the result was as striking a revelation as that when "Tristan und Isolde" was performed in 1886. If any doubt lingered as to the necessity of giving Wagner's music-dramas as he intended them for their full realisation, the performance of "Die Meistersinger" must have dissipated it in the minds of all present. In the first place, one could feel the extreme damage inflicted by the inevitable "cuts" at ordinary theatres. In the older operas, if the best numbers are omitted, there is loss only in a musical sense. In "Don Giovanni," for example, the airs of Don Ottavio might be struck out, and the drama would only play closer in consequence. Each is a gem of beauty in itself, but is not in the least essential to the progress of the work. But Wagner's music-dramas are purely homogeneous; every portion has a significance which cannot be overlooked without detriment to the general structure, and a curtailment cannot be effected without injury comparable to that which would result from cutting out a slice from a picture or lopping off a limb from a statue. Reference is made here of course to those works which emanated from the master's ripest period, of which "Die Meistersinger" is one. It may be objected by those who have not visited Bayreuth that the colossal scale on which the opera is planned necessarily involves severe mental fatigue on the part of the most enthusiastic listener. The first act occupies an hour and a half; the second, exactly an hour; and the third, almost two hours. The reply to this must be that the lengthy interval between each act, during which rest and refreshment can be obtained in the open air, is sufficient for recuperative purposes, and the spectator who leaves the theatre in a state of physical and mental exhaustion welcomes the trumpet call which summons him to return to the intellectual banquet. As to the advantage which accrues to the music from the orchestra being hidden and subdued, no exaggeration of statement is possible. The score of "Die Meistersinger" is a wondrous mosaic, every square inch of which has absolute beauty and relative importance. In an ordinary performance a proper balance is impossible; the voices are frequently overpowered by the orchestra, and the louder parts obtain greater prominence than is their due, while many of the delicate effects are lost. At Bayreuth all this is rectified; every point makes its due effect, which means that there is not a dull moment in the performance, for there is not an uninspired bar in the work. The sensation is quite diverse from that experienced in listening to "Tristan und Isolde." There all is terrible passion and restless energy; while in "Die Meistersinger" everything is touched with a light, yet most cunning, hand. The flow of melody, heightened by masterful orchestral colour, is ceaseless, and frequently the humour of the story is illustrated in a manner never approached by any other composer. One example will suffice. In the third act, when Beckmesser enters the dwelling of Hans Sachs, the orchestra portrays the sufferings of the severely-castigated Town Clerk, and his mean-spirited, suspicious nature, with wonderful fidelity, though unassisted by words. Those who have not visited Bayreuth cannot realise from mere description the superiority of a performance in the Wagner Theatre over one of the highest class under the usual conditions. It is almost needless to add that in the matters of scenery and costumes everything was done to increase the effect of the picture. The views of old Nuremberg, in the second and third acts, were exact, and the various characters might have stepped out of pictures by Albrecht Dürer. With regard to the work done by the principal artists, we have to recognise the fact that although Bayreuth can ensure a perfect ensemble it cannot create performers of genius. By securing two or three representatives for every part, the chances of a catastrophe are reduced to a minimum; but, on the other hand, a visitor cannot count upon hearing a particular cast unless he stays for several performances. Those who were present on July 26 were highly favoured. To begin with, the Hans Sachs was Herr Scheidemantel, who possesses a qualification by no means general among Wagnerian artists—that of being able to sing. His delivery of the beautiful monologues in the second and third acts, and his share of the duets with Eva, was marked by rare finish, and in appearance he perfectly realised the cobbler poet. The Eva was Fräulein Bettaque, a young artist from Bremen, who unites to a pleasing face a voice of good quality, though a little hard in the upper register. The rôle of Beckmesser needs a performer who can realise the humour of the part without descending to vulgarity, and Herr Friedrichs exactly hit the happy mean. Smooth-faced and plausible, he made Beckmesser a far more probable personage than those who transform him into a kind of pantaloon. Another excellent embodiment was that of David, by Herr Hofmüller, a light tenor with an extensive compass. The part is more important in the original than as usually curtailed. Herr Wiegand was a weighty and imposing Pogner, and Frau Staudigl was almost too attractive as the matronly Magdalena. Herr Gudehus has appeared in London as Walter, and his embodiment remains what it was—efficient, if rather hard and unsympathetic. The choruses, which it is scarcely necessary to state are extremely important in "Die Meistersinger," were splendidly interpreted, especially in the difficult scene of the street disturbance in the second act, where apparent disorder is produced by strict attention to the leads and tempi. The orchestra, a magnificent force of 106 players, selected from various German cities, moved perfectly under the guidance of Herr Richter, whose co-operation was of the greatest service.

In a popular sense, however, "Parsifal" retained its position as the most important feature of the Festival, nor is it likely to be dethroned so long as performances of the work elsewhere are forbidden. On all grounds it is to be hoped that Frau Wagner will not relax her determination, in spite of the golden offers of our American cousins. "Parsifal" at Bayreuth is, in the highest degree, an imposing and edifying function; "Parsifal" at an ordinary opera-house could not fail to be painful to all right-thinking people. Moreover, Bayreuth would then cease to be the Mecca of the Wagnerites, who must make the pilgrimage to the obscure Bavarian town if they would assist at the interpretation of the master's crowning work. On the recent occasion this disposition was stronger than ever and at several performances persons who had failed to secure seats beforehand were disappointed. Such was the case on Sunday, July 29, when the "Bühnenweihfestspiel" was given for the fiftieth time. On this occasion the lottery in which visitors are obliged to invest in the matter of artists received a potent illustration. Bayreuth was ringing with the praises of a new Parsifal in the person of Herr van Dyck, a young Flemish artist, who, it may be remembered, sang the part of Lohengrin at Paris during the ill-fated enterprise of M. Lamoureux. A powerful voice, inclining to baritone in quality, a handsome presence, and particularly good elocution were all in Herr van Dyck's favour, and opinion was unanimous that the ideal of the Knight of the Grail had been secured. Unfortunately, he did not appear on the occasion above-mentioned, the part being taken by Herr Jaeger, who was one of those who created it in 1882. This artist is past his prime, and his voice is no longer fully under his control. Compensation, however, was afforded by the admirable assumption of Kundry by Frau Sucher. One of the most attractive artists on the German stage, Frau Sucher entirely realised Wagner's conception in the second act, where Kundry, in the guise of a beautiful woman, tempts the "pure fool" to sin, while in the first and third her acting was, in every respect, appropriate and effective. Her voice has lost a little of its pristine freshness, but for some years to come it is unlikely that a more satisfactory exponent of this many-sided character will appear. Equally flawless was the Anfortas of Herr Scheidemantel. The despairing appeals of the suffering king are strangely moving as rendered with vocal charm by this consummate artist. Herr Wiegand as Gurnemanz and Herr Plank as Klingsor resumed parts which they are well qualified to sustain. The general performance was marked by the customary earnestness in all matters of detail, though perfection was not attained in every particular. The new bells, which it was hoped would be a great improvement, proved somewhat harsh and discordant, and the boys' voices in the Grail scene left something to desire as regards purity of tone. Further, the tempi of Herr Mottl were sometimes slower than those of Herr Levi, and we do not think the work gained in consequence. But making due allowance for every shortcoming, enough remained to render the performance what it should be—an intellectual and emotional exercise of the most pleasurable nature, attainable only at Bayreuth.

MUSIC AT THE EXHIBITIONS.

IRELAND is as rich as any country in the world in stores of national melody, and it was a happy thought of Mr. Ludwig, the well-known baritone, and himself a Hibernian by birth, to organise a series of National Concerts at the Irish Exhibition now being held at Olympia. By Irish music he evidently implied music by Irish composers, and his programmes included selections from the operas of Balfe and Wallace, though the greatest living composer from the neighbouring island, Dr. Villiers Stanford, was not represented. The most legitimate features of the undertaking, however, were the selection of genuine Irish ditties contributed by Miss Kate Flinn, Miss Clara Merivale, and other vocalists, including, of course, the Concert-giver himself, and the playing of Mr. Hogan on the Irish pipes, known as the "Ullan," an instrument not so well known, but certainly more musical than the Scottish bagpipes. Mr. Hogan's command over the resources of his instrument has enabled him to present to his hearers a most interesting series of old Hibernian melodies, given with characteristic power. The pipes are differently constructed to the Scotch bagpipes, the wind being supplied by bellows moved by the elbow—hence the name. The term "union," by which the instrument is often erroneously designated, is a corruption of the old Celtic word "ullan," which means "elbow." Shakespeare, in his "Merchant of Venice," Act iv., scene i., alludes to the instrument by another corruption of its ancient name when he says—

As there is no firm reason to be render'd
Why he, cannot abide a gaping pig,
Why he, a harmless necessary cat,
Why he, a woollen bagpipe,—but of force
Must yield to such inevitable shame,
As to offend himself, being offended;
So can I give no reason, nor I will not.

The word "woollen" here distinctly means "ullan," for a bagpipe made of woollen material is impossible.

Other musical performances have been given by various bands, all helping to make the proceedings lively. Some little excitement was created by one band from Cork refusing to play the English National Anthem to conclude their programme. The Barrack Street Band from Cork had been engaged to take part in the musical arrangements of the Exhibition during the week commencing the 20th ult. They played the numbers stated in the programme until the time arrived for playing the National Anthem, when the whole of the band at a given signal left the orchestra, taking their instruments and music sheets with them. The position of affairs was hardly realised by the public until a member of Parliament present applauded the retreat, a proceeding which was followed by hisses and other indignant demonstrations. A military band was called in from the grounds to play the National Anthem, which they played amidst cheers from the audience. On being asked for an explanation, the members of the band said they dared not go back to Ireland after playing "God save the Queen." The bandmaster attempted to justify his conduct by declaring that they did not know the tune, and that it was not on the list of pieces they had agreed to play. The band was allowed to complete the engagement by the gentleman in temporary charge of the direction, on the supposition that Lord Arthur Hill would sanction his action; but his Lordship has since written disclaiming any such sanction, and protesting against the course adopted.

Music occupies a prominent place among the many attractions of the Italian Exhibition at Earl's Court. It is almost entirely furnished by Italian performers. The "Sorrento Singers" give their popular melodies with the aid of a limited but effective orchestra of first and second violins, clarinet, ophicleide, two guitars, and a mandoline. They play and sing with abundant spirit, and some of their melodies are decidedly attractive. In the Tarantella they shine most conspicuously, and the national dance executed by a dozen agile dancers, who throw an amusing variety of shades of expression into their movements, is most effective, as it is not the Tarantella we have been accustomed to see in operatic ballets, but the genuine dance. The "Neapolitan Mandolinists," also meritorious performers, confine themselves exclusively to popular Italian melodies, such as Calienne's "Santa Lucia" and others hitherto unknown in this country.

Concerts have been given in the large concert hall by several performers, including those by the eminent flautist, Signor Paggi, his wife, son, and three daughters, with Signor Carlo Ducci as pianist. Signor Paggi's Concerts were most attractive.

The "Italian Exhibition Band" plays at intervals throughout each day. This band is chiefly composed of English performers, under Mr. Hiram Henton, late of the Albert Palace at Battersea, a zealous and competent director. The programmes have been selected with judgment and the performances have given a considerable amount of pleasure to the daily visitors at the Exhibition.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

It may be taken as a sign of the times that few, if any, of the large popular associations which hold high festival at the Crystal Palace at this season of the year regard their programmes as complete without some kind of musical performance on the Handel orchestra. These harmonious adjuncts to the business of the day rarely call for critical notice, though they are generally remarkable for excellent organisation and praiseworthy enthusiasm. An exception occasionally occurs, and the Festival of Co-operative Societies which was inaugurated on Saturday, the 18th ult., was one such, as the Concert included a new Ode, composed expressly for the occasion by Mr. J. F. Barnett. The executants were 4,000 singers drawn mainly from the humbler ranks of society in various parts of the country, who were prepared by local conductors under the supervision of Mr. G. W. Williams. The regulations respecting rehearsals were very strict, and it was doubtless owing to this that the various items of the programme were rendered with truly remarkable crispness and precision. With the exception of the new work above-mentioned, they consisted wholly of simple part-songs in various styles, of which those without accompaniment and of a lively nature were by far the most effective. The soprano voices, which largely predominated, were clear and ringing, if slightly shrill, and the tenors and basses, though numerically weak, were of excellent quality. Mr. Barnett's Ode is a setting of a poem by Mr. Lewis Morris, entitled "The Triumph of Labour." The subject is no doubt important, but it is almost too prosaic to receive serious musical treatment, and Mr. Morris's lines are mainly an exhortation to the masses to band together for the purpose of enforcing a fair division of profits with "the bloated capitalist." We can well believe that Mr. Barnett felt puzzled how to deal with such a theme, and if his music is not so worthy of him as could be desired, there is small cause for wonder. Its character is sedate and almost church-like, and the choral portions are in unison, with the exception of one bar. There is a part for soprano solo, which was fairly well rendered by Mdlle. Ernestine Ponti. The excellent service contributed on the organ by Miss Flora Klickmann, both as soloist and accompanist, must not pass without mention.

"THE GOLDEN LEGEND" IN ADELAIDE.

PERHAPS the most successful Concert yet given by the Adelaide Musical Association was that of Tuesday evening, June 26, when Sir Arthur Sullivan's Cantata "The Golden Legend" was performed in addition to the Finale to the first act of Mendelssohn's "Loreley." The Town Hall was crowded to the doors, and many persons were unable to gain admission. The credit of making the Australian public acquainted with Sullivan's work is due to the spirit and enterprise of Mr. C. J. Stevens, the Conductor of the Society, who, during his residence here, has shown a determination, not only to push forward the Society to which he has attached himself, but also to keep it well abreast of the latest developments in the musical world. Making every allowance for the difficulties of representation which must be encountered here, those who were present and heard the work can well endorse the opinion as to its meritorious character. The chorus numbered about 200 voices and the orchestra nearly thirty.

The solo parts in the Cantata were allotted to Mrs. Johnson James as Elsie (soprano), Mrs. J. W. Ramsay as Ursula (contralto), Mr. C. M. J. Edwards as Prince Henry (tenor), Mr. R. H. Holder as Lucifer (baritone), and Mr. A. E. J. Marshall as a Forester (bass). The opening solo and chorus, "Hasten, hasten," were given with as much effect as could be expected from the resources of the Society. Mr. Edwards created a favourable impression in his opening number, "I cannot sleep." He has a voice of nice quality with clear declamation, apparently more suited to canto spianato than to the more florid or dramatic style of music. Mr. Edwards was heard to advantage also in later numbers, and particularly in the beautiful duets with Elsie, "Onward and onward," and "We are alone." Mrs. Johnson James sang throughout with a feeling and verve that displayed the results of careful study, and a determination to do justice to the subject, and she was also in excellent voice. Mrs. Ramsay sang carefully and well, and both Mr. Holder and Mr. Marshall acquitted themselves admirably. The unaccompanied chorus, "O gladsome light," was one of the best features of the evening; but every credit must be given to the members for their proficiency also in other choral numbers. The "Loreley" selection was of a distinctly opposite character to the Cantata which preceded it, Mrs. Johnson James sustaining the rôle of Leonora in a most spirited manner. Mr. Hermann Schrader ably officiated as leader of the choir, and Mr. W. R. Pybus as Organist.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

THERE has been no lack of music in our city during these past two or three months. But for the International Exhibition, however, the supply of musical entertainment would otherwise have been of the scantiest, all Glasgow being, ordinarily, out of town at this season. On the whole there has been less reason, so far, to be dissatisfied with the musical arrangements of the Exhibition than was anticipated, though undoubtedly some grand opportunities have been missed of an exposition of the art in keeping with the imposing character of the circumstances. Several British and Continental military bands have appeared since I last wrote, among those being that of the Royal Engineers under Mr. Zaverthal, and the bands of the Belgian Guides

First system of the musical score. It features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "O give thanks, give thanks, give thanks, O give thanks un - to the give thanks, give thanks, give thanks, give thanks, O give thanks un - to the give thanks, give thanks, O give thanks un - to the thanks un - to the Lord, give thanks un - to the". The piano part includes a large brace under the first four measures.

Second system of the musical score. It continues the vocal and piano parts. The lyrics are: "Lord, give thanks un - to the Lord, . . . for He is gra - - cious, and His Lord, give thanks un - to the Lord, . . . for He is gra - - cious, and His Lord, give thanks un - to the Lord, . . . for He is gra - - cious, and His Lord, give thanks un - to the Lord, . . . for He is gra - - cious, and His". and the Bavarian Field Artillery under Captain Staps and Herr Carl respectively. The Continental instrumentalists favoured music of a classic character, and presented extracts from symphonies with such a degree of acceptance as was hardly to be looked for, considering the natural unsuitableness of the medium through which the music was interpreted. The Exhibition Band proper has, thanks to the energy, skill, and tact of Mr. E. T. de Banzie, the Musical Director to the Exhibition, given much satisfaction, the band quite holding its own against the longer training and experience of the foreign bands. On certain evenings Mr. de Banzie has played by request some strictly classical selections.

During July and August among the Choral Societies which gave Concerts in the Exhibition Hall may be mentioned the following—namely, the West of Scotland Choral Union (Mr. H. A. Lambeth), the Tubal Glee Club, an efficient male voice choir, the Victoria Choir under Mr. W. M. Miller, the Coatbridge Select Choir, the Glasgow Temperance Choral Society (Mr. W. H. Murray), and Mr. Bell's Select Choir.

Full honour, it may be mentioned, has been done to local musical talent in the way of composition, the part-songs and other arrangements, choral and instrumental, of resident musicians having good places in the choral and other programmes.

The chief musical display, however, of the Exhibition mid-season took place in connection with the visit of Her Majesty to the Exhibition on Wednesday, the 22nd ult. The Choral Union took their place, as hitherto, and rendered the following programme:—Chorus, "All men, all things" ("Lobgesang"), Mendelssohn; Chorus, "O gladsome light" ("The Golden Legend"), Sullivan; Coronation Anthem, "Zadok the Priest," Handel; The National Anthem; "A Song of Praise" (specially composed for the occasion), J. Bradley; to which was added, in accordance with Her Majesty's request, "Auld Lang Syne." A Processional March, by Mr. E. T. de Banzie, likewise specially composed, was also played. Mr. Bradley's pièce de circonstance, "A Song of Praise," is based on the late Prince Consort's chorale "Gotha," the complete theme being worked into a short instrumental introduction, while the first line of it is made the subject of a choral fugue, to words from the Psalms and Benedictine omnia opera; the whole concluding with the Chorale itself to the words "Here, great God, to Thee we offer." The music, on the whole, accompanied by military instruments and organ, proved effective, and not unworthy of the occasion, though per se it is somewhat mechanical and lacking, in some degree, in melodiousness and other elements of popularity.

The organists who have performed on the great organ during July and August were Mr. D. F. Wilson (Ayr), Mr. Harold Ryder (Glasgow), Mr. Alfred Hollins (London), Dr. A. L. Peace, Mr. T. S. Drummond (Hamilton), Mr. W. L. Gale (Airdrie), Mr. R. McCulley (Glasgow), and Dr. Spark (Leeds).

The Glasgow Choral Union, I learn, have fixed on the following choral works for performance next season—namely, Sullivan's Cantata "The Golden Legend"; Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," Hamish McCunn's new cantata "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," and Handel's "Messiah," the latter, as usual, for New Year's Day.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE visit of the Russian Opera Company to Liverpool coincided with the re-opening of the Alexandra Theatre on the 6th ult., and the public have shown an unusual interest in the performances given by the body. It possesses several very distinctive qualities, which give a characteristic stamp to all the performances, and the earnestness of purpose which pervades the entire organisation commands genuine approval. Firstly, the company is happy in the possession of a Conductor, Mr. Guiseppe Truffi, who has a full and ready command of his forces, who is thoroughly versed in every intricacy and difficulty of the works put forward, and who is in perfect sympathy with the performers. This is a feature of essential value, especially when it is borne in mind that the company does not carry with it on its travels a permanent native orchestra, but is dependent upon the local resources of each town it visits. Secondly, the chorus, although not numerous, and unequal in the quality of the respective voices, has a powerful individuality. It is quite impressive in its seriousness, its absorption in the work in hand, and its wonderful precision, testifying perhaps more to the excellence of its instruction than to the beauty of the vocalisation.

To come now to the principal artists, it is again impossible to speak of the company as a whole, as the members are so varied in their abilities. They all act well, knowing and feeling, often with a painful intensity, the object and desideratum of what they are rendering. But the voices differ greatly in quality. There are several rough diamonds and two or three really grand artists, such for instance as M. Zarkatow, M. Winogradoff, and M. Lubimow—in fact, the baritones certainly preponderate in vocal and perhaps also histrionic ability.

The répertoire of this company, as so far unfolded, comprises Glinka's "Life for the Czar," Rubinstein's "Demon," Verdi's "Rigoletto," and Tschaikowsky's "Mazeppa." The first three operas have already been given elsewhere in England, and whilst Glinka's work is so essentially representative in its character and national in its plot, the "Demon" has and probably will continue to excite the greatest interest. Rubinstein's name has in itself a certain fascination, and his work, which increases in artistic merit as it progresses, is a fairly accurate reflex of the composer's peculiarities. The closing temptation scene is ably worked out and decidedly impressive.

The performance of "Rigoletto"—which is perhaps less adapted to the special pretensions of this Russian Company—was chiefly remarkable for the artistic realism with which M. Lubimow invested his delineation of the title-rôle.

"Mazeppa" is eminently a Russian opera in every feature, and may be accepted as a fair specimen. Its composer—Tschaikowsky—is already well and favourably known in England, partly by his exquisite pianoforte music, but mainly by his Symphonic Poems, of which we have a descriptive example in the concluding scene of "Mazeppa." Only recently M. Tschaikowsky visited London, having been invited to conduct a number of his own compositions at the Concerts of the Philharmonic Society, when he met with an enthusiastic reception. "Mazeppa" is a work reconciling with singular felicity the libretto and the musical setting. Occasionally it seems difficult to appreciate the intention of the composer, but probably this is due to our lack of familiarity with his style, and there is no question as to the general ability of the workmanship and the melodic beauty of many of his passages. As regards the interpretation by the company, whilst everything worked together harmoniously, one feature stands out with peculiar prominence, and that is, the assumption of the rôle of Kotschoubey by M. Winogradoff. His vocalisation throughout, and the intensity of his action in the prison scene, will not be readily forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to witness it.

We anticipate another visit from this company next month, and their advent will be looked forward to with eager interest.

As a fitting contrast, the Russian Opera Company has been succeeded at the Alexandra Theatre by Mr. J. W. Turner, with his English Company. The performances have, however, been confined to the well worn "Maritana," "Bohemian Girl," "Faust," and "Fra Diavolo," and the only feature calling for notice is the vigour and continued popularity of Mr. Turner's own impersonations.

MUSIC IN MONMOUTHSHIRE AND SOUTH WALES.

SEVERAL events of interest occurred on the 6th ult. (Bank Holiday). At the Colonial Hall, Cardiff, Mr. A. J. Williams, M.P., presided over an Eisteddfod, held under the auspices of the Ancient Benefit Friendly Society. The adjudicators were Mr. T. Price (Merthyr) and Mr. J. R. Lewis (Cardiff). In the afternoon the presidential chair was occupied by Mr. E. Thomas. "Then round about the starry throne"—a chorus now thoroughly well known to frequenters of Eisteddfodau—was the test piece in the chief choral competition between choirs of not less than seventy voices. The competing choirs, three in number, were: Libanus, Cwmbwrla (Mr. M. E. Thomas, Conductor), Penarth United (Mr. J. Richards), and Treherbert, Rhondda (Mr. Noah Williams). The last-named choir, which comprised 120 voices, and was by far the strongest of the three, received the prize. Among other contests was that for the best rendering, by parties of not less than twenty-five male voices, of "Comrades in arms." Nine parties competed, and the honours were taken by Treherbert. The Roath Board School Choir (consisting of children under fifteen years of age), Mr. Noote, Conductor, took the prize for the best rendering of "Victory," a chorus composed by Mr. Price, one of the adjudicators. At the Pentre annual Eisteddfod, the centre of much local interest, the musical adjudicators were: Mr. L. C. Venables (Principal of the South London Institute of Music), and Mr. D. Jenkins, M.B., Aberystwith. Mr. W. Abraham, M.P., presided. In the soprano solo contest, "The Skylark," Mrs. Griffiths, Treorhy, Rhondda, was adjudicated successful. Only one band (Pentre Brass Band) entered for the brass band competition, a selection from "Moses in Egypt," the Conductor being Mr. Joseph Henry. For their encouragement they were awarded half the amount of the prize. In tenor, baritone, and alto solos, Mr. Samuel Rees, Treorhy; Mr. Owen Treharne, Pentre; and Miss Catherine Morgan, Dowlais, were respectively successful. Bass solo, "Anchored," Mr. D. J. Davies, now of Leicester. The Cwmmer Band was the only one entered in a second brass band contest, "Bohemian Girl" selection. Their performance was, however, so excellent that they were awarded the full amount of the prize. The chief choral competition, "Great and wonderful," was listened to with marked interest. The competing choirs were Rhondda Philharmonic, Cymmer United, and Blaenycwm. The second choir was awarded the prize. Mr. Venables took occasion to observe that he had been more struck with the power, fulness, and the quality of the male voices than with those of the females. There was weight as well as purity in the tone of the tenor and the bass—qualities rarely found in London vocalists. The weak point in Welsh mixed choirs was undoubtedly the contralto part. That wanted better management, and the voices should be cultivated in order to have a mellow, rich tone.

The third annual Eisteddfod at Jaff's Well, near Cardiff, was held, with Mr. G. J. Rees, Swansea, as musical adjudicator. The Nantgarw United Choir (Mr. Moses Evans) secured the prize in the leading choral competition.

The National Eisteddfod of Wales, to be held at Wrexham on the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th inst., promises to be a brilliant gathering; the number of competitors is close on 4,000. Twenty-five choirs will compete. Choral competitions are held daily, and performances of the "Elijah" and "The Messiah," with full orchestral accompaniment, will be given in addition to two miscellaneous Concerts. The Committee have engaged Mrs. Mary Davies, Miss Anna Williams, Mrs. Hutchinson, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Charles Banks, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, Eos Morlais, Mr. John Bridson, Mr. Lucas Williams, and Mr. Sauvage as principal artists; also the services of the magnificent band (numbering forty-five) of the R. W. F. of Galway.

A meeting of the council and members of the National Society of Musicians was held on Monday at the Drill Hall, Merthyr, and was followed by a Conference of musicians in the afternoon. The Society was started in March at Swansea, where the local section, including Swansea, Landore, and Morriston, has for its President Dr. Parry, the President of the Association being the Ven. Archdeacon Griffiths, of Neath (who was absent from the Merthyr proceedings), whilst Mr. Jacob Davies (Cardiff) is General Treasurer, and Mr. Rees Jones (Landore), General Secretary. A branch was established at Merthyr and another at Llanelly. The Society has about forty members.

At the morning meeting of the council and members the chair was taken by Mr. D. Bowen, of Abercarn. The advisability of establishing an annual Musical Festival on St. David's Day was discussed. Mr. D. Jenkins thought it was premature for them to go into the subject then, as they were not strong enough numerically. Their chief object was to get as many members as they could and then take the subject into consideration. The feeling of the meeting was in favour of having such a Festival. Mr. D. Jenkins then referred to the question of appointing a deputation to represent them at the National Eisteddfod at Wrexham. The National Eisteddfod Association had already appointed Mr. Joseph Bennett to lead the discussion in a matter similar to those claims they had been promoting, but if they also held a meeting at Wrexham it might lead some people to think they were going in opposition to the Association. After the general secretary had read a letter from the secretary to the Cymrodorion Society inviting them to attend the meeting at Wrexham, at which Mr. Bennett will give his paper on the "Formation of a National Society for Wales," it was agreed to appoint a deputation of gentlemen likely to attend at Wrexham to represent the Society.

A Conference of musicians was held at the Drill Hall in the afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. D. Bowen. The attendance was fairly large. Mr. D. Jenkins, Aberystwith, read a paper on "The present state of musical competitions in Wales." He said anyone acquainted with the Principality could see at a glance that the love for musical competition had taken a strong hold upon the working classes. Notwithstanding the strong and convincing arguments brought forward in favour of establishing festivals to perform complete works (and they were glad to find that such festivals were on the increase), yet, in spite of those innovations, the people would have their Eisteddfodau, and cling most tenaciously to the old order of things. That being the case, it behoved them as musicians to try and improve the old institution, and utilise the great enthusiasm that was to a great extent wasted upon choral competitions. Their great deficiency was that of selecting the same pieces continually for competition at their local Eisteddfodau. The National Eisteddfod, to its credit might it be said, was the only institution where they could hear new music performed in Wales. Singing well-known pieces weakened the effect of that music, and many of their conductors degenerated into a stereotyped style of conducting, until the performance became stale and painfully monotonous. Surely that was not the way to develop individuality and independence in conducting. It was full time for their musical committees to leave that beaten track and lead the choirs into a new path. Prizes should be offered to choirs for reading at first sight. He would also suggest the advisability of allowing the choirs to choose a piece of their own selection. That would give freshness and variety to the proceedings, which were greatly needed at their choral contests. The only stricture he would impose upon the choirs was that they should select any piece contrary in style and feeling to the one selected by the Committee; for example, if the Committee selected a chorus, the choirs would be expected to select a glee or part-song and vice versa. That plan would break upon the monotony of their present system and would be the means of introducing new and varied music to the patient listeners for many hours at their Eisteddfodau. It was beyond their province to compel any committee to adopt these suggestions, but as the members of that Society were scattered throughout Wales, they might reasonably expect that their influence might be exerted in leading their local committees to move in that direction. He would strongly object to the utter exclusion of English music from their performances. On the other hand, for every English composition a Welsh one should be selected, thus giving a fair opportunity to Welsh music, and should it suffer in comparison with the works of the great masters the effect would be wholesome. He would apply the same principle to the selection of vocalists, at their Eisteddfodau. Notwithstanding the contemptible insinuations occasionally made by a few disaffected persons, yet it could not be denied that Welsh music was rapidly rising in quality as well as in the estimation of the public. One phase in the development of their nationality was the present formation of a Welsh School of Music, as stated by Mr. Joseph Bennett, Mr. Turpin, Mr. Curwen, and Mr. Leslie. Was it not therefore the duty of that Society to use its influence in furthering the advancement of such a school by giving Welsh music and Welsh vocalists equal opportunities with the English. In conclusion, might he ask was it not possible for that Society to form itself into a committee to arrange an Eisteddfod programme on the lines indicated above. The dramatic Cantata "David and Goliath," by Mr. D. Jenkins, was performed at the hall in the evening.

MR. WILLIAM CHAPPELL.

By the death of Mr. William Chappell, F.S.A., which occurred at his London residence in Upper Brook Street on the 20th ult., the archæological branch of musical literature has sustained a great, and indeed it may be said, an irreparable loss. The vast reading, the wide knowledge, and the sound judgment of the deceased caused him to be looked upon as the best authority of the day on all subjects connected with the antiquarian and historical side of music. This was more especially the case with regard to old English music; in his knowledge of this—a knowledge gained by diligent and patient investigation in our public libraries and private collections—he stood unrivalled. Although the deceased was a learned man and a good all-round scholar, it was in this particular department of our national musical history that his talent was displayed to the best advantage. Not only was he gifted with the instinct of guessing where to search for fresh materials, but he was further endowed with the power of digesting, assimilating, and arranging his materials, and then reproducing them in a form remarkable for its charm of diction, and the concreteness with which he presented his historical facts. When the history of music in England comes to be written, the laborious and valuable researches of William Chappell, and notably his famous work "Popular Music of the Olden Time," will supply to the historian a mine of the most useful and varied material for his task. William Chappell was the eldest son of Mr. Samuel Chappell, who, together with John Baptist Cramer, the pianist and writer, and Francis Tatton Latour, founded the well-known firm of musical publishers. He was born in London, November 20, 1809. On the death of his father in 1834, the young man, assisted by his brothers, Thomas and Samuel Arthur, carried on the business for his mother. William soon displayed and developed a taste for the antiquities of music, though he by no means neglected his business proper; his love for the art and the fascination which the works of the Elizabethan madrigalists exercised over him caused him to devote much time to searching for specimens of these remarkable compositions, and endeavouring to make them more widely known and sung. In 1840 he projected the Musical Antiquarian Society, which, though now dormant, has done good service in rescuing from oblivion the Fancies, Madrigals, Masses, Motets, Operas, Fa-la's, and other works by our early English composers. Not the least interesting of the volumes published was the one entitled "Parthenia; or, the first music ever printed for the Virginals." Mr. Chappell's efforts were well seconded by his friend, Dr. E. F. Rimbault. Nineteen volumes were issued by the Society, which numbered during its seven years' existence upwards of a thousand members. Among those who edited its issues are to be found the names of Sterndale Bennett, G. A. Macfarren, W. Horsley, J. Turler, Professor Taylor, Sir George Smart, J. Warren, and E. J. Hopkins. Mr. Chappell was not content that these works should be regarded only as curiosities and be consigned to the shelves of libraries; he got together a small choir for the performance of the pieces, and the rehearsals were held at the house of his firm in New Bond Street. From this focus was radiated a new-born love for these old compositions, which has since spread all over England, and to which, in conjunction with the subsequent enterprise of Messrs. Novello, may be ascribed the knowledge and popularity of our early madrigals. Mr. Chappell was responsible for the volume, "The first set of songs," by John Dowland, lutenist to Queen Elizabeth, and to whose skill Shakespeare bears testimony. Between 1838 and 1840 appeared a "Collection of National English Airs," together with an "Essay on Minstrelsy in England." This volume was the result of much searching and years of work. It contained 245 airs, their pedigrees, and many anecdotes connected with them. Its publication caused a very lively interest to be manifested in old English music, even those who considered themselves authorities on the subject were surprised at the rich materials that Mr. Chappell had unearthed. It called attention to the wealth of melody and great variety of our ballads that had been hidden away for generations, and the collection seemed amply to justify the old appellation we once enjoyed of "merrie England." The melodies were harmonised according to their character by Dr. Crotch, J. A. Wade, and Sir G. A. Macfarren. The book was soon out of print, and though another edition was called for, Mr. Chappell determined to delay it until he could thoroughly revise the letterpress, and add very materially to the collection. Consequently it was not until 1859 that he completed and issued his magnum opus, "Popular Music of the Olden Time," two volumes (Cramer, Beale and Co.). This work is, indeed, a monument of industry, usefulness and perspicuity; it is invaluable to those seriously studying English music, and its production will probably immortalise its industrious author. William Chappell was a devoted and incessant reader. Nothing came amiss to him. He gathered facts from monkish chartularies, old English chronicles, ancient books, old plays, collections of books formed by various noblemen, the libraries at London, Oxford, and Cambridge, the registers of the Stationers' Company, and even "Sternhold and Hopkins." He was always noting and gathering together substance. Like the bee, he diligently sipped from every flower, and laid in his hive a vast store of materials for future use. Not only was English literature down to Burney's and Hawkins's histories devoured and laid under contribution, but for his purpose he read many French, German, Dutch, and Italian works bearing on musical history. The net result is to be seen in the 825 pages which these valuable volumes contain. Space cannot be spared here adequately to describe them. Perhaps the best synopsis of this work is that which the title-page supplies: "Popular Music of the Olden Time; a Collection of Ancient Songs, Ballads, and Dance Tunes, illustrative of the National Music of England. With a Short Introduction to the various Reigns, and Notices of the Airs from Writers of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries. Also a Short Account of the Minstrels." In the masterly Introduction which prefaces the work Chappell derides and shows the falsity of the assertion that "the English have no national music." As he says, "It is extraordinary that such a report should have obtained credence, for England may safely challenge any nation not only to produce as much, but also to give the same satisfactory proofs of antiquity." As a better statement of foreign opinion he aptly quotes the Latin proverb current in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries: "Galli cantant, Angli jubilant, Hispani plangunt, Germani ululant, Itali caprizant"; which may be rendered: The French sing, the English carol (rejoice or sing merrily), the Spaniards wail, the Germans howl, the Italians caper (i.e., do not hold their notes, but are as unsteady as a goat, caper). Chappell's criticism on the writings of Burney and Hawkins, and his exposure of their blunderings and lazy copying of the errors of others is of value to the student. As a proof of the demand there once existed abroad for our native-made music, he tells us that collections of our airs and dance tunes were printed at Mannheim, Munich, in various towns in the Netherlands, and even as far north as Denmark. The various airs in these volumes were harmonised and fitted with an accompaniment by Sir G. A. Macfarren, and the task has been admirably done—in no case has the ancient flavour of the melody, tonality, and rhythm been destroyed; in listening to them, one feels quite transported into a past age, and we hear the accents of a bygone period. Many of the ballads first printed in these volumes have since been re-issued in a cheap form, and now again enjoy a fresh measure of popularity. Chappell was the first to examine carefully into the vexed question as to the authorship of our National Anthem, and the result of his investigation appears in this work. If he did not definitely bring its composition home to Carey, he at least showed that it was not Dr. John Bull's, and tore to pieces the theory that Richard Clark put forth to that effect. He boldly exposed this person's alteration of Bull's manuscript, charging him with forgery, and defying him to prove his case before a jury of experts. Shortly after the publication of this extensive work Mr. Chappell retired from active business, and henceforth devoted his whole time to his favourite pursuit. He was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and became a member of the old City Company of Musicians, the Camden, and other learned societies. In these he did active work, reading occasional papers and advising as to the societies' publications. He edited "The Roxburghe Ballads," "The Crown Garland of Golden Roses," "The Dancing Master"; supplied notes to D'Urfey's "Pills to purge Melancholy," and assisted in editing Bishop Percy's manuscript collection of "Ballads and Romances." In connection with his studies on the subject of ancient Greek music, he wrote a treatise, "On the use of the Greek Language, written Phonetically in the early Service Books of the Church of England." This speculative work occasioned a good deal of controversy among scholars, and Chappell's theories and his dealings with the pneumes did not meet with universal acceptance. In 1873 he assisted in founding "The Musical Association," and was a constant attendant at the meetings of the Society, speaking and taking part in the discussions. A remarkable paper he read in the Session 1877-8, "Music a Science of Numbers," showed that he had investigated the acoustic as well as the strictly historical side of the art. At this meeting he drew attention to an harmonium constructed with two keyboards, one giving the tempered, and the other the harmonic scale. The last work to which Chappell's name is attached is "The History of Music" (Art and Science), Vol. I., (Simpkin and Marshall). This volume displayed an immense deal of research and reading of the classics, and it was enriched with several engravings and illustrations of the ancient scales. The theory put forth as to the connection of Greek music with modern art met with considerable opposition, and a lengthy discussion took place in Concordia on account of the attack Chappell had made on Helmholtz's theories of vibrations and derived intervals. However, the book shows that its author possessed a large amount of knowledge over subjects ranging from the corruptions of the texts of the early Greek writers down to the latest discoveries in acoustics. The projected volumes on "Hebrew Music," to be edited by Dr. Ginsburg, and "Mediæval Music," by Dr. Rimbault, were never issued. Incessant writing caused Mr. Chappell to have that distressing malady known as "writers' palsy"; but, strange to say, after suffering from it for some years it left him, and he was able to write as of old. In his delightful country house at Weybridge he spent the latter part of his life, passing many pleasant hours in his well-stocked library, a student to the last. He was ever ready to advise and help those occupied in inquiries into the art he loved so well. The writer of this notice will not readily forget the encouragement and many marks of kindness William Chappell extended to him in common with others engaged in investigations into the history of English music.

T. L. SOUTHGATE.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to announce the death, on July 18, of Mrs. GABRIEL DAVIS, of Littlemore, Oxford, to the deep sorrow of a large circle of relatives and friends. She was well known as a composer and lyric author, and a gifted song and part-song writer. The funeral took place in Littlemore churchyard.

We record, with sincere regret, the death, on the 8th ult., at Berlin, of FRIEDRICH WILHELM JÄHNS, one of the oldest and most highly esteemed members of Berlin musical society, and an artist of sterling merit. Jähns was born in the Prussian capital on January 2, 1809, and was therefore in his eightieth year. Having received a thorough musical education, he established himself early in life in his native town as a teacher of singing, and in 1845 founded a vocal society, which he conducted until 1870, and which, under the name of "Jähnscher Gesangverein," attained a considerable reputation. In the same year, 1870, the title of professor was conferred upon him, in recognition of his merits, by the Prussian Government. Numerous compositions from his pen, both vocal and instrumental, testify to his refined artistic nature and musician-like workmanship. It is with the productions of another composer, however, that the name of Friedrich Wilhelm Jähns will be more imperishably associated—viz., Carl Maria von Weber. His analytical and critical catalogue of the entire works of that master, entitled "Carl Maria von Weber in seinen Werken," published in 1871, is a standard work, being at once an absolutely reliable authority upon the subject of which it treats, and a monument of loving, minute, and most painstaking research on the part of an enthusiastic specialist. A brief, but interesting sketch of the life of Weber we also owe to the same pen. During the last ten years of his life, the deceased musician was engaged upon collecting material for a supplementary volume to his above-named most important work, which, it is to be hoped, he has left in a sufficiently advanced state to render its publication possible. In his private character, to know the deceased musician was to love and esteem him for the singular amiability of his nature and the healthy idealism with which he viewed his art.

The death is announced of M. ISAAC STRAUSS, musician, on the 11th ult. Though born at Strasburg, in 1806, of Jewish parents, he early became known as a French composer and as the director of the Court balls under the Second Empire. He first appeared at Paris in 1827 with several Alsatian musicians, who acquired great popularity for their rendering of famous pieces of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, &c. Strauss subsequently produced light musical pieces, dances, &c., of his own, which were soon in great vogue in the salons and assemblies. For some time he occupied the post of first violin at the Théâtre Italien, and was then chosen chief of the orchestra and director of the grand musical fêtes. During the summer season, when the theatre was closed, M. Strauss conducted the balls and concerts given at Aix-les-Bains, in the Savoy. All through the Second Empire he was chief of the Court balls, and succeeded Musard in the direction of the masked balls given at the Grand Opéra. He was not related to the Strauss family of Vienna.

MR. WILLIAM FULLERTON died suddenly on the 25th ult. He was the only son of the well-known Judge Fullerton, of New York, and had resided in London for many years. He was the composer of the "Lady of the Locket," produced at the Empire Theatre. He had also completed another opera, "Waldemar."

We regret to chronicle the death of Mr. A. J. PHASEY, which took place at Chester on the 17th ult. He played the Ophicleide in the Coldstream Guards' band at the early age of fifteen, and it was while there that he took up the Saxhorn baritone of Courtois, remodelled and renamed it the Euphonium, an instrument now so popular in our military bands. In 1862 he entered the Crystal Palace orchestra, and played there until lately. Mr. Phasey was a skilful performer on all brass instruments, and has done much in helping to form and encourage brass wind bands.

MR. F. H. COWEN arrived in Melbourne on June 22, by the Royal Mail Steamship Austral, and the Orchestral Committee of the Centennial International Exhibition went on board the vessel to welcome him. A deputation from the musical profession, consisting of Herren J. Siede and Friedman, and Messrs. J. Herz, A. Plumptre, and J. P. Turner likewise came on board. Baron von Mueller, vice-president of the Melbourne Liedertafel; Mr. R. W. V. McCall, secretary; and Mr. Randell, librarian, also welcomed Mr. Cowen, and desired him to accept an honorary diploma of their society. Mr. Cowen thanked the representatives of the Melbourne Liedertafel for the honour conferred upon him. Mr. Herz, on behalf of the Metropolitan Liedertafel, invited Mr. Cowen to a banquet on Saturday, June 30. This was given in the supper room of the Town Hall. Judge Casey, C.M.G., president of the Liedertafel, occupied the chair, and Mr. H. Byron Moore and Mr. John McIlwraith were the vice-chairmen. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts having been given from the chair, Mr. Herz proposed the health of "Our Guest," and said he was very proud of the honour which that position conferred upon him. As musicians they had to congratulate themselves on the fact that for the first time in the history of the colony music, as an art, had been publicly acknowledged. Mr. Cowen was loudly cheered on rising to respond. He said he was sincerely and heartily grateful for the flattering terms in which the toast had been proposed, and for the manner in which it had been received by the company. It was no mere figure of speech when he said that he was very pleased to be in Melbourne. He felt very highly the honour which the Exhibition Commissioners had conferred upon him in appointing him to this very responsible post. It was a position in which he should do his utmost to carry out their wishes, and he only hoped that the public would be satisfied. On the 25th, he was welcomed to Melbourne by the Mayor (Alderman Benjamin) at his rooms in the Town Hall. There was a large gathering, principally of musical people, and at the Mayor's invitation they drank Mr. Cowen's health and to the success of the undertaking with which he is connected. Mr. Cowen briefly responded to the toast, and said that he was greatly touched with the attention already shown to him. The first rehearsal of the orchestra took place on July 2, in the rooms of the Turnverein Hall. On the following evening he conducted the rehearsal by the Choir of "Ruth" and "The Psalm of Thanksgiving." He was formally introduced to the Choir by Mr. W. Sargood, the Executive Vice-President, and was heartily welcomed. On all sides there appears to be a desire to strengthen his hands by all possible means. The Melbourne Argus, in speaking of the arrangements, says:—"The Commissioners had resolved on an innovation, so far as local exhibitions are concerned, in which we shall all rejoice by-and-by. It has been the custom for the most part to keep music in the grounds, but in this centennial year it is intended to give music the chief place within the palace. The central space, the place of honour in the permanent building, is given over to the musicians, and indoor concerts will be leading features of each day's show. It is a somewhat hazardous idea, involving difficulties which many men would have regarded as insurmountable. The place for the concerts had first to be made, then the musicians required bringing together, and those who know most of musicians will best appreciate the difficulty of this business. And lastly, a conductor had to be chosen of such status and fame that all local men should give him a hearty welcome and serve willingly under his bâton. It is very pleasant to be able to write, now that every difficulty has been overcome, that a fit and proper concert-hall will be ready by the opening day; that orchestra and chorus are formed and in training; and that the conductor of the Philharmonic Society of London is in Melbourne prepared to enter on his work. It is pleasant also to record that all our representative musicians have combined to welcome Mr. Cowen in cordial and musicianly fashion, that one chief function of the first day of his landing was to lead him unto that place where artists of all sorts chiefly congregate, and in a full room and with cordiality enough to imperil the ceiling, and scare the few belated passengers in the streets, to drink his health with three times three, and at least three times over."

THE terminal Concert of the students of the London Academy of Music, together with the presentation of medals and other awards of honour by Signor Bevnigani, took place on July 30, at St. George's Hall, in the presence of a large company. Previous to the presentation by Signor Bevnigani, who, as examiner for the numerous vocal competitions, had also most kindly consented to distribute the gold and silver medals, diplomas, and other awards of honour, Dr. Wylde, the Principal of the Academy, addressed the students. He described the progress of musical art from the days of classical lore and competitive effort in all the arts and sciences known to our ancestors as compared with the present time. He reminded the students of the honour conferred upon them by the presence and aid of so eminent a musician as Signor Bevnigani in presenting the awards, and concluded by observing that all the members of the Academy would be placed on the same footing—namely, be distinguished only by the special merits which had been displayed in their examination. At the Concert which followed, the excellent training of all the performers was sufficiently marked to render the task of detecting the best a somewhat difficult one. Amongst the vocalists, however, the palm was divided between Mdles. Dufour, Foxcroft, Blamy, Florence, Christy, Jenoure, Mrs. Warden, and Mr. Neale. Mrs. Gramshaw won marked tokens of approbation for her execution of a Pianoforte Fantasia by Liszt. Miss C. Fisher and the Misses Thorpe Melville were also complimented on their skill and taste as violinists.

The presentations by Signor Bevnigani excited much interest, and one of the most noteworthy features of the occasion was the closing speech by Dr. Wylde, who concluded by saying: "There may be few who, like Miss M. Macintyre, may graduate from this institute to become stars of the Royal Italian Opera, or who, like Miss Maggie Okey, now Madame de Pachmann, can take the highest rank in the profession. But though all cannot attain to public distinction, all may strive to merit it, some in the seclusion of the home, or as the stars of artistic and polished circles of society—some as the leaders of art in the realm of music in this and other lands. I would say to all, continue to study patiently and assiduously, cherish a modest appreciation of your own abilities, and a generous one of those of others."

THE following gentlemen obtained the diploma (F.C.O.) at the recent College of Organists Examinations:—H. P. Allen, Chichester; C. M. Bailey, Ripon; C. M. Bill, Swansea; D. Bradfield, St. John's Wood; E. H. Cole, Cardiff; E. A. Cottam, Peterborough; G. D. Dawson, Aberdeen; F. de G. English, B.A., Godalming; W. E. Fairclough, Montreal, Canada; F. A. Fisher, Cardiff; G. J. Hall, Beckenham; N. B. Hibbert, Peterborough; W. H. Maxfield, Bowdon; H. B. Osmond, Hackney; F. W. Raper, Barnard Castle; C. T. Reynolds, Oswestry; F. G. Shinn, Brixton; E. H. Smith, Westerham; F. H. Stokes, Kentish Town; and F. B. Wood, Wakefield. At the A.C.O. examination, of the unprecedented number examined, 120, making with the F.C.O. candidates a total of 183, the following candidates passed: J. H. E. Ashworth, Wandsworth Common; J. E. Blurton, Halesowen; W. H. Bown, Newton Abbott; Miss C. E. Burleigh, Brighton; A. Burnell, Weybridge; C. C. Byers, Croydon; S. C. Camp, Walton-at-Stone, Herts; J. H. Cronshaw, Darwen; J. K. A. Crouch, East Dulwich; C. H. Duffield, South Heigham; T. C. Edwards, London; W. Ellis, Durham; R. Evans, Speke; B. Fison, Hendon; W. G. Granger, Brompton; Miss A. H. Green, London; J. T. Glover, Stourport; S. P. Guttridge, Smethwick; F. H. Hallett, St. Leonard's-on-Sea; H. Ham, Ilminster; C. A. Harris, Middlesbrough; Miss F. C. Humberstone, Warminster; H. Hutchinson, Ashford, Kent; E. G. Ingrams, Croydon; E. Jagger, Wakefield; H. W. Jones, Closeburn; Miss A. E. Knee, Stroud; W. J. Kippis, Lewisham; E. Kiver, Lewisham; G. H. Maudsley, Lancaster; A. J. Neale, Brighton; E. Cuthbert Nunn, Lower Edmonton; S. J. Preston, London; E. Robins, Brockley; W. A. Sabin, Oxford; C. G. Sadler, Croydon; W. T. See, Cambridge; W. A. Soyer, Blackheath; J. D. Talbot, Batley, Yorkshire; J. Tait, Peebles, N.B.; H. S. Webster, Camden Town; J. Whitwain, Huddersfield; and W. T. Wright, Notting Hill.

THE Carl Rosa Opera Company commenced their autumn tour in Dublin on the 20th ult., at the Gaiety Theatre. The Irish Times, in commenting upon the performance of "Mignon," thus speaks:—"How time flies! one may well exclaim, recalling the fact that 'Mignon' was first performed in London by the Carl Rosa Company in January, 1880, eight years and a half ago. The cast then included Mr. Joseph Maas, Mr. Crotty, Miss Gaylord, and Madame (then Miss) Burns, who still fills the rôle of Filina. Since those days Thomas's fascinating work has had a career which has been eventful only in the stages which have marked its march into rank with the greatest of modern operas. Just at present 'Mignon' is as popular with the gallery as 'Maritana' or the 'Bohemian Girl.' There was on this occasion a really delightful performance of a work which, without being in any sense what is commonly called ambitious, requires, by reason of the delicacy and beauty of the sentiments it enshrines, a tender and sympathetic treatment. Miss Moody realised all the requirements of the part of the heroine, and her complete success flattered the judgment of those who had been so keenly taken with her first appearance. She has greatly gained in power as a vocalist as well as an actress; in fact, her playing throughout shows that she has profited by experience, and made a really remarkable advance. She received an enthusiastic welcome. Madame Burns, to use the old-fashioned phrase, 'brought down the house.' Her Filina is a faultless performance at every point—a matchless impersonation of the light-hearted woman of the world, whose character serves as so effectual a contrast to that of poor Mignon. Mr. Celli must be congratulated upon the favourable impression which he made as Lothario; Mr. John Child sang faultlessly and with much care throughout; Miss Dickerson sang and played admirably as Frederick; and Mr. Wilfred Esmond was immensely successful as Laertes. Mr. Goossens was the Conductor."

A FUND is being raised on behalf of the veteran poet Dr. Charles Mackay, under the auspices of an influential Committee of which Lord Tennyson is President. Dr. Mackay is now in his seventy-third year, broken in health, and reduced in circumstances, though still working cheerfully at his accustomed tasks. Many of his songs have become national, many of their mottoes are interwoven in the common speech. All who will can aid this most worthy movement to minister to the declining years of the man whose songs have been sung all over the globe, and whose last years should not be embittered by poverty and the memory of ingratitude. There are, doubtless, many who would gladly contribute to this fund now the matter is brought to their notice. Dr. Alexander, of Holly Lodge, Upper Parkfields, Putney, S.W., is the Hon. Sec., and to him communications may be sent.

THE last of the Smoking Concerts at the Meistersingers' Club was given on the 2nd ult. Captain Lloyd Harries delighted the audience with his violin playing, songs were efficiently rendered by Mr. H. Ward, Mr. Aspinall, and Mr. Ley, and Mr. Charles Fry gave a short humorous recitation. The chief feature of the evening, however, was the singing of the Lotus Club from Boston. The party comprised Messrs. Devoll, Long, Lewis, and Davis, with Mr. Smith as accompanist; and their admirable part-singing gave unbounded satisfaction to the somewhat scanty audience. The musical arrangements were under the direction of Mr. A. J. Caldicott, to whose energy and ability the success of these Concerts is mainly due.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. will issue shortly a translation of Moritz Hauptmann's "Nature of Harmony and Metre." The work—which holds the first place among its kind on the Continent—consists of three parts, Harmony, Metre, and Harmony and Metre combined. The first part considers the evolution of Harmony from acoustics, taking as basis the Hegelian theory of sound. In the second part, the author discusses metre and rhythm, which are respectively analogous to harmony and melody. The last part of the book is concerned with the union of metre and harmony, that is, harmony and melody in concrete combination with metre and rhythm.

THE members of the St. George's Glee Union gave their 234th consecutive monthly Concert in the Pinlico Rooms on the 3rd ult. Madame Berta Foresta, Miss Ida Grey, Miss Annie Dwyelle, Mr. Arthur Thomas, Mr. H. Rednall, and Mr. Charles Ackerman were the soloists. Although this Concert fell in the holiday time of the year the choir was large, and sang with excellent effect some part-songs by Hatton, Henry Smart, T. Ravenscroft, Callcott, and Bishop. Mrs. Fredericks played the pianoforte solo "Tarantelle" (Liszt), and Mrs. Edmonds and Mr. F. R. Kinke were the accompanists. Mr. Monday was the Conductor.

THE Literary and Artistic International Association will hold a Congress at Venice on the 15th inst. The matters to be discussed include the new American Copyright Bill, the Copyright Convocation at Berne, the rights and duties of authors and publishers, the question of expression and pace in music, and other propositions. A series of fêtes and excursions have been organised, and there is no doubt that the meeting will be pleasant for those who attend from the various countries. It is hoped that the deliberations of the many eminent men who are expected to take part in the business will be productive of results for the general good.

THE Academical Board of Trinity College, London, has awarded the following Exhibitions and Prizes, after competition:—The Benedict Pianoforte Exhibition to Maud Cater, the Sims Reeves Vocal Exhibition to Florence A.

Veray, the College Organ Exhibition to James Shawford, the College Violin Exhibition to Herbert Goom, the Gabriel Prize to William Packham, and the National Practical Prize to Mary Boothroyd (Bedford Centre).

MR. H. W. WESTON, F.C.O., gave a Recital at St. Barnabas, Kentish Town, N.W., on the 25th ult., when the programme contained Merkel's Sixth Sonata, Bach's Toccata in F, Handel's Fifth Organ Concerto, together with an Overture by Kalliwoda, and other items by Mendelssohn and Dr. Rea. Mr. E. D. Smith was the vocalist, and gave two songs by Handel and Bordesi.

MR. HARRY E. WARNER, Organist of the Parish Church, Kew, was presented by his pupils last month with a dozen silver dessert knives and forks, with a monogram on each piece, also a massive embossed brass salver and two goblets to match, "as a token of their high esteem and regard." The presentation was accompanied by an illuminated address signed by over fifty of his pupils.

MR. EADE MONTEFIORE gave a Matinée Musicale at 23, Onslow Square, on July 31, by kind permission of Mrs. R. C. Hildyard, when he was assisted by Madame la Comtesse de Brémont, Miss Jeanie Mills (by permission of Mr. Carl Rosa), Miss Kate Davies, Mr. Harper Kearton, Mr. Charles Ackerman, Mr. F. H. Cozens, Mr. Frank Gillmore, and Mr. de Manby Sergison.

We have much pleasure in calling attention to an admirable portrait of Mr. H. Weist Hill, the Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, which has been issued by Messrs. Beynon and Co., Fine Art publishers of Cheltenham. It is taken from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company, and lithographed in the most artistic style. The likeness is most faithful.

THE Highbury Choral Society will give a series of five Concerts during the coming season, under the Conductorship of Mr. Betjemann, at the Highbury Athenæum, commencing on November 26. The chief works contemplated for performance are Rossini's "Moses in Egypt," Mendelssohn's "Loreley," Macfarren's "May Day," Berlioz's "Faust," and Dudley Buck's Cantata "The Light of Asia."

MR. F. A. BRIDGE gave his new musical lecture "Dibdin: His Life and Songs," at the Birkbeck Literary and Scientific Institution on the 15th ult. The vocal illustrations comprised many of Dibdin's popular songs and a number of unfamiliar Lyrics dating from 1762 to 1811. The Lecture was very successful. Miss Louisa Pyne was the accompanist.

AT the ballot for seats of the Birmingham Musical Festival, which took place on the 23rd and 24th ult., the result compared very unfavourably with the last Festival. The total number of seats allotted was 6,412, as compared with 7,763 in 1885, a decrease of 1,351.

REVIEWS.

Eight National Melodies. Arranged for Violin and Pianoforte by Siegfried Jacoby. Albums for Violin and Pianoforte, No. 13. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The eight melodies selected are "Home, sweet Home," "Come, lasses and lads," and "Rule, Britannia," representing English productions; "Charlie is my darling" and "There is no luck," Scotch; "Garry Owen" and "Farewell," Irish; and "Jenny Jones," Welsh. It is not, however, so much the selection as the treatment of the melodies which will command attention. There are no variations or gymnastic twistings of the poor tunes out of shape and beyond recognition, but the melodies are made particularly interesting by means of ingenious modulations, whereby the characteristic quality and phrasing of the air and its rhythmical figure are maintained through temporary changes of key, without undue straining after results. These impart an element of novelty into the arrangement which will be invaluable for students, inasmuch as the attention is kept from wandering, and fixed upon the work to be done, for the sequence cannot be guessed. Moreover, the educational advantage is manifest in the fact that all the pieces are in the "first position" for the violin, and lie directly under the hand without shifting. The pianoforte part is no less easy, while the unity of the two musical forces brings an effect which is pleasing and satisfactory. A few more works constructed on the like principles would bring a considerable amount of improvement in the art of teaching in their train.

Twelve Voluntaries for the Organ. By Samuel Wesley. Adapted to the modern organ by W. J. Westbrook. [Weekes and Co.]

THE elder Samuel Wesley lived during the darkest period of our church musical history, and the torch of his genius shone brilliantly amid the surrounding gloom. It is scarcely creditable that so little of his music should be known at the present day, and Dr. Westbrook deserves thanks for having rescued some of his organ works from oblivion. In the days of Wesley organs in this country were far behind those of Germany in wealth of resource, and the full pedal compass was quite unknown. Consequently the present works were written in accordance with the prevailing custom, on two staves only, and for organs of the G or F compass. Dr. Westbrook has accomplished his somewhat difficult task with much tact, making no more alteration than was absolutely necessary. As to the abstract merit of the so-called "Voluntaries" there cannot be two opinions. Each piece is virtually a sonata, or at any rate a fantasia, in several movements, all distinguished by Handelian breadth of style and melodic grace, though the fugal writing bears also the impress of Bach, for whom Wesley entertained such profound veneration. Organists will be delighted to make acquaintance with these masterly works.

Jesu's Psalter. By the Rev. Samuel Heydon Sole. [Burns and Oates.]

THE preface to this work contains a learned and most interesting account of the authorship and of the various editions of this ancient English book now some three hundred years old. The book comprises a reprint of the MS. of 1571, and of the printed version of 1583, and a modern version. The opening words of each contain an explanation of the peculiar title. Taking the text of the earlier work we find "It is to be understand that there be iij. manners of psalters. The first ys called Davyd psalter which conteynit the thries L psalmes. The second is called the psalter of our Ladye conteyninge thries L aves. The third is called the psalter of Jesu or the invocation of Jesu conteyninge xv principall petycions, which x times repetyd make also thries fifty." The modern version is the original divested of its antique garb. A few words have been changed to accommodate the text to sensitive ears. The traditional method of chanting the several petitions is added to the book, first in the old square notation unaccompanied, and at the end with several portions intended for responses, harmonised for voices or the organ. It is an interesting and reverent work.

Seven Pianoforte Pieces. By Henselt. Edited by W. de Pachmann. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MORE than one of these elegant pieces have been made popular chiefly through the interpretations given at various Concerts by the well-known pianist whose name appears as Editor. Two numbers have been selected from the Opus 2 of the Composer—namely, No. 6, having for motto "Si oiseau j'étais, à toi je volerais," and No. 11, "Dors tu, ma vie." From Opus 3, we have the "Poème d'Amour," a charming piece of expressive music in B major; from Opus 5, the tenth study "Eutschwundenes Glück," a piece in which delicate and accurate playing with the left hand is a desideratum. The "Toccata" (Op. 25), the Quatrième Impromptu (Op. 37), and the "Wiegenlied" (Op. 45), complete the selection. There is happily no need to expatiate upon the beauty of the music, its value has been already long assessed in the minds of musicians. All that is now necessary is to call attention to the work done by the editor. This is, as might be expected, skilful and artistic. The passages have been carefully fingered so that the phrasing is clear and intelligible. The pages are beautifully printed, and the whole edition is most valuable and will doubtless prove acceptable.

The Musical Year-Book of the United States. By G. H. Wilson. Fifth Volume, 1887-8. [Boston, Mass.: Alfred Mudge and Son.]

MR. G. H. WILSON, the musical critic of the Boston Evening Traveller, in this admirable little work gives a record of the chief musical events in the principal cities of the United States. It is evidently compiled with much care, patience, and judgment, and it is so well arranged as to be easy for reference. It is a record without criticism, and it gives a list of American compositions and their first performances, which make it not only valuable for present but for future reference. There is an excellent retrospect of the past season, in which mention is made of the great activity of American composers. "No year in the musical history of the United States has been as prolific of good composition, or more encouraging to those who seek substance and worth in results than that which this book celebrates." All who wish well to art will share the congratulations of the compiler of the "Year-Book," and wish him health, courage, and good material to continue his work in a like strain for many years to come.

Shelley Album. Nine Songs, with Music by J. Cliffe Forrester. [Charles Woolhouse.]

IT is a healthy sign to find song composers diving into the treasures of English poetry instead of being content with doggerel "words for music." At the same time, great care has to be exercised in selection; verses may be exquisite as poetry, but quite unsuitable for musical treatment. Mr. Forrester deserves much credit for his judgment in this respect, and still more for his extremely artistic settings. The songs are infinitely superior to ordinary ballads, and indeed are modelled on the best German Lieder, with which the composer is evidently familiar. The only defect is an occasional strong accent on an unimportant syllable for the sake of musical effect. This error should be avoided by the composer in future. It should be added that the songs are written for tenor voice, but some of them will also suit soprano.

Compositions for the Organ. By Edmund T. Chipp. [Weekes and Co.]

THE late Organist of Ely Cathedral was one of a numerous band of prolific but unostentatious labourers in the field of composition whose works rarely travel far beyond their own immediate circles. There is a spontaneity and freedom from any sense of labour in Dr. Chipp's music which makes it agreeable, though it may not be original in the strictest sense of the term. In this volume of organ compositions are fourteen pieces in various styles. It is edited by Dr. G. M. Garrett and Mr. J. Higgs, who state that "they believe that the intrinsic merit of these works, and the mastery they show over so many forms of composition, will make them welcome to all who can appreciate true organ music, solid in style, and legitimate in effect." With these remarks we cordially agree.

Twelve Songs. By Robert Schumann (Op. 35). [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

A NEW, elegant, and cheap edition of Schumann's setting of Twelve Songs by Justinus Kerner has been added to the list of publications of the house. They are well known to admirers of Schumann by their German titles—(1) "Lust der Sturmnacht," (2) "Stirb, Lieb' und freud'!" (3) "Wanderlust," (4) "Erstes Grün," (5) "Sehn-sucht nach der Waldgegend," (6) "Auf das Trinkglas eines verstorbenen Freundes," (7) "Wanderung," (8) "Stille Liebe," (9) "Frage," (10) "Stille Thränen," (11) "Wer machte Dich so krank?" (12) "Alte Laute." The English translation for this edition has been made by Lady Macfarren, with her customary skill. The engraving, the printing, and the price are all that could tend to make the issue popular.

Te Deum Laudamus in D. By Richard King. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE composer of this Te Deum has rushed into print somewhat hastily. Had he submitted his setting to any competent musician, he would probably have paused. It is a very crude piece of work, chiefly remarkable for arbitrary transitions of key at frequent intervals, equally numerous changes of time, and curious treatment of fundamental discords. The homogeneity required in either a simple or an elaborate setting of the grand Ambrosian hymn is here conspicuous by its absence. For the composer's encouragement we may say that an idea here and there suggests natural ability, and he should pursue his studies without expectation of immediate reward.

Selection of Hymns and Anthems. By Eliza Flower.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is part of a complete collection of the musical compositions of one who did good service in promoting a love for music among the people in years gone by. They have all been issued in one form or another beforetime. They consist of forty-seven compositions, the words having been selected from the Scriptures and from the works of poets of many opinions. They are arranged in five sections—(1) Adoration, (2) Aspiration, (3) Belief, (4) Heaven upon Earth, and (5) Life in Death. They were written for congregational use, and are adapted also for the private circle.

Six Melodic Studies for Pianoforte. By J. A. de Orellana.
[Charles Woolhouse.]

THE pianoforte student will find considerable value in these studies as dealing with melodic thoughts in a manner uncommon but not undesirable. The technical ability required in the performance of the pieces is a little more than beginners possess, but their difficulties are well worth the trouble of conquering. It is impossible to conceal the fact that the composer has a leaning towards the modern style of writing for the pianoforte, but he does not forget the claims of melody, and he places his thoughts before the reader in a clever and pleasing way.

Behold, I shew you a mystery; Blessed are the merciful.
Anthems. By George Rayleigh Vicars.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE composer of these anthems is evidently a musician who thinks for himself. The first-named is extremely unconventional, and some might deem it trivial, but this impression could only be derived from the ballad-like accompaniment. There are some curious and clever effects, notably one where a figure announced first in E is repeated in F, F sharp, and G. The other anthem is shorter, less pretentious, and, on the whole, likely to meet with larger acceptance. The closing bars are charming.

The Armada. Lord Macaulay's poem, set to music by the Rev. D. J. J. Barnard, LL.D. [Hull: T. A. Haigh.]

LORD MACAULAY'S unfinished poem on the Armada appeals with particular power at the present time—the tercentenary of the event to which it refers. It is well known as a reciting piece, and this musical setting may find favour with those who desire to perform a work inspired no doubt by Stanford's setting of "The Revenge." The music, which is not difficult, or indicative of original power on the part of the composer, is interesting, and would doubtless be effective when well performed.

Thème et Variations. For Pianoforte. Composed by Margaret de Pachmann. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IN a notice of the Concert given by Madame Pachmann last February, which appeared in our March number, a short reference was made to this charming piece of pianoforte music. The theme is simple, and the variations, eight in number, are carried out in a style which is at once indicative of the correct taste and the musicianship of the composer. It is a sterling, though unpretentious work, and may be recommended as an excellent addition to the répertoire for the pianoforte.

The Borderers' Song. For a baritone voice. By Charles H. Lloyd. [Joseph Williams.]

THIS is a fine, stirring song, which could be made very effective by a spirited singer with a good cheery voice. The words, relating to the beginning of a border exploit, are peculiar in sentiment, but as the patriotic feelings are somewhat archaic, neither Scotsmen nor Englishmen are likely to be greatly roused by them, and as songs of the kind are rarely sung now for political purposes, this may gain, as it certainly deserves, a welcome for its musical treatment.

Three Two-part Songs for Female Voices. By Herbert F. Sharpe. [Charles Woolhouse.]

THE titles of these compositions almost indicate their musical character, "The Crocus," "I'll row thee o'er the lea rig" (words by Burns), and "Morning Song." They are each and all very cleverly and thoughtfully treated, the voice parts are good, the accompaniments excellent. The reproduction of the Scottish style of melody in the second song of the group will commend itself greatly to those who appreciate local colouring in musical works, be this great or small.

Ladies versus Gentlemen. Part-song. By A. W. Marchant. [Morley and Co.]

THIS is No. 29 of the Part-song Journal, edited by A. J. Caldicott. It is a combination of contrasted sentiments. The upper voices (ladies) declaring that "men were deceivers ever," and the lower (gentlemen) stating that "he who trusts in ladies fair, builds a castle in the air." These are trite opinions, but they are cleverly expressed in music which would produce due effect when carefully prepared and performed in a manner congenial to the words.

A Concise History of Music. By the Rev. H. G. Bonavia Hunt. [Deighton, Bell and Co.]

THIS is the ninth edition of a work which has been well supported by the public. Many of the errors in the former editions have been set right, but there are some corrections still to be made. For instance, each time the name of Bishop is given his dates are put down as 1782-1855. He was born in 1786. It is to be regretted, moreover, that the plan adopted by the compiler did not admit of a little more elegance of style or clearness in stating facts.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in E flat. By John E. West.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D. By W. T. Kirkwood Taylor. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MR. WEST'S setting is for male voices only, and is likely to be received with favour not only on account of its musicianly qualities but its general effectiveness. That of Mr. Taylor is for mixed voices in plain four-part harmony, and is written with studied simplicity. Though colourless, it is on the whole fairly pleasing.

Original Compositions for the Organ, No. 102, Postlude in C Minor. By Dr. C. S. Heap. [Novello, Ewer & Co.]

THE composer has exhibited modesty in giving this piece the title merely of a Postlude. It is really a symphonic movement of ample proportions and worked out with masterly skill. The general style is somewhat agitated and restless, and there is plenty of work for the pedals. Recital-givers will find Dr. Heap's piece well worth their attention.

O may I join the choir invisible. Part-song. By J. More Smieton. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

GEORGE ELIOT'S serious lines are here set to appropriate music in the church style, and the organ accompaniment increases the resemblance of the piece to an anthem. Beside the main body of voices, a small choir is required placed out of sight of the audience. The effect of this, we should think, would be charming. The part-song is dedicated to the Dundee Glee Choir.

The Bride's March, from "Rebekah." By J. Barnby. Arranged for the organ by James Shaw. [Novello, Ewer & Co.]

Few words are necessary to commend this bright and engaging piece to the notice of organists. It is one of the most tuneful numbers in Mr. Barnby's popular Cantata, and it lends itself well to organ treatment. Mr. Shaw has fulfilled his task with care and judgment.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, set to music in the key of E flat. By R. Machill Garth. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THERE are many effective points in this service, though the composer has been a little exacting in his demands upon the powers of his singers. The extent of the compass would limit its acceptance by some choirs, but those who could perform it would probably be pleased with the opportunities it gives for hearty singing.

The Office of the Holy Communion in E. By Walter Porter. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS setting includes the Benedictus and the Agnus Dei, but the music is strictly Anglican in character, and inclines more to the sober style of a past age than the ornate manner affected by many composers of the present day. Those who like a quiet, eminently church-like service, will be satisfied with this example.

Berçeuse for Violin, with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Composed by J. Jacques Haakman. [Charles Woolhouse.]

THE pattern selected by the composer in this piece has been frequently resorted to by composers with more or less success. The present work is pretty and effective, with a very simple accompaniment, and will be found useful as a study and as a short solo work for Concert use.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in E flat. By F. J. W. Crowe. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WE can speak very favourably of this evening service. Its extremely unpretentious character—the voice parts being mainly in unison—brings it within the means of the most modest choir, and the vein of elegant, refined melody which pervades it is another important feature in its favour.

The Story of the Ascension. Words by Rev. A. C. Lowth; Music by Charles W. Pearce. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

HERE we have a series of hymns in the same metre as the same writer's popular "Story of the Cross." Dr. Pearce's tunes are remarkably pleasing, being characterised by an unusual degree of freshness in the melodies.

Te Deum Laudamus in G. By George Lees. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

PARISH choirs will find no difficulty beyond an occasional chromatic passage in this Te Deum. It is bright and vigorous, but at the same time distinguished by church-like dignity throughout.

A Farewell. Four-part Song. By Ricardo Mählig. Orpheus (New Series), No. 211. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THERE is a capital swing in the rhythm of this part-song for male voices, which will greatly help its popularity. It is equally well adapted for performance by single as by a multiplied number of voices.

Teach me Thy way, O Lord. Anthem. By W. H. Wilson. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS little anthem has a part for violin, but it is not an obbligato, and the effect is not seriously damaged by its omission. This is fortunate, for the anthem is a little gem, certain to please wherever it is introduced.

Bon Voyage. Impromptu for Clarinet and Pianoforte. By Charles Harford Lloyd. [Eyre and Spottiswoode.]

WE have much pleasure in calling attention to this clever little piece from the pen of a competent and conscientious musician.

FOREIGN NOTES.

WHILE the Bayreuth Festspiele were in progress, two impressive ceremonies took place at Bayreuth in honour of the memory of the founder of these unique artistic gatherings, and of that other man of genius who, more effectually than any one else, had helped to make their institution possible. At the instigation of the German Emperor (himself an ardent admirer of Wagnerian art) the music corps of a regiment of guards, previous to their return to Potsdam from Munich, proceeded, on July 27, to Bayreuth, to render musical homage to Richard Wagner at his grave in the park adjoining the villa "Wahnfried," and in the presence of a numerous concourse of spectators. A few days later, on July 31, the anniversary of the death of Franz Liszt, a commemorative service was held at the Catholic church at Bayreuth, which was thronged, the musical portion of the ceremony being chiefly provided from compositions by the great pianist-composer to whose memory a just tribute was thus paid.

According to a resolution recently passed at a meeting of representatives of the Allgemeine Richard Wagner Verein, held at Bayreuth, the Central Administration of the Society is to be transferred from Munich to the German capital.

The performance of Wagner's "Nibelungen" Tetralogy was announced to take place at the Dresden Hof-Theater between the days of the 21st to the 27th ult.

The pianoforte score of Wagner's early opera, "Die Feen," has just been published by the firm of Heckel at Mannheim.

The Imperial opera of Vienna re-opened its doors on the 1st ult. with a performance of Verdi's "Aida."

The first performance last month, at Prague, of Weber's posthumous comic opera "Die drei Pintos," as completed by Herr Mahler, has been entirely successful, the interesting work being received throughout with enthusiasm, Herr Mahler conducting. Weber was Capellmeister at Prague, where he re-organised the German opera, previous to his assuming his more important position at the Dresden Hof-Theater in 1817.

The musical performances in connection with the unveiling, last month, of the Victory Monument, at Leipzig, included Weber's "Jubel" Overture, and the first act of Wagner's "Lohengrin," given at the Stadt-Theater, the festive proceedings concluding with an effective representation of Schiller's evergreen historical picture, known as "Wallenstein's Lager."

A three days' music Festival was held at Salzburg, from July 24-26 last, the programme, however, affording no special feature of interest.

Among the more important operatic novelties by French composers now awaiting the acceptance of the directors of the Grand Opéra may be mentioned M. Camille Saint-Saëns's "Benvenuto Cellini" (privately rehearsed recently before a circle of connoisseurs, and enthusiastically received); M. Benjamin Godard's "Dante," an elaborate work founded upon episodes taken from the "Divina Commedia" of the great Italian poet; and M. Emanuel Chabrier's three-act music-drama, the libretto whereof (by MM. Mendé and Mikael) is based upon Goethe's poem of "The Bride of Corinth."

An address, signed by MM. Gounod, Ambroise Thomas, Saint-Saëns, Massenet, Reyer, and Delibes, has been presented to the French Minister of Fine Arts, requesting him to promote the performance, in the French capital, of Glinka's operatic masterpiece "The Life for the Czar," as "a tribute of international and artistic sympathy" to the popular Russian composer.

A scenic representation of M. Félicien David's Ode-symphonie "Le Désert" is contemplated at Paris during the coming season. Even some of the animals at the Jardin d'Acclimation are to be requisitioned for the purpose of imparting the semblance of reality to the stage picture.

The operatic performances at the Théâtre de la Monnaie of Brussels are announced to be resumed to-day. Wagnerian works will, it is said, form the leading feature of the new season, "Die Walküre" and "Siegfried," "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" being mentioned as likely to obtain a hearing.

A new operetta, "La Mandragola," composed by Signor Achille Graffigna, has been successfully brought out lately at the Theatre Alfieri of Turin.

Signor Sonzogno, the Italian music publisher, announces his intention to award two prizes of 3,000 and 2,000 francs respectively for one-act operas, the successful works to be produced in the autumn of next year at the Costanzi Theatre of Rome, but retaining the property of the composers. A further award of 1,000 francs is to be made to the author of the best libretto.

A correspondent draws our attention to the excellent performances, chiefly of classical music, now being given in connection with the Bologna Exhibition, as well as to the judicious selection made in the respective programmes, in which, besides the names of Italian masters, both old and modern, those of Purcell and Handel, Bach and Beethoven, Berlioz and Wagner, are to be repeatedly met with. The Concerts are conducted with much skill and ability by the Maestro Giuseppe Martucci.

The International Copyright Treaty as regards musical authorship has just been extended also to the Empire of Japan.

An interesting addition to the Mendelssohn literature has just been published by the firm of Duncker and Humblot, of Leipzig, entitled "Ferdinand David und die Familie Mendelssohn-Bartholdy." The author is Herr Julius Eckardt.

The first number of a new music journal, the Centralblatt für Musik, has just been issued by the firm of August Hettler, of Leipzig. We cannot do better than wish our new German contemporary a longer period of existence than that vouchsafed to its predecessor of a similar title—viz., the Musikalisches Centralblatt, published at Leipzig some years since.

A commemorative tablet is to be placed against the house "Zum Kleeblatt," at Marienbad, where in the year 1844, Richard Wagner occupied a room for some weeks, during his Dresden Capellmeistership.

The announcement having made the round of Continental papers (and also found its way into these columns last month) of the death of Herr Levi, of Munich, we are glad to gather from a humorous letter addressed by Herr Levi to a friend, and dated "from Elysium," that the eminent Wagner conductor has not only quite recovered from his recent illness, but is evidently in the best of spirits.

A musician of great merit, though chiefly on account of his retiring nature, scarcely appreciated in his native country—Wilhelm Mickler—died recently at Milwaukee, U.S., where, during the last fifteen years, he had been the much-esteemed Conductor of the Palestrina Society, and of one or two other local institutions. Mickler was born in 1826, at Darmstadt, where he studied under Rinck, the celebrated organist, and subsequently occupied the post of Capellmeister, both at his native town, at the University of Giessen, and other German towns, previous to his taking up his residence in America. Among his compositions, those for the Church are the most valuable, being conceived in the spirit of the old Italian masters, of whose works he was one of the most able exponents.

Albert Parlow, the able and energetic Conductor and reformer of military bands in the Prussian service, well-known to visitors of Creuznach, where he conducted the summer Concerts for a series of years, died at Wiesbaden at the age of sixty-six.

Edmund Neupert, a pianist of considerable attainments, and founder of a musical academy at New York, died at the latter place on June 22, aged forty-six. He was a native of Christiania.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

H. D. (MANCHESTER).—Consult the Dictionary of Musical Terms, by Stainer and Barrett.

R. W. S. (WEDNESBURY).—There are many musical papers published in America, all excellent in their way. There are none conducted on exactly the same plan as THE MUSICAL TIMES.

VICARIUS.—James was organist of Ely Cathedral. Few of his compositions, except the "Harmonised Confession," are known. He was succeeded as organist at Ely by the late Dr. Chipp.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ALFRETON, DERBYSHIRE.—An Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church on the 21st ult. by Miss McKnight, F.C.O., Organist and trainer of the Choir. The programme included Lemmens's Fanfare, Andante (Schubert), Variations on a Ground Bass (Handel), Bell Rondo (Morandi), Concerto (Handel), "With verdure clad" (Haydn), "Wait her, angels" (Handel), "Love divine" (Stainer), "Angels ever bright and fair" (Handel), "Thou visitest the earth" (Calkin). The vocalists were Miss Maggie Jaques, a promising young soprano, and members of the choir.

BRAMLEY VICARAGE, GUILDFORD.—A fine performance of Beethoven's Septet was given on the 16th ult. in the grounds of the Vicarage, when a large number of Mrs. and Canon Coulson's friends much enjoyed this unique performance. The following well-known artists took part in the Septet: Mr. Sutton (first violin), Mr. Donkin (viola), Mr. A. Blagrove (violinello), Mr. Ward (double-bass), Mr. Wootton (bassoon), &c.

BRIGHTON.—The band on the Brighton West Pier is one from which the townspeople and visitors may derive much pleasure. Herr Grönings, the Conductor, has this season changed the disposition of his band, which now includes nineteen performers. The wood and brass instruments are admirably distributed, and the brass, although complete, does not overweigh the wood-wind. As a rule each programme at the daily performances includes a good overture, two long selections, a classical piece, such as Wagner's "Walküre" or "Parsifal," and a charming variety of livelier pieces; so that satisfaction may alike be given to the musical student and the general public. Herr Grönings has accomplished wonders with his band this season, marked attention being paid to light and shade, while the ensembles are characterised by artistic excellence.

DENBIGH.—On Saturday evening, the 11th ult., Dr. Spark, F.C.O. Organist of the Town Hall, Leeds, gave a Recital on the organ at St. Mary's Church. The programme was rendered with executive power and fine taste. A slight departure from the text of the last piece on the programme was made to introduce the grand old Welsh dirge of "Morfa Ruddlan," which was rendered with due appreciation of its musical character.

DURHAM.—A great Festival of choirs, embracing the dioceses of Durham, York, Ripon, and Newcastle, was held on Tuesday, July 31, in Durham Cathedral. Close upon 2,000 voices took part in the ceremony. The vast edifice, which was thrown open in every part, was crowded, there being a larger congregation than even when the present bishop was enthroned. The visit of a large number of the colonial bishops, who have been in attendance at the Lambeth Conference, greatly enhanced the interest taken in the services. There were fifty-eight visiting bishops present, and the services began with that of the Lay Helpers' Association, the preacher being the Bishop of Western New York, Dr. Cleveland Cox, who referred to the Lambeth Conference, and expressed the utmost confidence that great good would be the outcome of it. The festival service, which was conducted by Dr. Armes, was exceptionally well rendered. The Psalms for the day were sung to chants especially composed by Dr. Naylor, organist, York Minster, and Dr. Crowe, organist, Ripon Cathedral. The whole service was most successful, and concluded by the vast congregation singing the Old Hundredth Psalm. A special Convocation of the University was held in the Cathedral library after the services, when the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon the bishops of Guiana, Fredericton, Rupertsland, Cape Town, Barbadoes, Calcutta, Sydney, Minnesota, New York, Sierra Leone, and the Niger District. The bishops were presented by Canon Farrar. The visitors subsequently dined in the Castle Hall, the Bishop of Durham presiding.

HERNE BAY.—An Organ Recital of pieces by Handel, Dubois, Smart, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Salomé was given at the Parish Church by Mr. E. A. Crutenden, Organist, on the 17th ult.

LEEDS.—The Organ Recitals by Dr. Spark, the borough organist, were brought to a close for the season on Saturday evening, July 28. Pieces by Bach, Mendelssohn, Smart, Beethoven, Ambroise Thomas, and Haydn were given, together with the organist's well-known "Jubilee Fantasia on National Airs," which appropriately closes with "God save the Queen." During the past term the Recitals have been regularly attended by a larger number of persons than heretofore—showing their advance in popularity and their value in musically educating the teeming population of Leeds.

MARGATE.—On Monday evening, the 20th ult., a small but very appreciative audience welcomed the opening of Mr. Horace Cadogan's Concert tour at the Foresters' Hall. The programme included songs by Lassen, David, Tosti, M. Carmichael, &c., admirably rendered by Miss Agnes Larkcom and Mr. George Aspinall; violin pieces by Master Felix Barowski, and some admirable recitations by Mr. Mark Ambient, the well-known Cambridge elocutionist and dramatic author. The Concert-giver set himself a heavy task in pianoforte music by Handel, Mendelssohn, Liszt, Chopin, and Cadogan, gaining much applause by its successful issue.

SCILLY ISLANDS.—Mr. H. C. Tonking gave an Organ Recital at St. Mary's Church, on Sunday, the 19th ult. Mr. Battishill was the vocalist. The organ is by Willis, of London.

SOUTHWELL.—The annual Festival of the day and Sunday scholars was held on the 9th ult. It commenced with a service in the Cathedral, where upwards of 300 children, led by the Southwell Brass Band, under the leadership of Mr. Mounteney, arrived at 2 p.m. Mr. R. W. Liddle, Organist of the Cathedral, arranged the musical part of the service, and augmented the usual choir with the Sunday evening voluntary members and a portion of the brass band with tympani. The additional instrumental help had a fine effect, and with the children's voices produced a good volume of tone, well in tune. Mr. Liddle presided at the organ during the service, Mr. Stanley taking his place whilst conducting the instrumental portions. The Rev. Canon Trebeck read the lessons, the service was intoned by the Rev. R. F. Smith, Minor Canon, and the sermon, a short and interesting discourse, was preached by the Rev. R. A. McKee, vicar of Farnsfield. Tea and amusements followed.

SYDNEY.—The Orpheus Club, which completed the first year of its existence in August, gives a Concert the first Wednesday in each month, eight in the year being Smoking Concerts and four to which ladies are admitted. Nearly seven years ago Sydney was visited by the Mendelssohn Quintet from America, since then the Zerbini quartet party from Melbourne has been here twice, and a few performances by resident musicians have been given, so the regular and good performances now heard are very acceptable. The objects of the club—namely, the encouragement of art and artists, have been faithfully carried out, and the following list of compositions from the master works of the greatest ancient and modern composers have been given, many of which, but for the efforts of the Orpheus Club, would have remained hidden treasures to the Sydney public:—Quintets—Mozart's Clarinet Quintet and Schumann's Op. 44, in E flat. Quartets—Beethoven's A major, Beethoven's C minor, Caron in A minor, and Weber's Op. 8. Trios—Beethoven's Op. 11, in B flat; Beethoven's Op. 97, in B flat; Beethoven's Op. 8 (Serenade), Mendelssohn's C minor, Mendelssohn's D minor, and Saint Saëns's in F. Duets—Gade's Sonata, Op. 21; Godard's Serenade and Abandon, Grieg's Sonata, Op. 13; Mendelssohn and Moscheles' Duet (two pianos), Rubinstein's Sonata in G, and Rubinstein's Sonata in D.

TAUNTON.—Macfarren's Devil's Opera was performed on the fiftieth anniversary of the production (on Monday, August 13, 1838, at the English Opera House, Lyceum), by the Philharmonic Association, under the direction of Mr. T. J. Dudeney, at the Taunton College of Music. The music of this light and melodramatic work is more or less out of date, but the performance was very successful—particularly as to the overture, the duet between the disguised page and the confidante in the second act, and the trio for female voices, which indeed always has been a favourite. It is curious to read the criticisms of the Devil's Opera, written half a century since. The ridiculous libretto, which was from the pen of the composer's father, was of course then condemned, and indeed the spectacle of Satan attempting the disenchantment of a Venetian noble, whisking him up a chimney to escape from the power of the Council of Ten, and dancing the sober-minded confidante round the stage until she was eventually carried off in a luggage box, must have been exceedingly funny. The leading parts were, in 1838, filled by Mr. and Mrs. Seguin, Misses Rainforth and Poole, Mr. Burnett, and Mr. Fraser.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—At the re-opening of the organ of Emmanuel Church, on Tuesday, July 31, Morning and Evening Choral Services were given, and in the afternoon there was an Organ Recital, by Mr. E. M. Vinnicombe, Organist of St. Leonard's Church and of the Victoria Hall, Exeter (late Assistant Organist of Exeter Cathedral). Selections from Handel, Mendelssohn, Batiste, Wesley, Salomé, and Chipp formed the programme. After the Evening Service, Mr. W. H. Palmer, Organist of the Church, also performed pieces by Bach, Rinck, Mozart, and Bache.

WIMBORNE.—The anniversary of the opening of the church of St. John's was celebrated on the 16th ult. by a special service. Mr. Eaton, the Organist, conducted the musical portion of the service, his choir being increased in number by several amateur voices. Chants by Savage, Goss, and Bunnett were used; also the Anthem "If ye love Me." The service having been concluded, the Organist gave a Recital, the following Selection of music being performed:—Grand Offertoire in D (Batiste), "Silver Trumpets" March (Vivian), "Schiller" March (Meyerbeer), Pastoral in G (Longhurst), "Wedding March" (Mendelssohn). Batiste's Andante in A was played before the service.

WREXHAM.—Mr. Joseph Cantor, of Liverpool, who has been specially engaged as accompanist for the forthcoming Eisteddfod at Wrexham, has also been commissioned by the committee to supply an orchestra of forty for the performances of Elijah and Messiah on the 5th and 7th inst. respectively. Mr. Cantor has succeeded in forming a most admirable band, comprising many of the best known players of Manchester, together with several leading Liverpool performers.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. George Wilby, Organist and Choirmaster to Lisburn Cathedral.—Mr. Charles Davies, Organist and Choirmaster to Alloway Parish Church, Ayr, N.B.—Mr. Arthur Wm. White, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Paul's, Bermondsey.—Mr. John H. E. Ashworth, A.C.O., Organist and Choirmaster to St. Michael's and All Angels', Beckenham.—Mr. J. J. Lishman, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Ongar.—Mr. Henry A. Evans, Organist and Choirmaster to Eccleston Square Church.—Mr. Edward J. Spark, Organist and Choirmaster to Holy Trinity Church, Worcester.—Mr. Edward E. Douglas-Smith, A.C.O., Organist and Choirmaster to St. John's Church, Kilburn, N.W.

CHOIR APPOINTMENT.—Mr. J. Crouch (Alto), to Chichester Cathedral.

Professor of Harmony and Composition at the Royal Academy of Music.

PUBLISHED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

ELEMENTS OF MUSIC.

Crown 8vo, 1s.

"In the space of some fifty pages the reader will find all that is necessary to be known about the pitch of notes, intervals, and scales, rests, time, and abbreviations, and will, we doubt not, also find how much more there is of which he was ignorant concerning these subjects, although he had already flattered himself that he had mastered their elements a long time ago."—Saturday Review.

ELEMENTS OF HARMONY AND COUNTERPOINT.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"This work is intended to meet a growing demand for a more concise and simpler exposition of the Day theory. It includes as much of the science of Counterpoint as is necessary for students who enter for the Royal Academy, Local, and other similar examinations."

THE

AN ORATORIO COMPOSED BY

GEO. SHINN, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.

(SUITABLE FOR CONCERT ROOM OR CHURCH.)

Price 2s. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

During the few months the Work has been published it has been taken up at the following places: St. Margaret's, Westminster (Canon Farrar's); Christ Church, Lambeth (Rev. Newman Hall's); St. Luke's, Bermondsey; East Dulwich; Peckham; Camberwell (two performances); Islington; Walworth (three performances); Brixton; Streatham (two performances); Southwark; Liverpool; Brighton; Leeds; Hastings; Luton; Whitby; Bilston; Coleford; Bradley; Halton; Maldon; Chesterfield.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the author of several Cantatas and other compositions, all of which are written in a style at once musicianly and popular. 'The Captives of Babylon' may be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas. The work contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the writer of many popular pieces for choral societies; but this is certainly the best thing he has produced."—Nonconformist Musical Journal.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"It is cleverly written, and in an attractive style. The music is of a varied and pleasing character, so that it is likely to become very popular."—The Portsmouth Evening Mail.

"Mr. Shinn is well known, and deservedly so for his musical talent. Continuity of design and freshness of conception are apparent throughout the work. It contains many effective solos and choruses, and the music is not difficult. There is no doubt that the Oratorio will become very popular."—South London Press.

EIGHT

REV. S. CHILDS CLARKE

MUSIC BY

DR. DYKES, DEAN ALFORD, MR. LANGRAN,
 and the Editor, MR. A. H. BROWN.

Price 2d.; Words only, 1s. per 100.

"The hymns, which include a fine Processional, are excellently written, and as suitably set; and, if music is ever to win its way, will assuredly become great favourites at harvest festivals. They vary considerably in metre; but gladness and thanksgiving are the twin keynotes of all."—Western Morning News.

"A very excellent set of hymns, and most suitable for country parishes."—Church Times.

"The tunes are much in the current vein of thought, pleasant, tuneful, and having a part-song flavour. Nos. 1 and 3, by the Editor, are fresh and effective, and No. 5, by the same composer, is elegant in its melody and smooth in its harmony. No. 6, by that man of many accomplishments, Dean Alford, has a not unpleasant flavour of mixed antique and modern thought. Mr. Langran's (No. 4), a plain note against note tune, will be found to sing well. Dr. Dykes's (No. 2) is elegant and melodious, and set in the quasi-ecclesiastical measure, six-four, a time borrowed by the Church from an early period of modern dramatic music. The tunes will not fail to please modern choirs."—Musical Standard.

"We would specially draw attention to the unusually good common metre tune 'St. Angelus,' No. 5, which might well pass for a composition of 250 years ago."—Church Herald.

NARCISSUS

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

SAMUEL BUTLER

(Author of "Erewhon," &c.), Op. 2 (Mus.), and

HENRY FESTING JONES,

Op. 4.

Characters: Amarylhis (Soprano), Narcissus (Tenor), Messenger (Alto or Baritone), Chorus (S.A.T.B.)

ARGUMENT.

PART I.—Narcissus, a simple shepherd, and Amarylhis, a prudent shepherdess, with companions, who form the Chorus, have abandoned pastoral pursuits and embarked in a course of speculation upon the Stock Exchange. This results in the loss of the hundred pounds upon which Narcissus and Amarylhis had intended to marry. Their engagement is broken off, and the condolences of the Chorus end Part I.

PART II.—In the interval between the parts the aunt and godmother of Narcissus has died at an advanced age, and is discovered to have been worth one hundred thousand pounds, all of which she has bequeathed to her nephew and godson. This removes the obstacle to his union with Amarylhis; but the question arises in what securities the money is to be invested. At first he is inclined to resume his speculations and to buy Egyptian bonds, American railways, mines, &c.; but yielding to the advice of Amarylhis he resolves to place the whole of it in the Three per cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, to marry at once, and to live comfortably upon the income. With the congratulations and approbation of the Chorus the work is brought to a conclusion.

Orchestral Parts can be hired.

Vocal Score, with Accompaniment for the Pianoforte, price 5s. net.

RUTH

WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Ruth" is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"Ruth" has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

THE VILLAGE QUEEN

A PASTORAL CANTATA FOR TREBLE VOICES

WRITTEN BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

COMPOSED BY

CHARLES VINCENT,

Mus. Doc., Oxon.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

"Dr. Vincent has arranged his music so as to fully satisfy the dramatic needs. There are airs, duets, choruses with instrumental festal music, all of the brightest and most attractive patterns. The whole of the music is of the most interesting character, and some of it, as, for example, the opening choruses 'Awake, awake,' 'Behold the day,' the Finale 'For long shall we remember,' the duet 'Yes! sleep no more,' the songs 'Let the merry fies,' 'O nightingale,' and so forth, are far above the dead level of conventional interpretation which the character of the words would seem to inspire. Altogether the Cantata is well worthy of the notice of those who are in search of novel and pleasing things of its kind."—Musical Times.

"The music is in Dr. Vincent's bright and genial style, wholly free from pretension and affectation, just original enough to avoid being commonplace, easy to sing, always fresh, and sometimes even sparkling. There are evidences of sound, serious musicianship underlying the light and merry exterior, so the Cantata claims the right of popularity on more than the score of mere tunefulness, of which important quality it can nevertheless boast its full share. For a ladies' school concert or a choir of ladies it can be warmly recommended."—Musical Standard.

"It is the simple story of the crowning of a May Queen, and the music is as simple as the story. It is one of a series of Cantatas for female voices, published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. (London). If all the rest of the series are as melodious as Dr. Vincent's contribution, they will need no other recommendation. The movements in 'The Village Queen,' while they are thoroughly English in the character of their themes, have a variety of treatment which is sufficient to sustain the interest of the listener to the very last bar of the work."—Manchester Guardian.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

In preparing a New Edition for Concert use of Handel's "Saul," it is needless to say that considerable omissions had to be made in order to bring the work within a reasonable length. These have been, for the most part, those that were sanctioned by usage; but, in addition, two not very interesting songs ("Birth and fortune I despise" and "Your words, O king") have been cut out, while the symphony preceding the recitative, "The time at length is come," has been restored as a probably unique specimen of Handel's treatment of the full orchestra.

Musicians will be aware that the score of "Saul" is one of the fullest and richest of all Handel's works. The Editor has attempted, as far as possible, to preserve the original colouring. With this view the composer's trombone parts, curiously written in some places, have been retained exactly. The same is the case with the trumpets, excepting that a few passages have been modified, where Handel had written them impracticably high for modern players. But in no case has the Editor added one note for trumpets or trombones where the composer had not employed them.

The score of "Saul," alone among Handel's oratorios, contains full directions for the treatment of the organ, though the part is seldom written out. The Editor has endeavoured, as far as possible, to carry out these directions in filling up the part. In some cases, as in the symphony preceding the chorus, "Welcome, welcome, mighty king," the effect will be found peculiar; but for this, Handel, not the Editor, is responsible, as the indications here are most minute. In a few passages, in which there is an obligato part for the organ—e.g., in the chorus, "Mourn, Israel, mourn"—an arrangement for other instruments is given in small notes, which is intended for use if the oratorio is given in places where there is no organ.

The recitatives should be accompanied by the organ or pianoforte; but, at the desire of the publishers, an arrangement of the accompaniment for strings has also been given. In one instance only has the Editor allowed himself an alteration in the colouring. The recitative sung by the Ghost of Samuel is in this edition accompanied by the low notes of clarinets and bassoons. Purists may possibly object to this; but the Editor would urge, in extenuation, though not in justification, that he has merely carried a little further Handel's own idea of individualizing the spectre by the use of wind instruments. The bassoon parts, at the commencement of this scene, as well as the wind parts in the air "Infernal spirits," are Handel's own.

In this score all the original parts are indicated by "H" and all the additions by "P." In cases where something has been added to Handel's parts, both letters are prefixed. It has not been thought needful to do this with the trumpet parts, the alterations being confined to a very few notes. Here Handel's own passages have been retained, even though difficult, whenever at all practicable.

May this edition help to restore to its proper place in public esteem one of the finest of Handel's many neglected oratorios!

CHORAL SOCIETY.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL AND DRAMATIC CANTATA

WORDS BY

FREDERICK ENOCH

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"In abstract musical merit we are inclined to regard it as an advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and one of them, 'On to the battle, on,' is exceedingly spirited. An 'Ave Maria,' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."—Athenæum.

"As in his other works, particularly 'The Holy City,' the composer writes admirably for the solo voices, and equally well for the chorus. . . . The fact must strongly be insisted upon that 'Joan of Arc' is a work which is bound to be widely taken up by provincial societies, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful, and will probably be considered the gem of the work."—London Figaro.

"Joan of Arc" was last night produced for the first time in the metropolis by Mr. McNaught and the admirable choir of the Bow and Bromley Institute. . . . Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of provincial and other choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."—Daily News.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."—Referee.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer. From beginning to end 'Joan of Arc' is marked by perfect and natural melody, a smoothness that is really delightful, and instrumentation that indicates the touch of a masterhand."—Liverpool Courier.

"The music from beginning to end is of the highest order, both in form, construction, dramatic expression, and religious colouring. Particularly beautiful is the great wealth of melody, which carries with it the impression that it is the outcome of the inspiration and genius of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.' . . . 'Joan of Arc' is one of the most melodious, refined, and expressive works that has come under our notice."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it, nor any number which can be accused of impairing the dignity of a composition having a lofty aim."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The choruses are always effectively written—the solos are extremely melodious; deserves, and will probably achieve, great popularity."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Journal.

"There is a reality about the whole tone of the work that seems to bring every scene in the life of the French heroine vividly before us."—Border Counties Herald.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."—Birmingham Daily Times.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. The music displays more skillful workmanship than any music we have received from the same hands. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Now with matured experience and ripened scholarship he gives to the town which has received and welcomed his first triumphs his magnum opus, 'Joan of Arc.'"—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"The Cantata, from the first bar to the last, is in melody, beautiful harmonic combinations, and clever orchestration. The beautiful 'Ave Maria' is a splendid example of pure and fervent church music, but there are so many exquisite points of merit in Mr. Gaul's latest work that they hardly need detailing. Taking the work as a whole, it bids fair to become a great favourite with all choral societies."—Birmingham Weekly Post.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."—Manchester Guardian.

Price, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; ditto, boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100. (Ent. Sta. Hall.)

The gratuitous loan of Instrumental Parts may be had on application to the Composer and full liberty is given to perform this Cantata and to insert the words in any programme without further permission.

No. I.—THIRTY SONGS

BY

ROBERT FRANZ.

On the hidden wood-path,
Sunset.
Not a star.
Sunset.
Breathlessly the Lake reposes.
In the forest, moonbeambrightened.
The Swiss Soldier's complaint.
Rest on me, thou eye of darkness.
At night I see thee with dreaming eyes.
Dreams.
The rose and the lily.
On the sea.
Gently through my bosom flow.
Omnipresence.
Thou art far.

A lifetime wasted.
Lo! he has come.
Autumn sorrow.
Will she come to-day?
Love in May.
Yea, thou art blighted.
The last tear.
Love song.
When my despair is deepest.
Sweetest maid, with lips like roses.
Thinking of thee.
The rose has made sad moan to me.
In Rhine's broad rolling waters.
Forgotten.
Good Night.

No. II.—TWENTY SONGS

BY

FRANZ LISZT.

Mignon's song—"Knowest thou the land?"
The King of Thule.
Peace.
Clara's song.
Who never ate with tears his bread?
Wanderer's night song.
The fisherboy.
The Alpine hunter.
Once and now.

Prayer.
The Loreley.
A flower thou resemblest.
Love's marvel.
The violet.
Flower and scent.
I cherish thee.
The three gipsies.
Question and answer.
Once again I fain would meet thee.
How sweetly sings the lark.

No. III.—TWENTY-FIVE SONGS

BY

ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

The dewdrops shine.
Like to a lark.
The wood-witch.
Aubade.
Loss.
A message.
Spring song.
In the forest all is growing.
A flower thou resemblest.
The Asra.
Sun and love.
The rose.
Love's presence.

Bend, fairest blossom.
Ah! could it remain thus for ever.
The golden sun is shining.
Be not so coy.
In the forest.
Night.
To Spring.
From a Spanish song book.
Clara's song.
A tragedy.
Morning song.
Budding stands the queen.

No. IV.—TWENTY-SEVEN SONGS

BY

JOHANNES BRAHMS.

A Troth.
Love and Spring (1).
Love and Spring (2).
Far over the field.
Amongst strangers.
West-wind blowing.
Spring.
My loved one has left me.
The reason why.
A Symbol.
Nightingales.
Faithful love.
Alone she stood by the window.
A Memory.

The swallow's flying West.
Alone.
Return.
The wounded youth.
Could I but once forget.
So secretly.
Serenade.
Longing.
The Kiss.
At Parting.
Parted.
The Smith.
To an Æolian.

TWENTY SONGS.

Wandering—To wander is the miller's joy.
Whither?—I heard a brooklet.
Halt—I can see a mill.
Gratitude to the brook—Was it all by design?
Evening Rest—With a thousand arms.
The Question—I question not a flower.
Impatience—These words I fain would carve.
Morning Greeting—Good morning to thee.
The Miller's Flowers—There
cluster flow'rets.
A rain of Tears—We lovingly sat together.

Mine—Brooklet, stop that rush of thine.
A Pause—Silent hangs my lute.
With the Green Ribbon—Why is the pretty ribbon made?
The Hunter—What seeks, then,
the hunter.
Jealousy and Pride—O whither art thou.
The pleasing Colour—Of green I will possess me.
The hateful Colour—I wish I could in the world go forth.
Faded Flowers—Ye flow'rets all.
The Miller and the Brook—When a faithful heart.
The Brook's lullaby—Sweet repose.

MUSIC PRIMERS

SIR JOHN STAINER.

IN issuing this series of Music Primers the Editor sees with pleasure the realisation of a desire he has long felt, to place in the hands of teachers and students of music a set of educational works of a high standard at a price so low as to render them attainable by all.

The growing interest in music generally, and rapid spread of its study, so very evident in this country, render it of the utmost importance that the student's first steps in every branch should be directed with skill and based on sound principles. The Editor has kept this object steadily in view, and he believes that each one of these Primers will prove to be as carefully constructed in detail as it is comprehensive in design.

Such a result would have been impossible but for the hearty support and sympathy of those authors, men of known ability in their special branches of art, who have embodied the results of their long and valuable experience in their respective contributions.

While gratefully acknowledging the kindness of these gentlemen, the Editor cannot but express a hope that the Primers may prove as useful to the public, and as beneficial to art, as both authors and publishers have endeavoured to make them.

THE ORGAN WORKS

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

EDITED BY

J. F. BRIDGE, AND JAMES HIGGS,

Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Mus. Bac., Oxon.

BOOK I.—EIGHT SHORT PRELUDES AND FUGUES 2s. 6d.

In this edition much help is offered towards a correct and effective rendering of Bach's Organ Music. The distribution of the parts between the two hands is clearly shown. The notes must conveniently played by the right hand are printed on the upper, and those best taken by the left hand on the lower, of the two manual staves. The pedalling is indicated where necessary. Marks of expression and phrasing are added occasionally, and suggestions for the effective use of the organ are given throughout. The Preface contains many useful hints.

BOOK II.—PRELUDES, FUGUES, AND TRIO 3s. 6d.

The second book of the new edition of Bach's Organ Works is more advanced in point of difficulty than the first, and will be found of conspicuous interest. It includes the well-known "Giant" in D minor, the shorter Prelude and Fugue in E minor (a great favourite with Mendelssohn), and an exceedingly effective Prelude and Fugue in C minor, in addition to other less-known but important works. It is a specialty of this edition that a convenient and effective mode of performance is everywhere indicated. Appended to the preface is a suggested metronomic rate for each movement.

BOOK III.—PRELUDES, FUGUES, AND FANTASIA 3s. 6d.

The third book contains compositions of greater difficulty, it is therefore more fully fingered and marked for the pedals. It is believed Organ Students will derive the greatest possible assistance by having their attention directed from the outset to a convenient method of dealing with each difficulty as it arises. The present book includes the Fugue in B minor, on a subject from Corelli, a beautiful Prelude and Fugue in A major (most useful for obtaining command of the higher part of the Pedal-board), a Prelude and Fugue in C major, a Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, and the well-known short G minor Fugue. There is, as usual, in this Edition a Preface containing interesting particulars of the several works.

BOOK IV.—SONATAS FOR TWO MANUALS AND PEDAL 3s. 6d.

The fourth book contains the first three of the six celebrated Sonatas or Trios for two manuals and pedal. Spitta says: "These Sonatas were intended by J. S. Bach to complete the education of his eldest son, Wilhelm Friedemann, as an organist." They are invaluable as studies and very beautiful as music. In the present edition they are for the first time fingered and marked for the Pedals.

BOOK V.—SONATAS FOR TWO MANUALS AND PEDAL 3s. 6d.

The fifth book contains the last three of the six Sonatas. Those in E minor, C major, and G major. They are of exceeding value to the Student of Organ Playing. The mastery of them assuring him of that thorough independence of hands and feet so indispensable to the fully accomplished organist. As in the former book, proper fingering and pedalling is everywhere indicated. The Preface contains a detailed analysis of each movement.

BOOK VI.—PRELUDES AND FUGUES 3s. 6d.

The sixth book includes several of Bach's greatest and most popular Organ Works. (1) The Toccata in D minor, with its contrasting effects of recitative-like passages and massive harmonies. (2) The well-known Prelude and Fugue in D major, which Spitta describes as "one of the most dazzlingly beautiful of all the master's Organ Works. . . Skilful pedal-players will find it exactly suited to them, for the theme is quite exceptionally fitted for pedal technique." (3) The Prelude and Fugue in F minor, less known perhaps than the other contents of the book, but scarcely less beautiful, or less worthy of the student's attention. (4) The great Prelude in E flat major, together with the Fugue in three sections, known as the St. Ann's. The whole are laid out with especial regard to the convenience of the player. Necessary fingering and other marks to help to effective performance are inserted, and the Preface contains various notes and suggestions relative to the history, structure, and treatment of the several works.

BOOK VII.—PRELUDES AND FUGUES 3s. 6d.

The seventh part of Bach's Organ Works contains:—Prelude and Fugue, A minor; Prelude and Fugue, B minor; Prelude and Fugue, C minor; Prelude and Fugue, C major; and Prelude and Fugue, G major.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S "PRACTICAL PIANOFORTE SCHOOL."

SECTION I.—Elementary.

„ II.—Easy.

SECTION III.—Moderately Difficult.

„ IV.—Difficult.

SECTION V.—Very Difficult.

FORSYTH BROTHERS beg to announce that in compliance with the request of many eminent teachers, both in England and the Continent, they have issued an edition of this celebrated work with GERMAN or CONTINENTAL FINGERING.

PREFACE.

A few remarks will suffice to explain the object of this Publication and its distinguishing features.

"THE PRACTICAL PIANOFORTE SCHOOL" will consist of a series of Pieces selected from the best Composers, and calculated to guide Students, by gradual steps, from the very beginning to the highest degree of execution, and at the same time to form their taste and style.

The Work will be divided into five sections—namely, ELEMENTARY, EASY, MODERATELY DIFFICULT, DIFFICULT, and VERY DIFFICULT.* Commencing with the rudiments of Musical Notation, the Pieces will succeed each other in such progressive order that Students, after having mastered one number, may safely proceed to the next, thus sparing both teacher and pupil the difficult task of selection.

Each Piece will be prefaced by a certain number of Exercises written expressly by me for this Publication, and having some bearing upon the difficulties of the Composition which they introduce. The daily practice of these Exercises should always precede that of the Piece, until both are completely mastered.

Long experience has convinced me that the usual mode of fingering is insufficient to guard Pupils from the danger of contracting bad habits, as they cannot always be under the eye of the Master, and yet require a constant guide in this more than in any other matter. Every note therefore will be fingered, except that in the case of reiterated chords the fingering will be marked only once, and Octaves will not be fingered when they are to be played with the thumb and fourth finger.

All Turns, Shakes, Appoggiaturas, and other ornaments will be clearly explained in foot-notes, whenever their proper execution may be doubtful; and in the more advanced Pieces there will be found, in brackets, supplementary signs of expression, where they may appear to me to facilitate the correct rendering of the Composer's intention. These I give on my own responsibility, and as my interpretation of the masterpieces which I have made my study for many years.

Two Metronome marks will be prefixed to every Piece and Exercise;—the first indicating the time beyond which Students ought not to venture before they can play both Piece and Exercise without fault; and the second giving the correct time.

The utmost endeavours will be used to keep the entire Work free from errors, and the greatest care bestowed upon its publication, which the long and intimate relations I have had with Messrs. FORSYTH BROTHERS have led me to entrust to them.

A long experience as a Teacher and Performer, and a thorough acquaintance with the whole range of Pianoforte Music, encourage me in the hope that this "Practical Pianoforte School" may prove what I wish it to be—a safe guide towards a sound Musical Education.

CHARLES HALLÉ.

* The title "Very Difficult" is not meant to convey the idea that this Section will provide Pieces of the extreme difficulty suited to exceptional cases only (this being beyond the scope of a "School"); it is by taxing in a high degree the general Students' intellectual faculties, as well as their mechanical powers, that the works included will be found "very difficult" to play well.

"I have inspected the Upright Pianofortes of Messrs. CHALLEN & SON, and have much pleasure in giving my unqualified approval of them.

"I consider that, for purity of tone, touch, and good workmanship, they will favourably compete with Upright Pianos made by any other English firm, and superior to most of those of foreign manufacture. Their cheapness should also bring them within the reach of everyone.

THE GROSVENOR SERIES OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC

FOR THE USE OF ACADEMIES, SCHOOLS, AND COLLEGES.

Each net—Series A, Easy, 1s. Series B, More advanced, 2s. Series C, Moderately difficult, 2s. Series D (in the Press).

PRESS OPINIONS.

MORNING POST.—"Among the many important works issued by Messrs. Hopkinson, of 95, New Bond Street, is an excellent set of educational pieces, entitled 'The Grosvenor Series,' the object of which is to provide academies, schools, and colleges with classical pianoforte music, arranged in well defined degrees of difficulty at a moderate cost. The system thus introduced marks a distinct advance in musical tuition, as it places in the hands of teachers material that cannot fail to exercise a beneficial effect upon the taste of pupils. It is of the highest importance that a beginner's earliest impressions should be guarded against the influence of commonplace music, and in 'The Grosvenor Series' professors will find an interesting selection of high-class compositions, adapted for elementary and advanced classes, carefully arranged and fingered. Among the composers whose works have been brought into requisition are Beethoven, Reinecke, Tausig, H. Stuehl, M. E. Sachs, G. Merkel, A. Kausch, Ignaz Brüll, and others."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"The Grosvenor Series is another sign of the times, going to show, in conjunction with much other of the like sort, to what an extent musical taste has improved in England's homes. The Series is well adapted for the use of students. The music is well fingered."

STANDARD.—"THE GROSVENOR SERIES OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC," for the use of Schools and Colleges. This is one of the very best series for teaching purposes that we have yet seen. There are, in fact, four series of different degrees of difficulty. Series A consists of easy pieces, series B of more advanced music, while series C is moderately difficult. None of series D has yet been issued, but it will be a stage more difficult than C. In every case the music is from the best classical composers, including Beethoven, Reinecke, Woffart, Stuehl, and Merkel. In the A series, No. 9, 'Scherzo,' by Kruse, and 'Intermezzo,' by Reinecke, are two charming little fragments in which, though the arrangement is exceedingly simple, the effect is wonderfully good. In the B series, No. 3, 'Chasing the Butterflies,' and an 'Autumn Evening Song,' by Heinrich Stuehl, are good specimens of descriptive music. In series C, No. 2, 'Wieg-nied,' and No. 4, 'Frühlingsschlag,' by Gustav Merkel, are both exquisite pieces which even advanced pupils will find instructive. The whole series seems to aim at a most praiseworthy object—namely, that of putting really first-class music by first-class composers into the hands of young pupils, and so taking them from the first to what is really excellent and worth learning in the world of music."

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—"The Grosvenor Series of Classical Pianoforte Music" continues to maintain its interest by furnishing a varied selection of pieces, by composers of the past and the present, well engraved and printed, and at cheap prices."

"The other soloist was Mr. Hewson, a splendid baritone singer, who made his début before a Huddersfield audience. He used his fine voice with telling effect, and interpreted his songs like a thorough artist. He gave grandly declaimed renderings of 'The Desert,' and 'The Night Watch'—and being encored for the latter, he sang with much power and expression a patriotic composition by Hawkins entitled 'The Naval Brigade.' Again, on his third appearance, he was heartily recalled for a very clever and accomplished rendering of 'Mad Tom,' composed by Purcell about 1620, and he again kindly responded by singing 'Only to Love,' by Santley. Mr. Hewson made a very favourable impression, and another visit from him at an early date will be welcomed by many of those who had the pleasure of hearing his performance."—Huddersfield Chronicle, March 3, 1888.
